Mr. ORTH. I am referring to the gentleman from New York; in a moment I will refer to the gentleman from Maryland. He [Mr. HEWITT] states here to-day in a carefully prepared speech, in answer to my remarks made thirty-odd days ago, that I had then refused him the privilege of reply. I repeat now that the RECORD of the 31st January last does not sustain the gentleman from New York in his assertion. On the contrary, I folded my arms and paused for a reply. The gentleman from New York volunteered a reply, and here it is, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. On what principle was the war of 1812 fought? Was it not on the doctrine that this Government would not permit an American citizen to be taken from under the protection of the American flag and carried on board a British ship?

Mr. ORTH. Let me ask the gentleman from New York what principle was settled by the war of 1812 in regard to citizenship?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The question I put to the gentleman was whether the war of 1812 was not fought on the doctrine that the American Government would not permit a naturalized American citizen to be taken from under the protection of the American flag by any British vessel of war?

Mr. ORTH. While engaged in the war of 1812 we denied the right which the British claimed to search our vessels, but the war was concluded without that question being settled or the right of search being yielded by Great Britain.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that nothing was settled by the war of 1812?

Mr. ORTH. I have said that the principle for which we contended was not settled; that is, the right of search was not yielded by the British Government.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No American citizen, native or naturalized, sir, from that hour to this has been taken from under the protection of the American flag and carried on board of any British vessel of war. And that war of 1812 was undertaken and carried to a successful conclusion by a Democratic administration.

Mr. ORTH. I will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] and the members of this House when Great Britain surrendered the doctrine of perpetual allegiance, and as a sequence the "right of search" which she held over her subjects. It was, sir, in 1870, and by virtue of this very treaty, negotiated by a Republican administration, and which to-day is the law of the land.

Mr. ORTH. So much for the charge just made that in my former remarks I refused to yield to the gentleman from New York for reply. If he failed in making satisfactory reply to the challenge I then offered it is his fault and not mine. And it comes with an ill grace, after thirty days have elapsed, for him to come here and complain of it.

In regard to my not yielding to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE,] the RECORD shows that when he asked me to yield I had but two minutes of my time left. The RECORD further shows I offered if the gentleman from Maryland could put his hand on a single statute enacted by the Democratic party for the protection of the foreign-born citizen I would publish it concurrently with my speech. I have waited thirty-odd days and have not yet received such law, or any reference to it, from the gentleman from Maryland.

So much for the charge that I declined to be interrupted after I had asked this Democratic side of the House whether they could point me to a single law on the statute-book enacted by the Democratic party for the protection of the naturalized citizen abroad. I have but a few minutes of my time remaining.

Mr. McLANE. Have you not an hour?

Mr. ORTH. No; but I will say this: short as my time is, I will yield a minute or two, long enough for gentlemen to send into the Library for the statute, if they can produce any, ever passed in favor of protecting the naturalized citizen in foreign lands. Not by inference, sir; I want the statute.

Mr. McLANE. I do not mean to be under any obligation to the gentleman from Indiana for time, because I intend to go on in my own time.

Mr. ORTH. The gentleman from Maryland has not charged me with a refusal to yield, except as I have stated. Now, then, I made the charge thirty-odd days ago, and I submit to this House that up to this hour, after all the long preparation and elaboration the gentleman from New York has given to the subject, he has not answered, directly or indirectly, the charge I then made, and which I renew here on the floor to-day, that the Democratic party obtained and retained power of this Government for thirty years by the aid of the vote of the naturalized foreigner; and up to this hour it has never placed upon the statute-book any law for the protection of his rights. I do not wish to be answered by inference.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The Democratic party rendered the foreign-born citizen more substantial aid.

Mr. ORTH. I will yield to my colleague if he will tell me what way——

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. It saved the foreign-born citizen from persecution under the Know-nothing party.

Mr. ORTH. Oh, yes; we know something about that.

Mr. Chairman, the position I then took has not been answered up to this moment. The gentleman from New York, on the 30th of January, and again to-day, attempted to draw an inference that the Democratic party had fought the war of 1812, and that from that day Great Britain yielded up the right of search. That is a mere inference, and an inference that is not justified by the facts of the case.

You know, Mr. Chairman, and the gentleman from New York knows, that we went to war with Great Britain because of her insolent demand of the right of search of our vessels. We all know that we fought that war to the close; and we all know that at such close nothing was settled in reference to Great Britain's claim to this very question of the right of search.

Mr. ROSECRANS. But the right of American citizenship was practically settled by it.

Mr. ORTH. Ah, my friend from California says, the rights of American citizens were practically settled by it. Does not the gentleman from California know that a "practical right" is worth very little unless it be placed upon the statute-book and guaranteed by all the power of the Government?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ORTH. The gentleman from Iowa, I understand, has not restricted me to the few moments I have occupied.

Mr. KASSON. I will yield to the gentleman for a few moments longer.

Mr. ORTH. Now the gentleman from New York says that in the Forty-third Congress, when I happened to be a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, no legislation was had with regard to the protection of our naturalized citizens. I do not conceive any other answer to be necessary to such a statement than this: the gentleman from New York himself, if I recollect aright, was a member of that committee in the next Congress. Does the gentleman from New York now claim, or is he able to point his finger to a single instance where that committee took any steps while he was a member thereof to protect the Irish, or German, or any naturalized citizens? I pause for a reply.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. We secured the release of Condon.

Mr. ORTH. Well, mark one, then; you secured the release of one man.

Mr. COX, of New York. There were several others at the same time.

Mr. ORTH. You secured the release of one man. Well, we will give you credit for that; and I think, Mr. Chairman, in all fairness, that that is a pretty even set-off against the charge which the gentleman from New York makes upon me of inaction in the Forty-third Congress. I think, sir, the record of that Congress will show that the Republican party relieved several gentlemen of similar trouble, where, according to his own statement, the gentleman from New York succeeded in getting but one.

Now, the gentleman approves very much of these results of Republican administration of the Government. The acts of Congress which he has read, sections 2000 and 2001 of the Statutes, and the treaty to which he refers, all of these the gentleman from New York heartily approves and commends.

Why, Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time that the gentleman and his political associates approved of what the Republican party had done for this Government. I was here, sir, as a member of this body when there were Democratic members on this floor opposing bitterly day after day the efforts of the Republican party to adopt the thirteenth constitutional amendment, which gave freedom to four millions of human beings. But that was passed, and finally placed in the Constitution. Freedom was guaranteed to all of the citizens of this country, and ever since it became the law of the land he and his associates on that side of the House approve of our action in the premises and on all proper occasions speak in its praise.

I recollect being upon this floor when the Republican party, with the aid of a few Democrats, contended that this Union should not be dissolved; that we would stand by the soldier in the field; that we would feed, clothe, and equip him and place the instruments in his hands with which to put down the rebellion. But we got no aid, with few exceptions, from the gentleman's political associates.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Government got no aid in putting down the rebellion from the Democratic party?

Mr. ORTH. Oh, no! I say that the Government got no special aid, with few exceptions, from the Democrats of that Congress. I know what I am talking about, and I know that there was little aid from the Democrats in that Congress extended to the Government. I do not speak of the war Democrats who stood by the Government. Mr.

Chairman, we had Democrats in my own State who held meetings and passed resolutions denouncing the war and declaring in favor of a division of the Government. But ever since the rebellion was put down they have been loud in their praise of what has been done by the Republican party to save the Union.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Will the gentleman permit me now to ask him a question?

Mr. ORTH. Oh, yes; as the gentleman has risen and addressed the Chair.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Does the gentleman claim that the Republican party put down the war?

Mr. ORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. That is exactly what I am led to infer from the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. ORTH. No, Mr. Chairman, I make no claim of anything that is not borne out by the history of those times. I claim that there were war Democrats who stood by and aided the Republican party, and my colleague who addresses me was one of the war Democrats who shouldered his musket and entered the service of his country and did his duty in the ranks of the Army.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. ORTH. Certainly.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Does not the gentleman know that in Democratic counties and districts in Indiana—that is, in counties and districts where there were the heaviest Democratic majorities—that a larger number of men went into the service of their country from such counties and districts than from any other part of the State?

Mr. ORTH. I will answer the gentleman's question in Yankee fashion. The gentleman is not unfamiliar with the throes and troubles of Indiana during that period. Now, does he not know that men known as "the Sons of Liberty" in his district and in the districts adjoining organized a conspiracy, a Democratic conspiracy—not a Republican in it—to go and seize the capital of our State, to murder Governor Morton, to release the rebel prisoners at Camp Morton, and to turn over the government of Indiana to rebel sympathizers? Will the gentleman answer me that question?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman, if he wants my opinion as borne out by what the record shows, that the whole matter was instigated by the Republican party, and that the Republican party, through Mr. Morton and through Mr. Dodds, was instrumental in getting up there that whole organization. According to the testimony of Mr. Dodds, the chief conspirator, given in the treason trials which afterward took place, that organization was gotten up by Governor Morton for the purpose of defeating the Democratic party in the election which was to follow soon after.

Mr. ORTH. I am very willing that that answer should go back to Indiana.

Mr. HUBBELL. What was the answer? We did not hear it.

Mr. ORTH. I said I was willing the answer of my colleague should go back to Indiana. The idea of a conspiracy between our loyal Governor Morton and that disloyal reptile Dodd will be news to the people of Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HAZELTON. I move that his time be extended.

Mr. KASSON. In view of the fact that the war has been transferred from Ireland to Indiana, I think I must now claim the floor.

Mr. HAZELTON. The gentleman from Indiana is on his way to Ireland, and will get back there by and by. I move that his time be extended. I want the gentleman to put the iron into their souls still deeper.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. A little over two hours have been spent already in general debate. I desire to know if it is the wish of the House that this general debate is to go on.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire five or ten minutes more, or does he wish to rest now?

Mr. ORTH. I do not desire more time than is necessary to enable me to add a sentence or two.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] does not hear very well, and I suggest that he have leave to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana to-morrow, when he shall have read them in the RECORD.

Mr. ORTH. I wish to say I am not surprised to find——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is out of order; his time has expired.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. But the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] I understood, yielded him five minutes more.

Mr. ROBESON. If the gentleman from Indiana desires more time, and the gentleman from Iowa is willing to give it to him, I will replace the time to the gentleman from Iowa when I take the floor as I am entitled to do.

Mr. ORTH. I am very much obliged, but I do not desire any more time than is necessary to add a sentence or two.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to follow, as far as I may, the wishes of the gentleman who has charge of the bill. If I have the floor I ask the Chair to secure a little order that we may understand what we are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. How long time does the gentleman from Indiana desire?

Mr. ORTH. Probably two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the time of the gentleman from Indiana will be extended for two minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ORTH. I wish merely to add——

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask my colleague a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] yield to his colleague?

Mr. ORTH. I do.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to know what is going on. If my friend from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] does not desire any time, I am ready to proceed.

Mr. ORTH. I have yielded to my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] for a question simply.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague, I am certain, will be very glad to answer the question I shall propound to him, since he has had occasion to refer to the political action of Indiana during the late war in which neither he nor myself personally participated.

Mr. ORTH. I do not yield for a speech. I resume the floor unless my colleague desires to ask me a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question will come in a moment. My friend has been cultivating the virtues of peace for some time.

Mr. ORTH. When my colleague asked me to yield it was for a question, not for a speech. But if my colleague at any time——

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my colleague decline to allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ORTH. You are not asking a question. I decline to yield further.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question I desire to ask the gentleman is this: My colleague talks about his courage in debate; why does he not allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ORTH. I have said nothing about "courage" in debate; but if my colleague will honestly, fairly, and squarely ask me a question, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what I design doing.

Mr. ORTH. But I will not yield to him for a speech.

Mr. HOLMAN. My question is this: Does my colleague propose to assume or has he assumed here in the debates in the House that in the main, so far as the people of Indiana were concerned, it was members of the Republican party alone who rushed to the support of the Government? Or does he not admit and concede cheerfully that as large a number of men from the Democratic ranks went into the Army and adhered to the national flag as did so from the ranks of his own party? And whether among his Democratic colleagues my colleague from the New Albany district and my colleague from the Greencastle district were not foremost in the fight, while my colleague [Mr. ORTH] who speaks so bravely, myself, and others were quietly in the walks of private life?

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the question which my colleague sees fit to propound to me, making the additional remark that he and I can have no controversy on this subject. He and I were here in Congress during the dark times of the war, and stood shoulder to shoulder in all the measures to put down the rebellion. My colleague will not for a moment suppose I had charged that the entire Democratic party of Indiana was disloyal. Not for a moment did I do so. Nor should I have alluded to it but for the question propounded to me by my colleague from the New Albany district. But, sir, the gentleman knows, as does every man who is acquainted with the history of Indiana, that a large portion of that party were disloyal, were engaged in disloyal practices, and if they could would have aided in destroying this Government. [Mr. STOCKSLAGER rose.] I yield no further.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I deny the gentleman's statement most emphatically; and I assert that as many Democrats went into the Army from Indiana as Republicans.

Mr. ORTH. How about the Sons of Liberty? To what party did they belong?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If this profitless discussion cannot end, I will move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing general debate. But if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] desires to proceed now, I will not make that motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House, by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KASSON. It is always gratifying to me and to many, if not to the majority of the members of this House, when a measure comes before us for action which makes us forget that party lines exist and unites us as patriots, loving a common country and seeking its honor and welfare.

I had hoped, sir, that this was one of those occasions, and was prepared, for my own part, to proceed to the consideration of this bill providing for the foreign service of the United States, to consider all its provisions which in any way change the pre-existing condition of the service, and to determine whether such change was for the interest, the honor, and the welfare of the country.

I regret that the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has made use of this occasion to bring up again a subject which will doubtless be presented at other times during this session, and which has already been once considered. The question of arrests in Ireland is totally alien to any subject contained in this bill. In doing it he has revived the complaints of neglect in the care of the interests of some of our citizens, native or naturalized, in Great Britain. I ought, therefore, to say and to remind the House that in due time, when the correspondence is completed, and when according to diplomatic usage that correspondence will be made public, the gentleman from New York will probably be surprised, perhaps as a patriot gratified, to know that while all this noise on the subject has been going on on this floor the Department of the Government charged with the jurisdiction of the subject has been quietly, diligently, and energetically at work to secure the rights under international law belonging to our citizens, and which have been in any way infringed in any foreign country.

It is one of the misfortunes of our executive government that it is obliged often to submit in silence to charges of inaction and neglect because, as is well known, it is improper in the highest degree to bring before the public the current condition of negotiations in their nature delicate, sometimes so delicate that nothing but the mantle of silence enables them to succeed.

I have known cases, I have one in mind at this moment, when by the use of a happy chance by one of our ministers abroad, at a favorable juncture, when all in America was silent, and our demand was partially forgotten in England, one of our naturalized citizens was released from prison and restored to the country of his adoption; and the only right we had to demand his release was as a favor, for he had violated the laws of the land in which he was temporarily domiciled.

I leave this subject with that remark, only assuring the gentleman, as I think I may give assurance to the House, that the subject is far from being neglected in the executive department; and the more noise and the more clamor made on this floor on the subject is an embarrassment to the result which we all seek to accomplish.

Mr. HEWITT. of New York. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. KASSON. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of that subject.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I desire the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. KASSON. For a question, certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I only desire to know if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] understood me as making any charges against the Department? I made none.

Mr. KASSON. I only understood the gentleman to make charges against the Republican party of neglect of its duties in all its branches, executive and legislative.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I dissented from the doctrines of the Lowell letter which I quoted. That is the extent to which I went.

Mr. KASSON. I leave that subject. And now I have a more grateful duty to do, to express my appreciation of the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE.] He entered into the question of what can be done and what should be done to enlarge the influence of the Government of the United States upon both American continents, and what means should be adopted to develop our commercial interests and our honor and dignity on this continent. I was enlightened by what he said, and if there were time I would most gladly go into the subject myself.

I must, however, take exception to one of his statements, or rather to one of his assumptions. With a possible desire to see the Republican party under two of its leaders divided and separated, he attempted to draw the line so sharply and so strongly between the policy of the late Secretary of State and of the present Secretary of State that he has, I think, and as he himself will be convinced on reading the correspondence, passed the point of accuracy in defining that difference.

Now, sir, I submit without reading the correspondence, but commending it to the attention of gentlemen on both sides of the House, that it will be found there has been no definitive change of policy; that there has been no change in the mind of the President as to the great objects to be accomplished.

They will also find that the new Secretary of State, coming into office without knowledge of unpublished correspondence which he was at the time engaged in examining, found a critical condition of things which pledged his country to a course of diplomatic action which might be the predecessor of a war. The result of the action of the United States diplomate, then recently dispatched to South America, might have been such as to have made it impossible to escape without at least a warlike demonstration. Is it, then, surprising that the Secretary of State just entering upon his office should say, "Halt! let us look at this thing and its consequences?" Is it surprising that the President should say to the same officer, "Halt! until we understand this fully, and until you have mastered the correspondence, public and secret?" And so the present Secretary of State asked practically for time to consider the step which was taken, the responsibility of which would be turned upon him, and which was of vast importance to the honor of our country and to its material interests.

I venture the statement here, sir, that he has never withdrawn the offer and aid of the United States for a peaceful settlement between Chili and Peru; that he has never desired to withhold its entire legitimate influence for the salvation of Peru, if that salvation be possible. I maintain, sir, he has never essentially changed or withdrawn definitively the proposed assemblage of a conference of the American States for the purpose of devising means to preserve in the future the peace and independence of all these countries.

I ask the House and the country to wait until this correspondence is completed, and then if it be found that a policy which in the main has been approved by the country and by this administration shall have been abandoned, then will come the time for censure. It has not yet come.

I take this exception to the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee in his speech. Beyond that I ought not now to go, sir, by entering into the same questions which he has discussed.

Let me say to him and to the House that when a practical measure comes before us to increase and strengthen our ties, commercial and political, with the South American states beyond the point they have never reached hitherto, you will find, at least on this side of the House, a majority, and in my judgment the executive government also, ready to unite for the accomplishment of such a result, even if it costs some millions of money to inaugurate it.

I stop reluctantly. I confess that my mind has long been full of this subject of extending the commerce and navigation of the United States, and of strengthening our relations southward, and of securing the control of the commerce which by right of proximity belongs to us along the Pacific coasts, with the islands of that great ocean. I have been profoundly interested in those discussions wherever they have occurred. I beg gentlemen to study the questions and prepare for action. I hope to see the whole legislative force of Congress brought to bear to that end. We must be rid of the timid traditions of our past weakness—rid of past prejudices, and ready to vote money to increase the Navy, to promote our commercial enterprises, and to do all things necessary to bring us to the position where the great future demands the United States should stand in their natural domination of the Pacific and of the coasts bordering upon it. I must withhold what I have to say to another occasion, which I hope will be presented by one of the reports to come from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a single word on the provisions of this bill. There are some changes in it on which I shall hardly take the time to call a division of the House, but which I commend to the gentleman in charge of the bill. One of them is inclosed in parenthesis on the fourth page, and converts consuls-general into secretaries of legation. The House, I think, on careful consideration, and the committee itself reporting the bill will, like the Committee on Foreign Affairs, be of the opinion that it is unwise and unsafe to confuse these two branches of the service. It is not merely because of existing diplomatic rules and convenience which would make the change very embarrassing in the transaction of business with nearly every government of Europe, but from the fact that the consul-general's office is usually distant from the legation, and the business of the one is entirely with the commercial interests, while the other is chiefly with the political interests.

The correspondence is great, too great to be conducted in these capitals by one officer. Certainly, at one of these points I know the office of secretary of legation is too important and indispensable to be abolished. At Vienna, were that done, and the consul-general charged with the duties of secretary of legation it would cause the most serious embarrassments. At Vienna the consul-general I happen to know is one of the busiest officers in Europe, often at his consulate after the usual hours of the day, and in a different part of the city. When the minister is away from sickness or other cause the legation would be left unoccupied. It must be locked up, and its archives and secret papers would be exposed to discovery and to loss, there being nobody in charge. Without entering into detail, the practical difficulties are too great to be accommodated by the arrangement proposed, and for the saving of a very small sum of money.

And I may add, while on that subject, (and there is another gentleman here who knows the same difficulties exist at other capitals of Europe,) that at Vienna instead of one secretary of legation being too much, a clerk was employed in addition, at private expense, and paid at the rate of one thousand gulden a year, to help out the work of the legation. There is an immense private correspondence, I should not say private but personal correspondence, going on all the time with persons seeking to emigrate to the United States from different parts of the country, or naturalized citizens wanting information relative to the United States, or their rights; letters never reported to the Department at Washington, and answers to be written by a secretary or clerk who knows the alien language in which they are written. There are large files of these letters. At Vienna, for example, there is necessity for a secretary or clerk who speaks Hungarian as well as German.

Our ministers who are sent abroad, I regret to say, do not generally speak fluently the foreign languages, and this is the case all over Europe. The object of the secretary of legation is to have an officer more permanent than that of minister, who is able from his familiarity with the language of the country, or, if possible, with several of the foreign languages, to conduct the correspondence of the office and make the translations; and, Mr. Chairman, we frequently find letters written by American citizens, not yet long enough in this country to have become familiar with the language, written in the language to which they were accustomed in Europe, in reference to their affairs in the fatherland.

For these and other reasons I think it unwise to attempt to abolish the secretaries of legation. I leave out of consideration altogether the other point which might be mentioned in this connection as to the difficulty and embarrassment in which it places our foreign minister, by lowering the dignity of his position and the grade of our national representation abroad. It is not for so great a nation as ours to model it upon the action of Portugal, or Denmark, or Sweden, or other minor nationalities of Europe.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that Europe to-day, more perhaps than ever before, recognizes, and willingly recognizes, the United States as one of the foremost great powers of the world. Shall we now, by any action of our own, degrade that position and voluntarily surrender it by lowering the rank of our ministers or the status of our legations? Let us rather maintain and advance the dignity which belongs to one of the great powers of the earth. I hope the committee will not destroy the existing and very modest dignity of our legations and diminish their utility.

In connection with this subject I wish to submit a letter addressed to the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, and which I ask permission to offer as a part of my remarks. The letter is from the Secretary of State in answer to a resolution of the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon that subject. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD so that it may be accessible for the information of the House to-morrow.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 20, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 13th instant, communicating a resolution of your committee adopted that day, inquiring of me "whether the proposition made in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill reported at this session, to abolish sundry consular places and secretaries of legation, and to change certain diplomatic representatives of the United States, will, in my opinion, be for the public interest; and how far, if at all, such change may be made without detriment to the national welfare and dignity."

In reply I have the honor to state that the main features of the bill, and especially the changes referred to, were the occasion of conference between the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations and the Department. While I am of the opinion that the position of the United States among nations is such as to warrant and require representation of the higher grades at all the seats of government of the principal friendly powers, yet, in the interest of retrenchment the Department would concur in certain changes in the service. Such changes should, however, in my judgment, be the result of a very careful examination and a thoroughly digested scheme of reorganization to be submitted by this Department to Congress. This examination has been undertaken and is now in progress, so that at the next session of Congress precise recommendations can be made. It would therefore seem premature to introduce the changes proposed by the reported bill.

For this reason I at present advise against the proposition to consolidate several European missions, such as joining the Belgian and Netherlands missions in one, and also uniting the Swedish and Danish missions. So far as present experience goes, the differences of language and of intercourse with the United States make the proposed consolidation undesirable.

I am, however, entirely in favor of adding the Servian mission to the present mission to Roumania. I doubt, however, the expediency of coupling Greece with the other countries named, owing to the difference of language and people, and the distance and inaccessibility of Athens from Bucharest or Belgrade.

I entirely approve the changes in the title of certain missions. The representative rank of a chargé d'affaires (commissioned as such) is somewhat anomalous, and not very consistent with the dignity of a nation like our own. In all cases where it is practicable it would be much better, as proposed, to style the officer a minister resident and consul-general. We have at present three such officers, accredited respectively to Hayti, Bolivia, and Liberia. The following should follow the same style, with the salaries attached by the pending bill, namely:

Bucharest, Roumania, $5,500; Caracas, Venezuela, $5,000, (a reduction from $7,500;) Berne, Switzerland, $5,000; Lisbon, Portugal, $5,000; and also, for uniformity, Copenhagen, Denmark, $5,000, (the salary now paid.) To these should be added Montevideo, Paraguay and Uruguay, $5,000.

The mission to Paraguay and Uruguay is left out of the reported bill, and should be inserted, with the proposed change in the style of the representative. It hardly seems a necessity to sever intercourse with two rich and friendly states of our own continent in the interest of retrenchment, especially at a time when the policy of our Government counsels closer intimacy with the republics of South America. By uniting the principal consular office to the mission, as now suggested, the necessity for a separate consular officer at Montevideo would disappear.

The raising of the rank of the mission at Constantinople to the plenipotentiary grade is very desirable. Both national decorum and official utility require that the United States should occupy a proper place in the foreign representation at the Ottoman capital.

For a like reason I lately, in my letter to your Committee on Foreign Affairs, January 5, recommended that the grade of the resident mission in Central America should be also raised to the plenipotentiary rank, (but without increase of salary,) and I suggest that the bill should be so amended.

In the existing act the consul-general at Constantinople is made to act as secretary of legation also. The reported bill makes the same provision at Vienna, Rome, St. Petersburg, and Copenhagen. I do not regard this change as wise or desirable. It may be necessary to present my objections with somewhat of details.

First, Rome. The consul-general here has the supervision of all the consuls in Italy, twelve in number. To impose upon him diplomatic functions will very seriously endanger inportant consular and commercial interests.

Second, St. Petersburg. Here the same objection applies, with the additional argument that the proposed increase of compensation from $2,000 to $3,500 will not equal the increased cost of living which a diplomatic officer would be forced to incur. The compensation of the consul-general at St. Petersburg should be increased, but the office should not be connected with the legation.

Third, Vienna. This is an important commercial post, the fees collected at the consulate-general amounting to about $7,000 annually, and indicating an amount of business requiring the constant attention of a competent and active officer. The addition of the secretaryship of legation could not be effected without detriment to the consular business and the protection of our revenues.

Fourth, Copenhagen. This is impracticable as the bill now stands, with the Danish and Swedish missions united, unless the seat of the combined legation be at Copenhagen, thus neglecting the most essential of the two missions. If the union of these missions be insisted upon, the diplomatic officer would have to be stationed at Stockholm, and the utility of a so-called secretary of legation at Copenhagen would be at least doubtful. On the other hand, if the mission at Copenhagen be retained, as I trust it will, the grade of minister-resident and consul-general which I suggest will supersede the need of a separate consular officer.

To these specific objections, I may add one founded on the diplomatic anomaly involved in the combined function. Properly, the diplomatic rank is the highest, in international intercourse, and yet the bill subordinates it to the consular rank. In view of this, it might be well to consider the propriety of changing the title at Constantinople, so as to read "secretary of legation and consul-general," thus giving the representative capacity its proper precedence.

The purely consular part of the bill as reported merits careful attention also.

A certain class of consulates in Mediterranean and Eastern countries combines quasi diplomatic functions with those purely consular. These are, Tangier, Tunis, Tripoli, Cairo, Tamatave, (Madagascar,) and Bangkok. I observe in the reported bill that Tunis and Tripoli are omitted altogether, and the salary of the consulate at Tangier is reduced to $2,000. I regard this omission as premature, and as calculated to prejudice the projects of reorganization which the Department is considering in that quarter, in view of the changed position of Tunis under the French protectorate. The reduction of the salary at Tangier strikes me as unjust to an important office, and as discriminating especially against a meritorious officer, Mr. Felix A. Mathews, who has done much to maintain the good name and extend the interests of our country in Northern Africa.

The consulate at Algiers is discontinued by the reported bill. It should be restored, with a salary of $1,000, if we are to obtain any good results from the cruise of Commodore Shufeldt.

I should be glad also to see Venice, with its salary of $1,000, retained as a consulate. The fees amount to nearly one-half the salary, and increase yearly, while the convenience of the office to the large numbers of Americans visiting that city is very great.

The Department asked in the estimates for $75,000 for employment of office clerks at the consulates. The bill only gives $65,000, which is much less than the good of the service requires.

For the contingent expenses of all consulates the Department asked $140,000. The bill gives $135,000, the same as last year. If the increase be not made, the usual annual deficiency will again have to be voted. In like manner the bill only gives $5,000 for payment of "consular officers not citizens of the United States." On this account a deficiency regularly occurs. It is not within the power of the Department to limit this item, as deaths and resignations of consular officers continually require the employment of substitutes, who can only be compensated from this appropriation. The First Comptroller of the Treasury has requested the State Department to ask for $10,000 as the least sum adequate for the purpose.

I have thus complied with the request of your committee, to point out the particulars in which the pending bill, as reported, is detrimental to the public interests and national dignity. In doing so I have also suggested several minor points, in which the project of reform which the Department is considering may be conveniently anticipated. To the remaining items of the bill I find no objection, except that it fails to adopt several suggestions which this Department has recommended to Congress; such, for instance, as the establishment of consulates at St. Stephen's, New Brunswick, with a salary of $1,500, and the erection of Antigua into a salaried consulate of the $1,000 class.

This Department made the request for the erection of a consulate at St. Stephen's at the earnest solicitation of the Treasury Department. The Secretary of the Treasury states that it will be quite impossible to protect our revenues and prevent the importation of foreign lumber under the exemptions enjoyed by American lumber, unless we have an independent salaried officer at St. Stephen's. The office is now an agency, and the officer is interested in the lumber trade.

Commending the foregoing to your careful consideration, I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

Hon. C. G. WILLIAMS,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KASSON. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIN.]

Mr. McLANE. I thought the gentleman had yielded the floor.

Mr. KASSON. I had promised to yield some time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and will yield any remaining time I may have to the gentleman from Maryland if he desires it.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, the time may come, and it is possibly rapidly approaching, when it will be quite unnecessary to exchange with foreign nations ministers or ambassadors. But while we do send ministers abroad to represent this country, in deference to the customs of nations, we should clothe them with all the proper powers and surround them by all appliances which will give consequence to the representatives of this great nation. We should give them that standing among the nations of the world which this country itself holds, not take from them any of the dignity of their high position.

I understand perfectly well in what an embarrassing position a foreign minister would be placed should he have a consul appointed without consulting him, without his selection, who would have access to all of the archives and papers of his office, and to all of the private and public correspondence, and have full knowledge of his business, and one who would have charge of the legation and the disposition of the affairs of the Government intrusted to the minister at the court to which he is accredited in his absence as chargé d'affaires, which is the law. I know full well that it is common to complain of the expenses of our diplomatic intercourse with foreign nations and of our consular service. Our representation abroad is not made to produce money or revenue. It is a representation of the interests of a great people. And, sir, I do object to making consular appointments abroad a source of revenue.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, to have heard the calculations of expense and profits of the diplomatic and consular service made by the chairman of the committee. He exhibited the numbers of passports issued by various ministers, and the balance in favor of the Government growing out of the consular service. The consular service of the United States we require for the benefit of those engaged in commerce and trade, and a just protection to American mariners. The service, in my judgment, should be rendered free of any expense to the citizen and be paid for by the Government. The fees exacted are a tax levied off the trader, merchant, or mariner, and in restraint to that extent of our commerce with foreign countries. The issue of passports is not properly the business of the minister, although he is clothed with the power. There are very few of the countries in Europe where a passport is required, and American citizens traveling either for business or pleasure are in the habit of securing passports from the Department of State before leaving home. He has direct connection with the court or government to which he is accredited. He conveys to his own Government all that occurs in the country where he resides in relation to or can have any importance to the trade, commerce, and interests of our people abroad, and he is there, as has been said by the gentleman who last addressed the committee, to protect the rights of citizens, whether foreign born or naturalized, and in that respect recent events have clearly demonstrated that to withdraw our ministers, or to abridge their power, would be an acknowledged weakness in our Government which could not be condoned, and a calamity to those of our citizens who have suffered arrest and imprisonment in foreign countries. It would be a source of serious objection, in my judgment, to an American minister at a foreign court to allow a consular officer, without reference to his own wishes or the qualifications of the consul, to be appointed with power to have access to and control of the records of his legation, of the archives, and of all the business interests represented by him at that government.

The selection of a secretary to take charge of such matters should be left with the minister himself, so that the citizen who is best qualified may be selected to fulfill the duties. The relation being confidential, the qualifications of a secretary should be of a much higher grade than those required to fulfill the duties of a consulate. Justice to the minister as well as to this Government surely demands that he should have as his secretary a citizen well qualified, and one in whom he can place most implicit confidence.

Mr. Chairman, I have said that the time may come when we may dispense with this system, and thereby cut down the expense; when steam and lightning will give such rapid communication as to annihilate time and space, and we can assert our rights and protect our interests without the presence of ministers abroad. It may be in the near future; but such a happy condition in the affairs of humanity may be postponed until the lion and the lamb lie down together, or the proclamation of the promised peace and good-will settles down upon the world. But while it is the practice of the whole world—of all the great nations of the world—I hold that we, the American nation, should be represented in every nation, or wherever there is an organized government or exercise of governmental power, and that we should have an American minister, selected for his fitness, to represent our fifty millions of freemen at the seat of government of every foreign nation, and should surround him with all the rights and powers, the dignity and the consequence of this great nation.

Mr. Chairman, we have never been the propagandists of our political ideas. We have never charged our ministers abroad to interfere with governments to which they are accredited, or to commend our broad liberty and the dead-level of our social organization to the civilized nations of the earth. On the contrary, they are expressly forbidden to interfere with the laws or the governments to which they are accredited.

Sir, in the one hundred years of the existence and example of this nation, where free government has been exercising its mighty power over peoples who enjoy its blessings, and all the governments of the world have felt its power in relieving oppressed humanity, silently but constantly our example has been contracting the power of the ruling classes and remitting it to the masses of the people, where it justly belongs.

Our precepts and example, our liberal political ideas have broken down the barriers between centralized power and the masses of the people, and every concession made in Europe to the voice and control of the people in their government is a signal embodiment of the force of the American ideas of government and the rights of common humanity. The people have power in all the governments in Europe save one. Kings and emperors are lessened in their powers and prerogatives, and in my judgment, believing as I do in the future of this great country and of our form of government, our broad liberty and equality, the emperor and the king will soon remain as the tinsel, nominal heads of the government, if they are not entirely dispensed with as unnecessary in governments which aim to secure individual happiness and prosperity and enjoy the blessings of liberty, peace, and concord; and there will come a time when the rights of humanity will stand up and be asserted and appear in living light in the presence of the American ideas of human rights and liberties. [Applause.]

Mr. McLANE. If we are not to vote on this bill to-night I should not put so much restraint on myself in addressing the Chair.

Several MEMBERS. The bill will not be voted on to-night.

Mr. McLANE. Then I shall say what I have to say without reference to any limitation of time. I rose really for the purpose of discussing the bill and to give my assent to the policy indicated by the committee, but at the same time to indicate to the committee how very imperfect, how very unsatisfactory was the application they were making of the principle.

The gentleman in charge of this bill indicated his desire to limit the diplomatic organization of the country. With that desire and with the principle on which it is based I am in accord. But it is not becoming this country to limit its diplomatic organization by rendering it less respectable than it now is. To-day we have missions that are not only without occupation and without labor, but where the missions themselves are not respectable in their organization. Now, I would strike from this bill all such missions, and I would concentrate the organization under four single missions so far as Europe is concerned, and instead of making the missions to Belgium and Holland one mission with a salary of $7,000, I would have no mission at all in those countries.

We have already a well-organized system in Europe. We have missions to Great Britain, France, Germany, and St. Petersburg, with equipments for those missions commensurate with the dignity of this country. It has been the practice of the diplomacy of all countries, and of our own when its diplomacy was most distinguished, to accredit ministers to more countries than one. If we exist thousands of years we will never have a diplomacy more distinguished and more honorable than the diplomacy of our early history, when a minister to Great Britain was accredited to France, to Russia, to Holland, and to any other country in Europe with which we need have intercourse.

We have a yearly appropriation to carry on foreign intercourse other than the actual support of missions. Why not, therefore, let these missions to England and to France and to Germany and to St. Petersburg draw from that fund all necessary traveling and incidental expenses? That is what in truth it should be provided for. The expense of our ministers going to other countries than those to which they are accredited would be very insignificant. What is there to prevent the minister to France from going to Madrid and to Rome? What is there to prevent the minister to Germany going to Vienna? And what difficulty have we in letting the minister at St. Petersburg deal with all those countries of kindred race and association with Russia? It will not detract from our dignity. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] need not be uneasy, and I know that he has not only the liberality of view but the experience necessary to decide this question. And I shall submit my observations to him with some reasonable confidence that I may have his assent.

It is the ministers at the smaller courts, the ministers resident, who are without sufficient salaries, without the means given to hire respectable apartments for themselves and their legations; with no contingent fund allowed with which to pay office rent; living in hotels of second and third class accommodations, actually unable, if they paid out their entire salary, to meet necessary personal expenses and pay the per diem of board and lodging in a respectable hotel. There is not a first-class hotel in Europe in one of its great capitals at which the per diem for board and lodging would not exceed the salary of your minister resident after a reasonable allowance for personal expenses of self and family.

Hence my objection to the suggestion that you should take a minister of a low degree and accredit him as a minister plenipotentiary, and yet give him the salary of the lower degree.

Why, sir, I cannot conceive of a measure better calculated to discredit this country than to organize its diplomatic service upon any such standard. If you cannot give a salary sufficient to make your legation respectable, abolish your legation. And if there is nothing to do, if the statement made by the gentleman who reported this bill is correct, and if the supplementary statement be correct, made by the gentleman from New Jersey, as a reason why a secretary of legation and a consul-general should be concentrated in one man; that the secretary of legation has nothing to do, and, therefore, that it cannot conflict with his duties to be a consul-general—if this statement be correct—then abolish the office of secretary of legation. What an argument to present to this House, that you should make your secretary of legation consul-general, uniting the two offices in one person, because your secretary of legation has nothing to do! That is the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, which report this bill. The argument of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that at The Hague and at Brussels neither minister has anything to do is not a reason surely for making one of them the minister at both courts. If it is a reason for anything it is a reason for abolishing them at both courts. If it is a good reason for abolishing the minister at one court, then it is a good reason for abolishing them at both. Why not take a minister who has something to do, but who yet will have sufficient time to attend to our diplomacy at The Hague and at Brussels, and let him go there? Take your minister at Paris. He can go to Brussels in five hours and to The Hague in seven.

Now I say to this committee, and I say it directly to my honorable friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIN,] who will bear me out, I am sure, that there is nothing in accrediting a man to five courts that takes away from his dignity; just the reverse. When he is accredited to five courts he has that much more dignity than if he was accredited to but one. And we have constantly done that. In recent times, during the administrations of Mr. Polk and of Mr. Pierce, the same minister was accredited to three or four courts. Our laws made provision for it, and allowed the additional expenses to be paid for.

Under the administration that followed that of Mr. Pierce our minister to Brazil was accredited to other South American states, and he received in addition to his own salary one-half of the salary of a minister accredited to one court.

Now, I do not contemplate any such provision as that, nor do I contemplate weakening the influence of this country in the estimation of European governments. But does this committee take note of the fact that in reciprocating these diplomatic courtesies the very countries to which we send our first-class ministers rate us as but a fourth or fifth class power? The very countries to which we send our first-class plenipotentiaries, to which we would send our embassadors if it were possible for us to have an embassador—if we had an individual sovereign to represent our minister plenipotentiary to Great Britain would be an embassador, and so on with all the other great powers—does it occur to this committee that these very powers to which we show this great courtesy and this great condescension rate us down among the fourth or fifth powers of the world? And do they take note of the fact that when we receive here a foreign minister, no matter of what age, no matter of what service, we receive a man growing up from service at the court of some inferior power on this continent or some inferior power on the other continent? I say inferior; inferior in everything, inferior in population, inferior in wealth, inferior in intelligence, and in cultivation.

Now, if there ever was a case in which a country should entertain a feeling of resentment in view of its diplomatic relations to the rest of the world, it is the case of this country. Much of it is due, I am free to say, to our own inattention.

Few men of this Congress or of any other Congress can be made to feel an interest in this simple question of diplomatic organization. No more striking proof of the correctness of that statement could be given than the very bill now presented for our consideration.

What an argument, what a statement to make to this House, that the consular system is a system that supports itself. How does it support itself? It supports itself by taxing the American ship-owner, already stricken down nearly unto death by other taxation; out of sailors' wages and the ordinary shipping and commercial taxes of the country we pay our consuls. And, forsooth, because these taxes exceed the expenses—and the expenses in that branch of the service, as in all others, are excessive and unreasonable—because the receipts exceed the expenses, it is held up as a matter of congratulation.

This committee will bear patiently with me when I tell them that in this cry of the day for the revival of American shipping the very first step we ought to take is to abolish all these fees which are taken from the ship-owners and from the sailors with which to support our consular system. Abolish them all, and in doing so you will not only relieve your ship-owners but you will save the morals of your public officers. Where a salary can be paid and honorably accepted you will have a consul not tainted, not demoralized by the fact that when he puts one dollar into the Treasury beyond his legal salary he puts another into his own pocket. There is not a consulate of this country of any importance where it is not notorious that the salary is less than the actual receipts of the consul.

It may be said that it is done with the sanction of the Government. That sanction is easily obtained. It is the history of all administrations of our Government that these little perquisites, these little indulgences, grow out of incidental charges, such as a charge for the support of a messenger or other office expenses. That is not peculiar to this department of the Government. And if tolerated at home we ought not to be surprised that it is tolerated 12,000 miles away from us. Precisely the same abuses which exist at our own door and in every Department of the Government here at the seat of Government exist in all these consulates.

The system itself is a bad application of the principle of economy. In an unhappy moment we thought we could economize our diplomatic service by paying these consuls with fees, and when the attempt was made to pay them by salaries we continued fees in order to make sure that the fees we authorized the consul to charge should cover the amount we appropriated for his salary. I say that the principle in itself is bad, and the actual administration of it is odious and dishonest.

If my view could prevail, I would strike from this bill everything but the first portion of it, so far as Europe is concerned, that portion which provides for the four missions to London, Paris, Berlin, and St. Petersburg. And then I would provide that those ministers should be accredited wherever the President of the United States chose to accredit them, and that their traveling expenses should be paid from the fund appropriated by this bill for the expenses of our diplomatic intercourse. There is a sum appropriated sufficient for that purpose. Then I would make the necessary provision for secretaries of legation at these four courts, and everything else I would strike from the bill, until I came to that portion of it relating to America.

Sympathizing entirely with the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] sympathizing entirely with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] in so far as they refer to America and our relations to America, and remembering that these American states treat us as their first power, that we do not receive from them subordinates in their diplomatic service whom they are educating for the courts of Europe, but that they are in the habit of sending to us the best men they can send to us, I would show them fully as much consideration as I would show to Europe.

But I would apply the same principle in our American diplomacy as in our European. There is no difficulty—not only is there no difficulty but there is infinite advantage—in letting our minister to Mexico deal with the Central American states.

Mr. KASSON. Will my friend from Maryland allow me to mention a single circumstance? He speaks of a minister accredited to one place being sent to other places.

Mr. McLANE. Accredited to other places.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to state an incident which occurred during the service of the last minister at Vienna, when, to his great surprise, he found an important question referred to arbitration, one of the countries involved having a single legation for Europe, to be accredited to different countries as business called. Under that general floating power they put in an appearance at Vienna, where suddenly the interests, almost the fate, of their country was involved; and their first step was to go to the American legation, which was a fixture there, to ask advice or counsel; to say that they were strangers, did not know how to start any business, and must have the counsel of a man who knew the ways of doing business and the influential men who controlled the doing of it.

Mr. McLANE. Does my friend mean to intimate that they could get such information as that from our ministers abroad?

Mr. KASSON. In that case they felt satisfied with the information they received. The American minister, of course, telegraphed home for permission to render assistance, obtained such permission under the usual diplomatic restraints, and then gave what aid he could. The result in that case of one of these floating missions was that the representatives of that country found themselves able to do nothing except through the intervention of a permanent minister; they left before their business was finished, with the request that this permanent minister should finish it for them. I mention this circumstance as showing the difficulties connected with these floating missions.

Mr. McLANE. I am considering this question seriously, and I shall treat the interruption of my friend quite seriously.

Mr. KASSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon if the interruption was too long.

Mr. McLANE. It was not. In the first place, there is no obligation upon this Government to keep ministers abroad in order to tell any stray American who may domicile himself in another country and become an inhabitant there how to conduct his commercial business. There is no necessity and no propriety in keeping a minister for such a purpose. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] understand—he might well not understand; if he had listened to the honorable gentleman from Indiana, and paid any deference to his opinions, he certainly would not understand—does he understand that an American citizen who goes abroad and domiciles himself in a foreign country, making that the place of his residence, becomes in many respects a citizen of that country?

That is the very argument we have had here to-day; and it is a sound argument. Why, sir, an American going to Austria, where my honorable friend once represented this country, and planting himself in business there, would be regarded, if a war with Austria should arise, as a party at war with the country with which Austria was at war. Nobody would treat him as an American citizen except his own country, which might still protect him though he was abusing and misusing it. The rest of the world would treat him as an Austrian, because domiciled there. That is the argument of the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] and it is the argument of a statesman in my estimation among the first in this or any country, Governor Marcy. That is his doctrine as read at the desk to-day—that Koszta, domiciled in America, was an American, entitled to our protection, though he was not naturalized, and though he might not have given notice. Any boy at a law school knows that a man domiciled in a foreign country and doing business there is treated as a citizen of that country. It is not worth while to spend any time in establishing that proposition, which is maintained by the courts of every country the world over, England included, and long before the act of 1870 providing for expatriation of British subjects.

Therefore, when the honorable gentleman from Iowa urges that a minister to Austria should not be accredited to Italy, (a thing I do not propose to provide for,) he must find some better reason than that an American domiciled there may require diplomatic protection. I say that if an American citizen establishes himself in business in Italy, he has no right to ask this country to keep a minister there to inform him how to organize his commercial business.

If there be anything reasonable in the opposition to the view I have presented, it is the view presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIN,] which is that this great country, with its great political power and prestige, should not count the cost, but should keep a representative in every country on the face of the earth that the "Stars and Stripes" might be seen floating there as an emblem of our principles of self-government. But that, he will allow me to say, is an extravagant demonstration of patriotism. I think life is too practical for such things. I say to him, with all deference, if we at home by sound and wise legislation develop our material interests, and at the same time give equal rights, not only political, but industrial, to all classes of our citizens, growing in wealth and population until within a few years we shall be known over the world as a country of 100,000,000 people with wealth proportionate, and with our "Stars and Stripes" again floating on American ships in all the harbors of the world, such a policy will do us far more honor, will give us far more glory, than to have a resident minister loafing about the streets of foreign cities without the means to pay for his lodging and his board in a second-class hotel.

No, Mr. Chairman, we might as well look this subject in the face fairly. This foreign service of ours is more—well, the word comes and the word fits—more debased and more degraded than our own home service, and that is saying much. It has become the rule that a poor devil who is not able to pension himself on the home department begs a foreign consulship. If he is without repute, and so much without repute that he would discredit a department of the Government at home, then he gets an appointment to represent us at a foreign government.

My friend from Iowa can make a ready application of that observation. I say my friend from Iowa can make it, for from the few remarks he made here to-day I recognize nobody is better able than he is to speak for what is occurring. Nobody will suppose by my reference to him that I was unmindful of his own great merit abroad. Nobody can suppose my reflection had reference to him, because I know none who did more honor to the foreign service than he did. But from his intimacy with the governments of the day he can very easily make application of the remark which I made to-day, that when a man is altogether unfit for the home department, when he would discredit a home department, he is fit for the foreign service. To that we have come in our diplomatic service. And, Mr. Chairman, no reasonable gentleman on either side of the House need suppose he inflicts injury on the public service or the prestige of the country when he strikes out of that bill all the resident ministers I propose to strike out. Whatever may be their personal respectability; whatever may be their personal merit so far as their public service is concerned, it is not creditable because it is nil. Yes, sir; it is nil. No man without occupation in public life can maintain his respectability. Nothing is more likely to discredit them with the nations to which we send these gentlemen than to find them there without occupation and without interest in the country where they are accredited. This is the lamentable fact for us to consider, because we have no remedy for it but to abolish the missions. I have allowed myself in these observations no greater freedom than I am entitled to exercise, and, although I have allowed myself to look to what might be supposed to be political aspects of the case, that must not detract from the main body of the argument, and that is, this service is not necessary. It does not, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] said, contribute to the prestige of the country. I think it has just the contrary effect. I think, sir, the service detracts from the prestige of the country, that it is a great mistake to have such a service, and that it takes money out of the Treasury, and without any necessity, for such expenditure. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and I represent constituencies somewhat different in their situation, which may account for our differences occasionally on these questions of detail in appropriation bills. But I have never seen the day I was not with him when he proposed to refuse the public money to a service that was of no value to the Government, and I am glad to have his encouragement now. I am dealing with a service which I believe to be without value to us; and then comes the further fact that I believe it is actually discreditable.

I would not have indulged in these remarks, and I would not have moved such an amendment to this bill, if the committee had not invited my attention to it. I would have considered it outside of my role. But although I am not a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations, I am nevertheless a member of this House, and when I am called on by a committee which has matured an appropriation bill, when I am called on by them to consolidate two missions into one, it becomes my duty to say to this House and to that committee that they have not consolidated missions enough. They have presented to me a sound principle, and precisely the reason the honorable gentleman from Michigan, the member of the committee in charge of the bill, gives for consolidating two is a good reason for consolidating twelve, and I want to consolidate twelve. And there is nothing which he can say in support of the proposition to consolidate two that does not apply completely and unanswerably to the proposition to consolidate twelve.

Now, China remains. Our ministers to China were accredited to Japan, Siam, Corea, and Cochin China, and under an administration of foreign affairs quite as respectable as any we have ever had, quite as respectable in experience and in original capacity. And yet they thought those eastern relations of ours could be conducted with one minister and he accredited to all those eastern countries.

And so, as I said before, Mexico should be associated with Central America. If we had had one minister accredited to the people and the countries on the west coast of the Pacific we would not have had this ugly picture which results from incapable and conflicting ministers.

And when the gentleman from Iowa tells us that the two Secretaries of State are in accord, when he tells us there was a keen and enlightened appreciation of the development of our American interests on the west coast of America in the policy of both, then he must allow me to take the other horn of the dilemma. If these two Secretaries of State are in accord, then God help this country from the stupidity and ignorance and incapacity of the ministers who represent the country, and give to all the world the impression we were at one moment rushing heedlessly to war and at another unduly subservient to the views of European powers, and indifferent to the interests and welfare of the South American republics.

It will embarrass the honorable gentleman from Iowa, I imagine, to satisfy this side of the House at least, that he is correct in his view of this question, although he seems to have given entire satisfaction to his own side; but I am sure the gentleman from Tennessee, who gave his eloquent development of what he believed to be the American policy, will not accept the fact that the two—I am embarrassed in saying the two, Secretaries of State, because I know that the Secretaries of State do not represent the country abroad, and I should be doing myself the injustice which I think the distinguished gentleman from Iowa has done to himself if I employed the terms he has seen proper to use. I cannot talk about the former Secretary of State and the present Secretary of State in view of the foreign policy of this country, because neither one nor the other had control of it. Not a line could either of them honorably write that was not directed by the President of the United States.

Therefore, the question that the gentleman from Iowa should have put to the House is: Was the President of the United States in accord with the gentleman from Tennessee and with himself? He ought to have told us that the President of the United States was an enlightened and a consistent statesman, and that he had put his hand to that good work, and that he proposed to continue in the line which had been marked out. Unless the gentleman can tell us that he can tell nothing to the credit of either of these Secretaries of State. Now, he cannot tell us that to-day, and we cannot wait as he has invited us to do. It is not reasonable that we should wait. Why, the people we represent have not waited. They have a keen sense of all political policies, and they take no liberties with their consciences. They exercise all freedom in choosing their lines of political conduct. They follow their instincts, their convictions, and when they say to each other that this is a great American empire, and that we hold relations to other American empires that we do not hold to European empires, they mean it.

And, Mr. Chairman, whether it comes in 1819 in one form, or in 1859 in another form, it is always the policy that is in the line of their instincts and of their consciences. It is not necessary that they should flaunt the Stars and Stripes and avow their readiness to make war for some foreign country. No advocate of the Monroe doctrine, no opponent of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, no sympathizer with South American states to-day advocates any such policy. We never did advocate it. I say we, because I am cordially and warmly with those who do consider this country under obligations to separate itself, as our fathers taught us we should do, from all European alliances; to take to our souls with hooks of steel the American empires of our own continent and do by them all we can within the limits of our peaceful civilization.

War only comes when we have contracted obligations to them; and then we ought not to shrink from war. No decent, honorable country in the world would shrink from obligations contracted. The only question for American statesmen is to know what obligations we have contracted; and I say to-day, in view of this reference to South America, that we do not want any more dispatches; and no criticism of either of the Secretaries of State has anything to do with it. It is our duty, if we can, to make peace between the South American states. This no man can question. Not to fight either of them. Not to go to war with either of them, but to bring the whole power of this Government, I mean the moral power, to make peace between these people. To make peace as an arbitrator, as a friend. That imposes no obligation to fight either of them, and if it does not impose any obligation to fight, with what face can honorable gentlemen tell us that we stop suddenly midway in our career because we were going to fight? And I understood the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to give this as a reason for what he seemed to consider an apparent but not a real difference of opinion or policy between the two Secretaries of State that he referred to.

If I were permitted to style any expression as absurd, if it were courteous or proper to do it, I would feel compelled to stamp it as absurd.

I never knew a man in the history of this country of either political party who contended that we ought to make war with a South American state in order to develop happy or peaceful relations between it and other American states. And in this particular case there was not only no threat of war, but the Government of this country, if it had undertaken to declare war with a view to compelling Chili to make peace with Peru, would have become ridiculous before the people and would have been hooted out of the country.

No such proposition was ever made, and I would deem it to be unfair if I insinuated that the Secretary of State, who initiated this policy, intended to bring on a war, or that he was in any danger of bringing on a war. That is all well enough for those to say who would proscribe him and discredit him. It is all very well for those to say who are finding excuses for not doing as he did. And as I feel myself to be no partisan of either party in this matter, as I do not claim for either party any well settled policy on this question, but as I propose myself to do exactly what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] said he would do, as I propose to do all I can either by voting or by my personal and public conduct to give this country its fullest development in assisting South American countries, and as I would not hesitate to deal with them as if they were the strongest empires in the world, and then give them the benefit of our strength, so for that reason I must repel any excuse that is made for not doing what was right and what was in the line of avowing a decided preference for American influence as opposed to European influence in the politics of South American states. And what was in process of being done that we were on the eve of a war? If we were on the eve of a war it must necessarily be because we were fulfilling some engagement we had made. Well, if we had made the engagement, then we ought to have made the war to maintain it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I might as well cover the question to-day as at any other time. The gentleman from Iowa has alluded to it. He has spoken of the great interest he takes in these American questions, these communications. I take as great interest in them as he does. He referred, I think, in these observations, to the communications between the two oceans. I take as much interest in that as he does. I must say that, having got a railroad to the Pacific coast, having got two railroads to the Pacific coast, having got three, four, five railroads to the Pacific coast, I am not as anxious to have a canal as I was when we had no railroad at all. And I am very free to say that when I have a canal, and have it by my own vote, it shall be over a territory with whose government I have a treaty that guarantees protection to my people, and that I should have the right to join that country in giving that protection. That is the kernel of the whole question with me. Whether it be here or whether it be there, the country over which the communication passes must be a country with which we have a relation, and that relation must secure to us the whole power of that country, and it must give us the right to give them the whole power of this country. Any other arrangement will end as that Panama communication did. There we made a treaty; there we had the right to guarantee it; and now we have seen all the stock of that company sold to a foreign company; and if you can suppose that the French company has any relation to the French Government you can see that foreign government enjoying first of all the fruit of our guarantee and then insisting that it too shall join in that guarantee.

Now, I am not extravagant, Mr. Chairman, because there is no country in America with which we have not a right to make that treaty. I am only astonished that any Secretary of State, be he the present or be he the last—that any Secretary of State should stop on that question to deal with any foreign country, not even with England. For I stake, I was going to say my credit as a public man, but I will not do that for fear I might be deemed presumptuous, therefore I will only say that so far as my light goes, so far as I can understand the treaty, it is no obstacle at all; and I speak not only for myself, but I speak for the Government of this country under a Democratic administration. Mr. Buchanan, who, if we had followed the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] in this debate, would have been covered with dirt and with the filth that that gentleman endeavored to throw upon the Democracy of Indiana, but against whose wisdom and experience as a statesman and a diplomate not even he could have cast a stone—Mr. Buchanan was called upon to consider this Clayton-Bulwer treaty as late as 1859, and he did not hesitate to instruct his minister to make a treaty with Mexico for a transit across the Isthmus. We got a transit across Tehuantepec, and we stipulated in that treaty, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty being in full force, that our people and the property of our people should be protected by the power of Mexico and by the power of the United States Army and Navy. We paid no attention to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as forbidding forts and troops on the Isthmus. That treaty was for a special purpose. That treaty had reference to one project, and that project has long since exploded. It never had any application to Mexico or any other Central American state than Nicaragua, and it has not now any application to Nicaragua.

We never hesitated a moment in our determination to disregard that treaty. We were at a loss how to do it. We desired to do it peacefully. Mr. Buchanan, as President of the United States, did it precisely as General Garfield did it, and as I presume Mr. Arthur is endeavoring to do it. He did it by diplomatizing and asking the consent of England, that it might be done by mutual consent; but he never conceded an obligation to respect it. He regarded it as a piece, I will not say of sharp practice, because it received the assent of an overwhelming majority of the Senate of the United States, and however full of error I may consider their vote I shall not discredit it. I leave it with all the dignity and all the sanction that any treaty can have. But the point I make is that it does not interfere with our right to make a treaty with Mexico or a Central American state to protect our transit; not even with Nicaragua itself.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to ask the gentleman whether when that treaty was made and ratified there was not in the possession of one of the officers of the Government a treaty much more advantageous to the United States known as the Heiss treaty?

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir; in the possession of the Secretary of State, an officer of the Government, and I was about to say in the hostile possession, for he locked it up in his desk and refused to send it to the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. Who locked it up? The Secretary of State?

Mr. McLANE. According to my idea it must have been the President, for I do not recognize the Secretary of State in that matter. That treaty was the Heiss treaty.

Mr. RANDALL. And that was an American treaty?

Mr. McLANE. That was an American treaty in the broadest sense of the term. It was precisely the same treaty that was negotiated with Mexico by Mr. Buchanan in regard to the Tehauntepec route. That treaty by the accompanying military convention gave to this country the right to send its Army and Navy to assist Mexico in protecting American life and property on that transit, and the treaty with Nicaragua did the same thing. But both the one and the other are now in the tomb of the Capulets; they are neither of them living instruments to-day.

We have to deal now with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as it stands. Therefore I say to those who have any respect for my opinion that our issue ought to be, that to-day the Clayton-Bulwer treaty has no interfering force in our relations with Mexico and the Central American states.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

Mr. McLANE. It not only does not exclude us from Mexico, but it does not exclude us from Panama, it does not exclude us from Honduras; and I do not admit that it excludes us from Nicaragua. It has served its purpose in Nicaragua, and such of you as want to vote for a Nicaragua transit can vote, in my opinion, for it without fear of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

I should, however, be sorry to see any man vote for that transit, or for any other, until he has the right to protect it by the power of the American Government. He ought never to let a dollar of the public money go for one of those communications until this country has the right in its full sovereignty to take care of that dollar. Let your Eads canal or ship railway and your Nicaragua transit go to the winds until you have such a treaty.

No man desires more than I do to see a communication open from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean. I love my own coast line first, and I would not want to build a canal that required me also to build an enormous navy commensurate in power with the navies of all the world to protect it. What folly for us to suppose that we can go down to Panama or to Nicaragua and guarantee the neutrality of a canal there against all Europe.

But as one of these Secretaries of State said, somewhere in that very voluminous correspondence, "on land this country is invincible." Do you remember it, Mr. Chairman? Do you remember when Mr. Lowell was told to say to Lord Granville that this country was invincible on land? Now we can go to Tehuantepec with our railroad and ask odds of no man when we go to protect American life and property, when the railroad is but little over a thousand miles from our own frontier.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment, that I may obtain an order to print in the RECORD certain papers which I have.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the Secretary of State, with accompanying documents, in reference to the consul at Antigua, British West Indies.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The communication, with accompanying papers, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 24, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant, asking to be furnished with such facts as may be used in the endeavor to secure favorable action on the recommendation of the Department that the consul at Antigua, British West Indies, be placed in Schedule B, with a salary of $1,500 per annum.

Complying with this request, I send you inclosed a copy of Mr. Evarts's letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and of dispatches Nos. 38 and 55 from the consul at Antigua, all bearing upon the subject. These papers will be found to contain a statement of the importance of our interests in Antigua, which it is believed will convince Congress of the necessity of making the appropriation asked for. I fully concur in the recommendation of my predecessor, and believe that the advancement of our commercial interests in the island will be greatly furthered by providing the consul with the means of devoting to those interests his whole time and energy.

This appropriation was requested in the estimates submitted to Congress at its present session, and when omitted from the bill by the sub-committee of the House was strongly urged before that body and subsequently before the full committee.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

FRED'K. T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

Hon. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS.

Inclosures: Mr. Evarts to Mr. Davis, January 6, 1881; dispatches Nos. 38 and 55 from Antigua.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 6, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith for your information a copy of a dispatch of the 4th of December last, from the consul at Antigua, British West Indies, in which he solicits the Department to recommend to Congress that an appropriation be made for a salary for his office.

The increase in the trade of that Island with the United States in the last two years is quite noticeable, and is believed to be in a great measure due to the efforts and energy of Mr. Jackson, the present incumbent of the office. In view of Mr. Jackson's representations, and in the belief that it will advance the interests of our commerce with that island, I have the honor to recommend that the sum of $1,500 per annum may be appropriated as salary for that office, to be included in Schedule B, which prohibits consular officers of that grade from engaging in business.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. HENRY G. DAVIS, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, Senate.

(Inclosure: Mr. Jackson to Mr. Hay, No. 38, December 4, 1880.)

UNITED STATES CONSULATE AT ANTIGUA,
December 4, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I again make application to the Department of State to use its influence with Congress to place this consulate on a better footing than that which at present surrounds it.

The rapid increase of trade, with the assurance that the growth will attain greater proportions, would seem to justify the act.

The shipment of sugar to the United States alone from this port, for the ensuing year, will reach the respectable figure of 14,000,000 pounds, with a declared export value of $700,000, which is an increase of fully 100 per cent. over the preceding year.

The exports from the United States to this port for the same period of time will exceed the sum of $400,000, which is also a considerable increase over the preceding year.

The total exports from this port for the ensuing year will amount to $1,500,000, while the imports will amount to at least $1,000,000.

The total exports of the British Leeward Islands, of which Antigua is the capital and residence of the governor-in-general, comprising the islands of Antigua, Dominica, Saint Christopher, Montserrat, Nevis, Anquilla, and Tortula—or the Virgin Islands—amount annually to the sum of $3,200,000, while their imports in the same period of time amount to the sum of $2,365,000. This trade is rapidly turning to the United States.

In addition to the statement contained in dispatches Nos. 21 and 22, I would state that there are twelve arrivals and departures of steamers at this port each month, and that a second line is about to be established between New York and these islands.

The fees of this office are barely in excess of last year, although such a noticeable increase in trade, owing to the carrying trade being monopolized by British vessels.

The strong but ineffectual effort made by the Department of State with Congress to establish a salaried consulate at this port was most kindly appreciated by the incumbent, and strengthened his hands to promote trade between the two countries.

Trusting renewed efforts will be made with Congress with the prospect of better success,

I have the honor to remain, sir, your obedient servant,

CHESTER E. JACKSON,
United States Consul.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

[No. 55.]

UNITED STATES CONSULATE,
Antigua, September 5, 1881.

SIR: The time drawing near for the assembling of Congress, I again make application to the Department of State to recommend to Congress that this consulate be advanced to Class B, with a salary of $1,500 per annum.

The Department has twice attempted to advance the interests of this consulate, but has failed, I have reason to believe, because of the petitions arriving too late to place in the general recommendation by the Secretary of State for changes necessary to the several consulates.

I trust this will receive the Department's kind consideration and recommendation.

I beg to refer you to dispatches Nos. 22, 34, and 38 for statements of trade and other items necessary to a statement to be placed before Congress. In addition to these, I would mention that, owing to the rapid changing of ownership to resident proprietors, the entire product of the Island, with small exception, is diverted in favor of the United States. This fact is strengthening to imports from America, of which there is a considerable increase over last year. I wish to assure the Department of my constant exertion in furthering the interests of trade between the two countries.

I am laboring under serious disadvantages in my trading, owing to competition by firms of large capital, who, to my discomfiture, seize upon American improvements as soon as I have proved their merits to the purchaser or to the satisfaction of the trade. If Congress will strengthen this office, I shall gladly do my utmost; if not, I shall be compelled to resign.

I have the honor to remain, your obedient servant,

CHESTER E. JACKSON,
Consul.

ROBERT R. HITT, Esq.,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BRIGGS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have not interfered with the debate to-day upon the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; but I trust the House is now ready to make an order to limit general debate on that bill. I therefore move that when the House shall again in Committee of the Whole resume consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill all further general debate shall be limited to one hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman propose to go on with the consideration of that bill to-night?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Not to-night. I only want to obtain from the House an order to limit further general debate on the bill to one hour.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to introduce a joint resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will withdraw that motion for the present.

REBELLION RECORDS.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) concerning the publication and distribution of the official records of the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

EDMUND RYAN.

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4758) granting a pension to Edmund Ryan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE INDEMNITY FUND—CALDERA CLAIMS.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4759) supplementary to an act approved June 19, 1878, giving to the Court of Claims jurisdiction of the Caldera claims upon the Chinese indemnity fund; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON CITY AND POINT LOOKOUT RAILROAD.

Mr. O'NEILL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4760) to authorize the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

RETIRED LIST FOR NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. BEACH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4761) to authorize a retired list for non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for a period of thirty years or upward; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM S. GRANT.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4762) for the relief of William S. Grant; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MAJOR-GENERAL EDWARD HATCH.

Mr. HATCH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4763) to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Brevet Major-General Edward Hatch, United States Army, chairman and disbursing officer of the special Ute commission appointed under act of Congress of May 3, 1878; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF REFUGE, BIG SANDY CREEK, NEW YORK.

Mr. SKINNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4764) authorizing the construction of a harbor of refuge at the mouth of Big Sandy Creek, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PHILLIP FELSENTHAL.

Mr. CASSIDY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4765) for the relief of Phillip Felsenthal; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN WILEY.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4766) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Wiley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MAJOR R. SLATER.

Mr. MATSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4767) to pay Major R. Slater for property destroyed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARSH LANDS IN OHIO.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4768) to confirm to the State of Ohio certain marsh lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

J. V. DAVIS.

Mr. BARBOUR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4769) for the relief of J. V. Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLARA H. FLOWER AND OTHERS.

Mr. BLANCHARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4770) for the relief of Clara H. Flower and others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY T. HICKMAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. BLANCHARD also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4771) for the relief of Mary T. Hickman and others: which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

C. A. PRUITT AND J. M. JONES.

Mr. CHALMERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R.

No. 4772) for the relief of C. A. Pruitt and J. M. Jones, executors of Joseph Pruitt, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

B. F. YOE.

Mr. PETTIBONE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4773) for the relief of B. F. Yoe; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES WHITE AND OTHERS.

Mr. PETTIBONE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4774) for the relief of James White and the legal representatives of William White, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN G. BYNUM.

Mr. PETTIBONE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4775) for the relief of the legal representatives of John G. Bynum, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WARREN HALL.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the instance of the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALL,] who has charge of a corresponding bill before the Committee on War Claims, I desire to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill for the relief of a colored man who for thirteen years has been asking for relief, to which, according to the report in this case, he is very clearly entitled. The bill to which I refer is Senate bill No. 892, for the relief of Warren Hall.

Mr. MILLS. What action does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be taken up and passed.

Mr. MILLS. I object to the passage of any bill at this time when there are so few members present.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I shall have to call for the regular order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move that the House adjourn.

POST-ROUTES.

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes is now on the Speaker's table, having been returned from the Senate with amendments. I have made an examination of the amendments, and there is no legislation in them, except merely the establishment of post-routes. I ask immediate concurrence in the amendments. The Post-Office Department desires the prompt passage of this bill in order to determine upon the spring lettings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that it is unusal action on the part of Congress to pass that bill so early in the session.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is passing early because the Post-Office Department has asked it, in order that it might be allowed to make contracts in the spring lettings.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BINGHAM. We will have a supplemental bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The supplemental bill may not pass for some time. Why will not the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow the bill to go back to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. BINGHAM. That will only be battle-door and shuttle-cock. We will pass another bill in two weeks.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are asked to pass this one earlier than usual.

Mr. BINGHAM. And it is only asked to be passed by the Department in connection with the spring lettings.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there are several gentlemen who wish other routes established.

Mr. BINGHAM. There will be another reported in two weeks, containing other routes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to the post-route bill?

There was no objection; and the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes, were taken up.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. They contain nothing but post-routes.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is all. I move they be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. MUTCHLER, until March 13, on account of important business;

To Mr. COLERICK, until next Monday, on account of important business; and

To Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, for two days, on account of important business.

WARREN HALL.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw my objection to the request by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] for unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask again for unanimous consent in behalf of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HALL] to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 892) for the relief of Warren Hall, a colored man from Saint Louis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Warren Hall, out of any moneys in the Treasury derived from the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, the sum of $1,125.61, being the proceeds of five bales of cotton voluntarily turned over to Thomas H. Yeatman, assistant special agent of the Treasury Department, on July 7, 1863, by said Warren Hall, which said proceeds have been paid into the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. On behalf of the gentleman from New Hampshire I ask this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and the letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 19, 1880.

SIR: In compliance with the request of your committee, of the 18th instant, by its clerk, I transmit herewith copies of papers on file in this Department relating to the claim of Warren Hall, for the proceeds of five bales of cotton. The proceeds of the cotton in question, amounting to $1,125.61, were covered into the Treasury as proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and no claim therefor has been made except by Warren Hall.

This claim is of the class referred to by the Secretary of the Treasury in a report to be found in Senate Executive Document No. 22, Fortieth Congress, second session, pages 6 and 7, in which the Secretary states that "certain agents, acting under a misapprehension of the instructions of the Department, induced owners of cotton to bring in and voluntarily abandon it, on the assurance that the same, or its proceeds, would be restored on application to the Department. Therefore, in any particular case upon due proof, and where the agent who received the property certified that he had given such assurances, Secretary Chase directed its release or the payment of its proceeds, considering that neither justice nor good faith warranted the retention by the Government of property thus voluntarily confided to its protection.

Respectfully, JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. E. S. BRAGG,
Chairman Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I wish the gentleman would tell us whether this has the indorsement of any committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire was requested to make this motion by order of his committee; but being confined to his room he has asked me to do it for him.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. In the confusion we did not before hear the gentleman's statement.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST OF FORT THORNBURGH.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following executive communication; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of War, dated the 18th ultimo, inclosing plans and estimates for the construction of the post of Fort Thornburgh, in Utah Territory, and recommending an appropriation of $84,000 for that purpose, and that the same be made available for immediate use.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 2, 1882.

And then, on motion of Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, (at fifty-eight minutes after four o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 3, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4185) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4283) for the relief of Susan Marshall Massie.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 892) for the relief of Warren Hall.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 4679) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish impressions of the cards of invitation to the Garfield memorial service; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of War, dated the 18th ultimo, inclosing plans and estimates for the construction of the post of Fort Thornburgh, in Utah Territory, and recommending an appropriation of $84,000 for that purpose, and that the same be made available for immediate use.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 2, 1882.

EDUCATION IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BUTLER. I present a large number of memorials of citizens of South Carolina on the subject of education in that State. I beg leave to read one of the memorials. It is not long and relates to a very important question. The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned respectfully shows to your honorable bodies that the facilities now afforded for the education of the children of this State are inadequate to accomplish the desired result.

The returns of the census of 1870 showed that more than half the voters of this State were unable to read and write. According to the census of 1880 there were 321,780 illiterate persons in South Carolina over ten years of age, or over 32 per cent. of the entire population. It is not probable that, in the present financial condition of South Carolina, it will be possible to afford such opportunities for the education of the masses as will decrease materially the number of illiterate persons in this State during the next decade. The large majority of the uneducated persons in this State are from among the colored race. Your memorialists point to the history of public education in South Carolina during the last four years as furnishing evidence that those in control of the State government have endeavored faithfully and impartially to encourage and stimulate education among this class of our citizens. The free public-school fund of this State is derived from three sources: (1) An annual tax of two mills on the dollar upon all the taxable property of the State. (2) An annual poll tax of $1 on each poll. (3) Local levies. The constitution of this State provides that the proceeds of the two-mill tax and of the poll tax "shall be faithfully appropriated for the purpose of establishing and maintaining free public schools, and for no other purposes or uses whatever." The total income of the school fund is about $400,000 per annum. The latest returns from this State show that there are about 230,000 children between the ages of six and sixteen years, and that the number in attendance on the public schools was about 134,000. If to the number of children of school age be added the number of illiterate persons between sixteen and twenty-one, many of whom would attend school if opportunities were afforded of doing so, it will be seen that the school fund is inadequate to supply the demand for educational facilities. Your memorialists affirm that at present, and probably for many years to come, it will not be possible to increase greatly the free public-school fund of this State, while the number of those who should be educated increases each year. Your memorialists further show that there is now in this State a free public-school system which extends its benefits to all races and classes, and which needs but a larger fund to enable it to meet all demands for public education.

For these reasons your memorialists ask your honorable bodies to provide for national aid to public education in this State in such manner as will afford speedy opportunities of instruction to the youth of our State, upon whom in a few years will devolve all the duties and responsibilities of free American citizens.

Your memorialists, believing that the provisions of "a bill to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education," introduced into the Senate by Senator M. C. BUTLER, are well adapted to promote the cause of public education, would respectfully and earnestly ask for its passage.

These memorials are signed by the justices of the supreme court, by the circuit judges, by the attorney-general of the State, the comptroller-general, the secretary of state, the superintendent of education, the treasurer, the adjutant and inspector general, the lieutenant-governor of the State, members of the State Legislature, senate and house, and the speaker of the house; also by the president and faculty of the Wofford College, by the president and faculty of the Due West College, by the president and faculty of Claflin University and the president and faculty of the South Carolina College, the mayor and aldermen of the city of Charleston, the president of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce and members of the chamber, the president of the Board of Trade of Columbia, by bank presidents and leading merchants in the State, the editors of the News and Courier and other leading papers, students of the South Carolina and Charleston Colleges, school commissioners and other county officers from every county in the State, lawyers from almost every bar, school trustees and school teachers, leading and influential citizens of all classes and pursuits, farmers, mechanics, manufacturers, doctors, teachers, editors, and ministers, in all about one thousand two hundred, "asking Congress for national aid to public education in South Carolina in such manner as will afford speedily opportunities of instruction to the youth of the State, and for the passage of Senate bill No. 394."

I had intended to submit some observations upon the bill and upon the general question of education, but the memorial which I have read expresses briefly and substantially what is required by that State at this time.

I am aware that it has been suggested—I have heard it suggested in the Senate—that in many of the Southern States the poverty of the people is exaggerated, that the assessment upon property for taxation is very much less than its real value. So far as my own State is concerned, and I have a right to speak for that aolne, I am quite sure the statement is unjust. There is a tendency all over the country, I have no doubt, to underrate the value of property for taxation, but I think not to a greater extent there than elsewhere.

I have also had prepared by the Superintendent of the Census certain schedules, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate, as containing valuable and important information upon this subject.

The memorials, which I shall ask to have referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, represent, as I have stated, the very best element in the State of South Carolina.

I should like to say further for the information of the committee and of the Senate, that we have the framework in the State of as good a system of free schools as perhaps any State in this Union. The great difficulty in realizing all that is desirable for that system is the want of money. I would state further that it is utterly impossible, without very great hardship, to call on the people to be taxed to a higher degree than they are now for school purposes. The tax of two mills on the dollar is a constitutional provision, and the fund arising from it is dedicated exclusively to common school purposes.

While the memorials ask for the passage of a particular bill, Senate bill No. 394, I think they would be equally applicable to any provision which Congress might in its wisdom see proper to pass in aid of the education of the people.

I ask that the table be published in the RECORD, and that the memorials I have had the honor to present be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The paper was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in forwarding to you herewith such of the data which you requested as can be obtained. I regret to say that I find that those who cannot read have not been tallied with respect to race, so that it is impossible to give you the number of whites and negroes who cannot read. I give you, however, a statement of the percentage of those above the age of twenty-one years who cannot write, arranged as white and colored. I also inclose the distributive share of the receipts from patent fees and sales of public lands of each State, relative to the number of those who cannot read above the age of ten years.

Hoping that the above information will serve your purpose,

I am, very respectfully,

HENRY GANNETT,
Geographer and Special Agent Tenth Census.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER, United States Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT. I present resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut relating to a navy-yard, the site for which was donated by the State of Connecticut to the United States Government, situated upon the river Thames, at New London, and urging the duty and propriety of sufficient appropriations by Congress to utilize the site for the purposes to which it was donated. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1882.

Senate joint resolution No. 57, concerning the navy-yard on the Thames.

Whereas the State of Connecticut, at the instance of the Congress of the United States, in the year 1868, presented by deed of gift to the Federal Government eighty-three acres of land with one mile of available water-front on the river Thames, to be held by the United States in trust for naval purposes; and

Whereas this site has been recommended and approved as possessing superior advantages for a great navy-yard by a board of competent officers selected by the Secretary of the Navy, by the naval committee of the House of Representatives, by a large number of distinguished naval officers, and finally by the Navy Department itself: Therefore,

Resolved by this Assembly, That the site upon the river Thames was presented to the United States in view of the great advantages which would result to the United States and incidentally to this State by the establishment of a navy-yard thereat upon a scale commensurate with its superior advantages and the wants of the country.

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from this State are requested to urge upon Congress and the naval authorities the duty and propriety of making such necessary appropriations as will utilize the site for the purposes for which it was originally donated.

Resolved, That the General Assembly deems this subject of such importance to this State and to the General Government that his excellency the governor is hereby authorized and requested to appoint a commission on the part of the State to present the views of the State to the authorities at Washington; and a sum not exceeding $1.000 is hereby appropriated to be expended under the authority of such commission for the purposes of this resolution; and that his excellency the governor be requested to cause to be sent to each Senator and Representative from this State at Washington a copy of these resolutions.

House of representatives passed February 22, 1882.
Senate concurred February 23, 1882.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
Office of Secretary of State, ss:

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of record in this office.
In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State at Hartford, this 1st day of March, A. D. 1882.

[SEAL.] CHARLES E. SEARLE,
Secretary of State.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of John C. Fremont, of Virginia, praying that his claim to the Island of Alcatrasses be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of W. H. Harrison, of Virginia, and the petition of Richard M. Harrison, of Virginia, praying pay for the occupancy of certain property occupied by the Union forces in 1865; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I present a petition of citizens of Antelope County, Nebraska, praying that favorable terms and conditions be granted for all proposed bridges across the Missouri River above Omaha. The object of the petition is to get the same liberal conditions in the charter for a bridge on the Missouri River above Omaha as have been given at Omaha and below. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce, where I think there is a bill now pending on the same subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST presented resolutions of the Cotton Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of legislation for the improvement and extension of the Signal Service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, presented two memorials of citizens of Idaho Territory, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 448, granting to John A. Post and others the right of way and other privileges to aid in the construction of a bed-rock flume in Moore's Creek and Grimes' Creek in Boise County, Idaho Territory; which were referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT. There was referred to the Committee on Patents a communication from the Secretary of War relating to the action taken by the War Department in adopting the improved canister-shot of Addison M. Sawyer, and as to the justice of compensating Mr. Sawyer for the use of his patent. The committee having had the matter under consideration, submit a report recommending that he be compensated, and also a bill for that purpose.

The bill (S. No. 1370) for the relief of Addison M. Sawyer was read twice by its title, and the accompanying report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for printing 2,000 copies of the report of Rev. Dr. Sheldon Jackson on education in Alaska, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor; which was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) directing that 10,000 copies of the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion be printed, has instructed me to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. The resolution calls for printing 10,000 additional copies of this work, of which 5,000 have already been printed, and the cost will be $125,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be postponed indefinitely if there be no objection.

Mr. CALL. Do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to report adversely on the joint resolution?

Mr. ANTHONY. The report is adverse. The printing would cost $125,000.

Mr. CALL. I hope the joint resolution will be put on the Calendar, so that we may still have it before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the Navy Register for January, 1882, be printed for the use of the Senate.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the Army Register for January, 1882, be printed for the use of the Senate.

PRINTING OF MEMORIAL CARD.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate indefinitely postponed the resolution for printing 5,000 copies of the vignette of the memorial card in honor of General Garfield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island to reconsider the action of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the object of a reconsideration? I understand that arrangements have been made by which an indefinite number of these vignettes may be printed at cost by the action of both Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the vote being reconsidered? The Chair hears none, and it is reconsidered.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution is now pending, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion to reconsider has prevailed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to consider the resolution now would be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can make an explanation of the resolution in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to consider it now, or he can wait until the morning business is concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed from the engraved plate of the memorial card prepared in honor of the late President James Abram Garfield, 5,000 copies for distribution by the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Ohio if this is not precisely the same resolution that we reconsidered a moment ago?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes. It was indefinitely postponed by consent yesterday; but upon reflection it is thought best to reconsider it and adopt it.

I will say in explanation of the resolution that it will cost but a comparative trifle to issue 5,000 copies directly to the Senate, which are all that are thought to be necessary for the Senate, as to order them by each Senator would create a great deal more work. I suppose every one familiar with the printing office knows that they could print 5,000 at a comparatively small cost, but that by small orders of tens and hundreds the cards would cost four or five cents apiece. It is thought best, therefore, to print all that are needed for the Senate at once.

The resolution was agreed to.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE DISCOVERY OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HOAR. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library, to whom were referred certain petitions of the Wisconsin Geographical Society and the Chicago Historical Society, praying Congress to appoint a joint committee to attend on the 9th of April next the commemorative service of the two-hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the mouth of the Mississippi River by La Salle, to report adversely. As it is a matter of great public interest, and the report comprises but five or six lines, I should like to have it read so that it may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, there being no objection.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on the Library, to whom were referred the petitions of the Wisconsin Geographical Society, and of the Chicago Historical Society, asking the appointment of a committee to attend the celebration on the 9th day of April, 1882, at New Orleans, of the discovery, by Robert Cavalier de La Salle, of the mouth of the Mississippi, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

The event to be commemorated is of great national and historical interest, and, as the petitioners well say, eminently worthy of national recognition. But the committee think that the two Houses of Congress ought not to require of any of their members to absent themselves from the session at a time when the public business is likely urgently to demand their presence at the seat of Government. We therefore recommend that the prayer of the petitioners be not granted.

The report was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LAPHAM asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1371) for the relief of the creditors and assigns of Norman Wiard; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1372) to refund the M. G. Emery assessments; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1373) for the relief of Thomas Evans; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1374) to extend time of payment of special assessments, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1375) for the relief and improvement of seamen in the merchant service by changing the system of advance wages; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1376) to give jurisdiction to the Court of Claims in patent cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1377) for the relief of W. S. Kimball and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GROOME asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1378) to permit the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company to extend their railroad into and within the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1379) for the relief of Henry F. Brownson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1380) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam vessels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1381) for the improvement of the Saint John's River at Mud Flats, nearly opposite Orange Mills, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

RATES OF TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. VANCE. I offer a resolution and ask its present consideration. I suppose there will be no objection to it.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to prepare for the use of the Senate a complete list of all articles embraced in the tariff laws of the United States, with the amount of duty imposed on each, stated, so as to show the actual percentage ad valorem of the duty on every article; and also a complete list of all articles which are imported free of duty.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that information is already in print. I therefore object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

Mr. BECK. There are a few copies in the Treasury Department, but they cannot be obtained except by special request.

Mr. MORRILL. Suppose the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance, and if we find the information is not in print we can report back the resolution at once

Mr. VANCE. I suppose I cannot help myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator have the resolution referred to the Committee on Finance, rather than have it lie over?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so referred.

Mr. VANCE. Very well.

SUPPLIES TO SIOUX INDIANS IN 1862.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business the morning hour is closed, and proceedings under the Anthony rule will now begin. The bill which was partially considered yesterday, being the bill (S. No. 36) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof, is first in order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Several Senators have said to me that they desire further time to examine the bill. I ask that the bill may be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent that can be done, and the Chair will so consider it, there being no objection.

HERMAN BIGGS.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire at this time to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday refused to order to a third reading the bill (S. No. 173) for the relief of Herman Biggs. I desire to say that I do so for the accommodation of the Senator from South Carolina, who desires to submit some views which he has in respect to the matter. I have no idea from the stand-point of my present information that I shall myself vote for the motion, though I enter it in order that the Senator may be heard in respect to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic is now the first in order.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will have its second reading at length. It has only been read once heretofore.

The bill was read the second time at length.

Mr. CONGER. In the absence of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] I ask that the bill be passed over this morning without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

MARCOS RADICH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 619) for the relief of Marcos Radich; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Marcos Radich, of Houston, Texas, of $440, in full for rent of house in Brownsville, Texas, by and for the use of the United States military authorities, from August 21, 1865, to March 31, 1866.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, after the words "rent of," in line 7, to strike out:

House in Brownsville, Texas, by and for the use of the United States military authorities from August 21, 1865, to March 31, 1866;

And to insert in lieu thereof:

His two buildings situate in Brownsville, Texas, one of which houses was occupied by the United States military authorities from August 21, 1865, to December 31, 1865, at the rate of $60 per month, and the other of which houses was occupied by the United States military authorities from January 1, 1866, to March 1, 1866.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I wish to suggest an amendment to the proposed amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read first.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I can state the substance of the report in a shorter time than it will take to read it. In 1865 the proper quartermaster who was in charge at Brownsville, Texas, entered into a contract with this claimant, Marcos Radich, by which he rented two certain buildings belonging to Mr. Radich, agreeing to pay a certain specified rent. The buildings were taken possession of by the military authorities under that contract and occupied by the military authorities for the length of time stated in the bill; but under the act of July 4, 1864, and the act of February 21, 1867, the Departments were prohibited from paying any sum for rent in any of the States that had seceded until the legal close of the war. This contract was made after the actual cessation of hostilities, but before the President issued his proclamation that the insurrection had been suppressed in the State of Texas, and consequently the Departments were not able to audit or pay this claim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did he not sue in the Court of Claims?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. My understanding is that the Court of Claims did not have jurisdiction of the case for the reason that the contract was made in a State that had seceded and before the legal close of the war. Vouchers were given by the proper quartermaster on the Form 22, which was used in such cases. Those vouchers are set forth at length in the report. All there is about it is that a contract was made by the proper quartermaster with the owner of these buildings, under which the United States rented and occupied the buildings at a certain specified rent; but the money stipulated was not paid, because the act of February 21, 1867, provided that the act of 1864 "shall not be construed to authorize the settlement of any claim for supplies or stores taken or furnished for the use of or used by the armies of the United States, nor for the occupation of or injury to real estate, nor for the consumption, appropriation, or destruction of or damage to personal property by the military authorities or troops of the United States, where such claim originated during the war for the suppression of the southern rebellion in a State or part of a State declared in insurrection by the proclamation of the President of the United States dated July 1, 1862."

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if it is not the fact, as shown by the papers on file, that the only obstacle in the way of the Department paying this claim was the act of 1867, which required legislation by Congress to settle that class of claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have stated that the only objection was the act of 1867, which prohibited the Department from paying claims of this class.

Mr. MAXEY. Outside of that the Department recognizes the claim as just and valid.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. All these claimants have been required to come to Congress, and in every instance, so far as I know, their claims have been favorably reported from the Committee on Claims and favorably considered by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would the Senator mind telling us why this gentleman, if he could not go before the Court of Claims, could not go before the Southern Claims Commission, and if he could, why he did not; or if he did, what became of his claim?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator from Vermont will find that the jurisdiction was taken away from the commissioners of claims to adjudicate upon the rent of real estate in the insurrectionary States.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think that was the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I guess the trouble was the loyalty question; but if we hired the property we ought to pay for it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There was no claim that he was loyal.

Mr. TELLER. In considering these cases we have never regarded the loyalty of the claimant as a matter of importance. If the Government had entered into a contract with a man who was disloyal, it has always appeared to the members of that committee who have had these matters under consideration that the Government was bound by its contract. Therefore we have, I think, invariably reported this class of claims since I have been a member of the committee, and the Senate has always recognized the propriety of paying them. These contracts are always certified here at Washington, and if not always technically approved, as they have not always been, they have always been treated as approved by the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree to the proposition that whatever promise we have made to an enemy of the United States ought to be religiously kept, for I go myself on the principle of keeping my promises to my enemies and breaking them to my friends who can stand it much better. But that undoubtedly explains the reason why this claim was not disposed of in the Department, the Court of Claims, or the southern claims commission, that this act as to the Departments cut it off, and loyalty in the southern claims commission being required it could not be proved; but it appearing from the report of the committee that this was an actual contract, made after the close of the actual hostilities, by the proper officers of the Army, I see certainly no reason why it should not be paid.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted to say a word, I put in the committee the question which the Senator from Vermont now puts, and there was in the facts some answer beside the one he has made, something very peculiar in the circumstances of the claimant. I cannot remember now the details, we have so many of these cases; but there was in addition to that some other answer which satisfied the committee, I am quite sure.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think the only answer given was that he was not a loyal man.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps I am mixing it up with another case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. HOAR. A great part of the case did not come within any jurisdiction; it was long after the war actually closed. The answer, as I remember now from hearing that amendment read, was that the last part of it did not come within the jurisdiction of the southern claims commission.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill described "one house;" the facts show that there were two houses rented, and the amendment describes the fact just as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator stated a while ago that he wished to make a further amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not think it is necessary.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL HISTORY OF THE WAR.

The bill (S. No. 885) to authorize the compilation and printing of the naval history of the war was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I believe this bill passed the Senate at the last session. The records of the military operations of both the Union and the confederate armies are now in process of compilation, and the demand for them has been so great that the number of copies ordered to be printed for sale has been exhausted, and the Committee on Printing propose to recommend to the Senate the printing of additional copies; but these records of military operations leave out entirely the naval operations. Those are as important as materials of history as the military operations, and are creditable to the valor and skill of both sides.

This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to detail a line officer of the Navy to prepare this compilation, so that there will be no expense attending the compilation; it is only the expense of printing that is involved. It seems to be perfectly just to the Navy that its prowess should be recognized in these collections of the materials of history as that of the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether an act of Congress ever provided that an officer of the line of the Army should write out this Army history that it is said is now being printed or has been printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator objects to "an officer of the line," I have no objection to striking out "line."

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I am inquiring whether any act of Congress provided that any Army officer should get up an Army history similar to this naval one that is proposed.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is in charge of an officer of the Army. That act came from the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not know whether the act prescribed that that should be done by an officer of the Army or not; but it is in charge of an officer of the Army, a very gallant and intelligent officer, Colonel Scott.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but do the documents that Colonel Scott is compiling contain any work of his own in the nature of a historical statement of what has occurred, or are they only a compilation of the war records?

Mr. ANTHONY. A compilation of the war records.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This provides for a naval history, does it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the title of the bill, but the provisions of the bill are only for a documentary history; the officer is merely to edit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the bill read again that we may find out exactly how it stands. We are a little at sea about it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be authorized and directed to detail a line officer of the Navy to compile for publication the official records of the war of the rebellion, both of the Union and confederate navies, in conjunction with the compilation of the records of the Union and confederate armies now progressing under direction of the Secretary of War according to the acts of Congress approved June 23, 1874; March 3, 1875; July 31, 1876; March 3, 1877; June 20, 1878, and March 3, 1879; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to have copied for the Public Printer all such reports, letters, orders, telegrams, findings, instructions, decisions, correspondence, and general orders, properly arranged, chronologically, as shall be essential to a complete naval history of the late conflict on both sides, excluding miscellaneous matter which has no bearing upon the discipline of the naval service, the naval operations, the organization of the blockade, and various expeditions of the naval department.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not liable to the objection that my friend from Vermont raises against it. It is a mere documentary history, and the officer detailed is only to edit the work, not prepare any original matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You had better strike out the word "line" before "officer" in line 4.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to striking out "line."

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator from Rhode Island state whether the designation of statutes in the bill is intended to refer to previous Congressional action in relation to this subject or to the subject of the compilation of the records of the Army?

Mr. ANTHONY. The records of the Army.

Mr. INGALLS. Then there is no necessity for the reciting of them in this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not see any harm in it. It is to make the compilation of the naval history identical in its manner and style with that of the Army history of the war.

Mr. INGALLS. Nor do I see any reason why this should be done "in conjunction with" the compilation of the history of the Army proceedings. This is to be an independent publication, as I understand. It seems to me the bill is open to many objections. It is inartificially drawn, cumbrous, and unwieldy. If we want to secure the compilation of these records, the statute ought to say so without referring to a dozen different statutes on another subject.

Mr. ANTHONY. The recapitulation of the statutes in regard to the compilation of the Army records is merely to provide that the Navy records shall be compiled and edited and arranged in the same manner.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have very grave doubts myself whether it was wise policy in the American Government to perpetuate the history of the war. I think it would have been fully as wise to have obliterated all the difficulties that existed between the people of this country. We have, however, published, or are publishing a history of the operations of the armies during the war, and I therefore should make no objection to seeing the operations of the Navy printed, provided I believed any history prepared at the present time could be an impartial history of the events which took place.

This, I understand, is to be strictly a compilation of official records; but I am very well satisfied that any history which comes out in reference to the war during the present generation will do injustice to military men on both sides and to naval officers and the naval service on both sides. If we preserve these records until the passions that were engendered by the war have fully subsided, and then let them be placed in the possession of some impartial historian, they may be of service; but I doubt whether any compilation now made of public records bearing on this question will be of any particular service to the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, nobody is attempting to write a history, in the ordinary popular sense of that word, of either the operations of the Army or the operations of the Navy on either side during the late war; but it is indispensable to the future historian and political student that these records, these documents, these reports, an infinite variety of them now in manuscript and more or less scattered and liable to be destroyed, should be brought together and should be printed. Of course of ninety-nine one-hundredths of them there is but a single copy in existence, and as to a great many of the others that have been printed and are to be printed they have been collected from various sources and are yet to be collected, and I will say for the satisfaction of the Senator from Delaware that there is nobody more ready to bring forward matter for these volumes than those who were engaged upon the confederate side. The leading generals of the confederacy, and their families, and their friends, and all the officers on that side from the highest to the lowest, have manifested an interest and I think I may say without an exception, a frank and free disposition to put everything within their reach at the disposal of the Government. Everything that any sensible man could say bears upon the question is to be printed. It is as near impartial as anything possibly can be. It is nothing but a photograph of the official reports, and, as I said, if they are not collected now, you are liable at any time by a fire in any one of a hundred different places to lose documents that can never be replaced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moved to strike out the words "a line" in the fourth line, before the word "officer," and insert "an," so as to read "an officer." The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to amend the title by inserting "documentary" before "history."

The motion was agreed to.

ALONZO GESNER.

The bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Alonzo Gesner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to approve for payment, if on examination he finds the surveys were made in accordance with the report and approval of the surveyor-general of the State of Oregon of date December 1, 1877, certain surveys of the public lands made by Deputy Surveyor Alonzo Gesner, to wit: townships 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 south, range 16 east of Willamette meridian, making fifty-four miles and three and nine hundredths chains of township lines and three hundred miles and sixty-one and ninety-three hundredths chains of section lines, at the rate of $7 per mile for township and $6 per mile for section lines, amounting in all to $2,182.91.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. GROVER January 18:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Alonzo Gesner, beg leave to submit the following report:

It appears from the papers in this case that Alonzo Gesner, of Oregon, on September 6, 1876, entered into a contract, No. 251, with the United States surveyor-general of Oregon to survey public lands in said State, described as follows, to wit:

Fourth standard parallel southwest, through ranges 20, 19, 18 east, to the intersection with the Des Chutes meridian; and also the exterior boundaries of townships 18, 19, 20 south, ranges 18, 19, 20 east, and townships 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 south, range 17 east; and also the subdivisional lines of townships 18, 19, 20 south, ranges 19, 20 east, and townships 18, 19 south; range 18 east, and townships 16, 17, 18 south, range 17 east, Willamette meridian, Oregon.

That on April 7, 1877, Alonzo Gesner, from his camp in the field on Bear Creek, Wasco County, Oregon, wrote to the United States surveyor-general of Oregon, calling his attention to the large settlement then being made in townships 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 south, range 16 east, and that the settlers therein were desirous of the survey of the above-described lands. That these townships contained a large area of excellent and valuable agricultural lands, and also abounded in rich mineral deposits. That being on the ground, and in view of the great expense of transporting a surveying party to this remote distance and back, Alonzo Gesner asked the United States surveyor-general of Oregon that he be permitted to proceed at once to the survey of the townships named, and that they be added to his contract of September 6, 1876; and that, feeling assured of the compliance of the said United States surveyor-general with his said request, he further stated that he should proceed at once to the survey of the exterior and subdivisional lines of said townships, trusting to secure the approval of said United States surveyor-general thereto.

That on April 19, 1877, the bondsmen of said Alonzo Gesner gave their consent that said Gesner might survey the exterior and section lines of said townships 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 south, range 16 east, amounting to 54 miles and 3.09 chains of exterior lines, and 300 miles and 61.92 chains of section lines, and which, at the rate of $7 per mile for township and $6 per mile for section lines, amounted to $2,182.91. That on August 18, 1877, said surveys were authorized by said United States surveyor-general of Oregon, upon the condition that the consent of his bondsmen be obtained, and the United States surveyor-general, deeming it to be for the best interests of the Government, asked the Commissioner of the General Land Office to approve the same. That on December 28, 1877, the United States surveyor-general for Oregon indorsed the account of said Alonzo Gesner to the Commissioner of the General Land Office as United States deputy surveyor for his said work done under his said contract of September 6, 1876, and also with the permission of his bondsmen and with his approval. All of which the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on January 23, 1878, disallowed, for the reason that the same had not been included in the original contract of Alonzo Gesner, and which had been approved by the Commissioner. That the account for the work of said deputy surveyor was approved by the surveyor-general of Oregon on December 10, 1877, and forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and is now of record in the United States Treasury Department. That the field-notes of the said surveys were duly approved by the surveyor-general December 1, 1877.

That duplicate township plats of said surveys were duly made and filed in the United States local land offices at The Dalles and Lake View, Oregon, on December 20 and December 30, 1877, respectively, and copies thereof forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. That the said township plats have never been withdrawn from the local land offices, but that the same remain on file and of record in said offices; and that the lands so surveyed are, and have been since the filing of the plats, subject to entry as public lands under the laws of the United States. That said surveys amount to 54 miles 3 chains and 9 links of township lines, and 300 miles 61 chains and 92 links of section lines; and which, at $7 per mile for township lines and $6 per mile for section lines, amounts to the sum of $2,182.91; and which amount is still unpaid and claimed as due said Alonzo Gesner on account of said surveys. That a bill for the payment of the amount due Alonzo Gesner (S. No. 734) passed the Senate on June 19, 1878, (see Senate Journal, second session Forty-fifth Congress, page 779, June 19, 1878;) and which bill was thereafter referred to the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, by it favorably considered, and by it ordered to be favorably reported to the House with a recommendation that it should pass, but which report failed to be made to the House in time to be acted upon during the Forty-fifth Congress. That the amount as stated in said Senate bill No. 734 was $3,033.27; but that since the date of the introduction of the pending bill there has been paid of said amount the sum of $850.36 for the survey of two townships, in pursuance of the original contract and certain substitutions thereunder, leaving still unpaid the sum of $2,182.91 on account of said surveys.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment in line 13, by striking out "ninety-three" and inserting "ninety-two," to make the bill correspond to the actual survey.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by inserting in line 7, after the word "seventy-seven, "and have become lawful surveys;" so as to read:

If on examination he finds the surveys were made in accordance with the report and approval of the surveyor-general of the State of Oregon of date December 1, 1877, and have become lawful surveys, &c.

The object is not to pay for this work if it was done in such a way that under the law it is entirely lost to the United States, and that the surveys cannot be used by the United States as lawful surveys. I presume there will be no objection to that.

Mr. GROVER. There is no objection to the amendment proposed, as the lands are now treated as lawfully surveyed and settlers are occupying them under the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment of the Committee on Public Lands, which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands is, in line 13, after the word "and," to strike out "ninety-three" and insert "ninety-two;" so as to make the clause read:

Making fifty-four miles and three and nine hundredths chains of township lines and three hundred miles and sixty-one and ninety-two hundredths chains of section lines, at the rate of $7 per mile for township and $6 per mile for section lines, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The bill (S. No. 900) to amend the laws in relation to the jurisdiction of courts of the United States was announced as being the next bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask to have that bill passed by without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done if there be no objection. The next case will be called.

COMMERCIAL EMPLOYÉS AND SERVANTS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 901) to protect employés and servants engaged in foreign and interstate commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish that bill read the second time and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

ELECTION OF JUDGES.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 25) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, so as to provide for the election of certain judges of the United States by the people and their removal from office for disability.

Mr. GEORGE. I want that resolution passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

ELECTION OF CERTAIN OFFICERS.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 26) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of certain officers by the people.

Mr. GEORGE. Let that be passed over in the same way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that course.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled, "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee."

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1302) to amend section 4458 of the Revised Statutes, relating to license fees of officers of steam vessels, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ELLEN MOORE.

The bill (S. No. 643) for the relief of Ellen Moore, widow of Allen Moore, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to inscribe on the rolls of the War Department the name of Allen Moore as a private in the company of Captain Moffatt, Palmetto Regiment, South Carolina Volunteers, Mexican war, and as having been mortally wounded at the battle of Churubusco on the 20th of August, 1847.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAMPTON January 19, 1882:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 643) for the relief of Ellen Moore, widow of Allen Moore, deceased, beg leave to report:

That a full examination of the papers submitted in this case shows the following facts: there is no record of the enlistment of Allen Moore, and his name does not appear on the muster-roll of Company C, Captain Moffatt, Palmetto Regiment; but there is abundant proof adduced to show that he did serve in that company, and that he was mortally wounded at the battle of Churubusco, dying from his wounds in a few days after the fight. A synopsis of the testimony under oath establishing these facts is hereby submitted. James Lacey, who was acting a body-servant to Lieutenant-Colonel Dickinson, Palmetto Regiment, testifies that he knew Moore for many years prior to the Mexican war; that he knew that he was a member of Captain Moffatt's company; that "he saw said Allen Moore just after the battle of Churubusco in a dying condition, the result of wounds received in that battle, and that in a day or two thereafter he saw the dead body of said Allen Moore, he having died from said wounds received by him while in the discharge of his duty as a member of said company and regiment."

Stephen M. Boykin, lieutenant in Company A, Palmetto Regiment, swears that "there was a private in Captain Moffatt's company (C) of said regiment by the name of Moore." Benjamin F. Speay swears "that he was a member of Captain Moffatt's company, (C,) Palmetto Regiment, Mexican war; * * * that he knew Allen Moore, the husband of the above-named Ellen Moore; that he was a private in the same company with deponent; * * * he did not see Allen Moore after the battle of Churubusco, and the general report of his death in the line of his duty he has not a doubt is entirely true." Henry Mevely, a private in the regiment, testifies that he knew Allen Moore well, and knows that he was mustered into service in Captain Moffatt's company in Charleston; that he was wounded at Churubusco or Contreras, and that he never was with the regiment afterward. Zachariah Cautey testifies "that he was a member of the Palmetto Regiment in the Mexican war, he having left home as a member of Captain Moffatt's company, and subsequently appointed color-sergeant of said regiment; that Allen Moore was a member of said company." Ransom L. Logan swears "that he was a member of Captain Moffatt's company, Palmetto Regiment; that Allen Moore, the husband of the above-named Ellen Moore, was a private in said company; * * * that deponent saw him as he was borne from the battle-field of Churubusco mortally wounded." James J. Villepigne, another member of Moffatt's company, testifies to the fact that Moore belonged to the same company. There were many other affidavits to the same general effect before the committee, and they are among the papers accompanying this report, but are not quoted, as the evidence given is deemed sufficient to prove Moore's service and death. Three affidavits have been lost or mislaid, among them one from John Graham, who saw Moore buried.

Joseph B. Kershaw, a lieutenant in the Palmetto Regiment, subsequently a major-general in the confederate service, and now one of the circuit judges of South Carolina, in his testimony, speaks of Moore "as a member of the Palmetto Regiment," and says that "he knew personally and well the men who made affidavit in support of said application; that they were and are men of the highest character and veracity, and as such entitled to full faith and credit, and that he has entire confidence in the merit and justice of said claim." The evidence submitted proves conclusively that Allen Moore served as a private in the Palmetto Regiment, and that he was killed at Churubusco. The only flaw in the claim of his widow for a pension arises from the fact that her husband's name has not been found on the muster-roll of his company; but this fact should not bar her just and equitable claim to the pittance earned by her husband's death. He gave his life to his country on one of its bloodiest and most glorious battle-fields, and she now, at the advanced age of seventy-five years, will be forced, should her petition be declined, to seek refuge in the poor-house of the county in which her husband left her when he volunteered to defend the honor of his country.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill without amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator who reported this bill whether its purpose was to do anything more than to enable the widow of the soldier named to obtain a pension after the passage of the act?

Mr. HAMPTON. That was the object of it.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I would suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as other consequences might ensue from the passage of this bill, and as it establishes a precedent that might perhaps be dangerous, that the bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting:

That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to inscribe upon the pension-roll the name of Ellen Moore, widow of Allen Moore, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HAMPTON. I should be perfectly willing to accept that amendment, for the only object of the bill was to enable this woman to apply for a pension. This bill does not give her a pension, but the facts of the case are that her husband was a member of the Palmetto Regiment; that in the lapse of time his name is not to be found on the roll, but the testimony before the committee was overwhelming that he was a member of the regiment, that he had been regularly mustered in, that he was killed at Cherubusco, and when his widow applied for a pension she was met by the fact that his name not appearing on the roll, the Pension Office could not consider the case. The testimony was conclusive, and I wish to state to the Senate that since this report was sent in I have received a letter from the county in which she is living, saying that this poor old woman has now made application to be admitted into the poorhouse. If the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas will meet the case I am perfectly willing to accept it, the object of the bill being to enable Mrs. Moore to obtain a pension.

Mr. INGALLS. Upon the statement of the Senator that the facts set forth in the report were satisfactorily established, there can be no doubt of the propriety of the adoption of my amendment, which I ask may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to inscribe on the pension-roll the name of Ellen Moore, widow of Allan Moore of Company C, Palmetto Regiment, South Carolina Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act, at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMPTON. Do I understand the Senator by his amendment proposes that the pension be paid only from the passage of the act?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMPTON. If she is entitled to a pension she certainly should have it from the time of the death of the soldier.

Mr. INGALLS. If that is the desire of the Senator, I shall certainly withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HAMPTON. Very well; I suppose I must take it as it is.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPENCER AND MEAD.

The bill (S. No. 412) for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to require the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, late of the firm of Spencer & Mead, whatever sum, if any, he may find due, not exceeding $7,509.83, out of any money due and owing, or that may at any time hereafter become due and owing, the Kansas tribe of Indians, in the State of Kansas, from the proceeds arising from the sale of lands owned by that tribe in Kansas, in full compensation for the goods and provisions furnished those Indians by Spencer & Mead during the years 1866 and 1867.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report in that case?

Mr. COKE. There is a report, and I ask that it be read.

Mr. INGALLS. The reading of that report will consume more than the time remaining of the morning hour, and if the Senator will permit me to make a very brief statement, it is possible he may be willing to allow the bill to pass with the printing of the report in the RECORD.

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. These parties, James R. Mead and Joab Spencer, furnished certain supplies to the Kansas tribe of Indians in the winter of 1866–'67. Their account has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and a bill for their relief has twice passed Congress in one House or the other. It was once passed by both Houses and went to the President, who vetoed it upon the ground not that the account was unjust, but that the amount named in the bill that came before him was larger than it should be, and contained some items that ought not to have been allowed. In pursuance of his recommendation the bill again went before the committee, was submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, the objectionable items were stricken out and the account that is now presented has the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, the agent of the Indians, the Indians themselves as expressed repeatedly in open council, and is to be paid not out of the Treasury but out of funds that may be received hereafter from the sale of certain lands of theirs now lying in the State of Kansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the amount?

Mr. INGALLS. The amount is $7,509.83.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGALLS. If desired the report may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 412, for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, for supplies furnished the Kansas tribe of Indians, beg leave, after full consideration of the facts and testimony in the case, which are clearly set forth in Report No. 72, Forty-sixth Congress, third session, of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, which report is hereunto annexed and adopted as the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, to report the bill back favorably, and recommend its passage.

[H. R. Report No. 72, Forty-sixth Congress, third session.]

Mr. HASKELL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 6854:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the claim for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, for supplies furnished the Kansas tribe of Indians, respectfully submit the following report:

On the 12th of March, 1878, Mr. Beebe, from this committee, reported as follows:

"This claim was carefully considered during the last two Congresses. On February 9, 1874, Hon. D. P. Lowe, then a member of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, in behalf of his said committee, submitted the following report:

"'Joab Spencer and James R. Mead were authorized Indian traders with the Kansas Indians, and in 1866 and 1867 furnished to the Indians of the tribe the provisions and goods for which payment is sought. An itemized and verified account of the articles accompanies the claim and proofs. It appears that the articles were furnished in the years 1866 and 1867; that the annual hunt of the tribe in the fall of 1866 was entirely unsuccessful, owing principally to the hostility of Cheyenne Indians, and the tribe were compelled to resort to unusual purchases, which could not be met by their ordinary annuities. The payment of the claim in the sum of $7,509.83, with interest, is asked for by the Indians in a petition of its chiefs and headmen. E. S. Stover, the agent of the tribe, in a report to Thomas Murphy, superintendent of Indian affairs, of November 15, 1867, speaking of the accounts, says: "I have also examined and am satisfied of their correctness, and that they should be paid. The Indians also acknowledge the correctness of the claim, and request the Government to pay it out of any moneys except their regular annuities."

"'Thomas Murphy, superintendent of Indian affairs, in a communication to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, says: "I believe the account of Spencer & Mead to be correct and just * * * and respectfully refer the matter to the Department, with the recommendation that the account be paid out of any funds applicable for that purpose."

"'The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in a report upon the case, says: "From the papers presented in the claim, I am satisfied that the articles named in the account were actually furnished, and that the claimants, Messrs. Spencer & Mead, have a just claim for the amount thereof, and should be paid."

"'The Committee are of the opinion that the correctness and justice of the account are fully established by unquestionable proofs, and that payment should be made as provided in the bill. It appears that the lands in Kansas reserved for these Indians, being over 117,000 acres, are being sold for their benefit under an act of Congress of 1872, from which an ample fund will be derived for the subsistence and civilization of these Indians, and to pay all their obligations; and the effect of this bill will be to enable payment to be made of this claim out of the funds of the Indians, and as requested by themselves.

"'The committee recommend that the bill do pass.'

"During the Forty-third Congress a bill, of which the following is a copy, passed both the House and Senate:

"'Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, or cause to be paid, to Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, late the firm of Spencer & Mead, the sum of $7,509.83, and interest on said sum at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 6th day of August, 1867, until paid, out of any money now due and owing, or that may at any time hereafter become due and owing, the Kansas tribe of Indians in the State of Kansas, from the proceeds arising from the sale of lands owned by said tribe of Indians in the State of Kansas, in full compensation for the goods and provisions furnished said Indians by said Spencer & Mead during the years 1866 and 1867.

"'Passed the House of Representatives February 27, 1874.

"'Attest:

"'EDWARD MCPHERSON, Clerk.'

"The foregoing bill failed to become a law in consequence of the President's returning it without his approval, for the reasons stated in his message, of which the following is a copy:

"'To the House of Representatives:

"'I return herewith, without my signature, a bill (H. R. No. 1331) entitled "An act for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, for supplies furnished the Kansas tribe of Indians.

"'I withhold my approval of said bill for reasons which satisfy me that the claim should not be allowed for the entire amount stated in the bill, and which are set forth in the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, dated the 7th instant, a copy of which, with its accompanying papers, is herewith transmitted.

"'SIR: I have the honor to return herewith engrossed bill H. R. No. 1331, entitled "An act for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, for supplies furnished the Kansas tribe of Indians," and to state that said bill was the subject of a report made to the Department by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the 11th ultimo, with which he submitted letters from Enoch Hoag, superintendent of Indian affairs, and Mahlon Stubbs, Indian agent, representing that the justness and correctness of the claim of Spencer & Mead had not been established, and suggesting that further proceeding in the premises be deferred until a thorough investigation of the facts and circumstances of the case could be had.

"'The suggestion of the Indian agent received the concurrence of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the approval of this Department, and on the 17th ultimo the attention of Congress was invited to the subject in a letter addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Interior. At the latter date the bill appears to have been pending in the Senate, of which fact this Department at that time was not informed.

"'On the 5th instant the engrossed bill (H. R. No. 1331) was received by reference from the Executive Office and forwarded to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for a further report on the subject, and on the 6th instant that officer returned said bill to this Department, with a letter presenting his views in relation to the matter, and suggesting that the rights of the Indians and of Messrs. Spencer & Mead would be fully protected by a modification of the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay such amount of their claim as might be found to be due. The suggestion meets the approval of this Department.

"'Copies of the papers connected with this claim are herewith submitted.

"'I also present, in connection with the above, a letter from Superintendent Hoag of the 2d instant, inclosing a report from the agent having immediate charge of said Indians, Mr. Mahlon Stubbs, by which it will appear that the justness and correctness of said claim have not been established.

"'The agent's suggestion that further proceedings in the premises be deferred until a thorough investigation of the facts and circumstances of the case can be had is concurred in by this office.

"'SIR: A bill (H. R. No. 1331) "for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, for supplies furnished the Kansas tribe of Indians," is now pending before Congress, which requires the Secretary of the Interior to pay, or cause to be paid, to said parties the sum of $7,509.83, and interest on said sum at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 6th day of August, 1867, until paid, out of any money now due or owing, or that may at any time hereafter become due and owing, the Kansas tribe of Indians, in the State of Kansas, from the proceeds arising from the sale of lands owned by the said tribe of Indians in said State of Kansas, in full compensation for the goods and provisions furnished said Indians by said Spencer & Mead during the years 1866 and 1867.

"'The suggestion of the agent, concurred in by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that further proceedings in the premises be suspended until a thorough investigation of the facts and circumstances of the case can be had, meets the approval of this Department, and the attention of Congress is respectfully invited to the subject.

"'The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

"'DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"'OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
"'Washington, D. C., May 6, 1874.

"'SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed bill of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, providing that the sum of $7,509.83, and interest at 7 per cent., be paid to Spencer & Mead out of the fund belonging to the Kansas tribe of Indians, for goods furnished by said Spencer & Mead, and also to invite attention to the inclosed correspondence between this office and Superintendent Hoag and Agent Stubbs. While the bill was pending in Congress, Agent Stubbs's attention was called to it by Superintendent Hoag, and in reply he states his reasons why action provided in the bill should not be taken until further investigation is made as to the correctness of the claim against the tribe. From the statement of Agent Stubbs there seems to be considerable doubt as to the entire correctness and justness of this bill; and while there is no question but that there may be indebtedness on the part of the Indians to this firm, the amount of such indebtedness should not be fixed in this summary manner.

"'If the bill can be so modified as to allow the Secretary of the Interior to pay such amount thereof as may be found due, it is believed that the rights of both the Indians and traders will be fully protected.

"'Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"'Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.'

"Upon the receipt of the above-mentioned message of the President, the claim was again referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which instructed Mr. Lowe to make the following report:

"'The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the message from the President of the United States, returning, without his approval, the bill (H. R. 1331) for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, for supplies furnished the Kansas tribe of Indians, submit the following report:

"'The message of the President gives the following as his reason for returning the bill: "I withold my approval of said bill for reasons which satisfy me that the claim should not be allowed for the entire amount stated in the bill, and which are set forth in the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, dated 7th instant, a copy of which, with its accompanying papers, is herewith transmitted."

"'From the papers accompanying the President's message it appears that, from communications made to the Secretary of the Interior subsequent to the passage of the bill through the House, doubt in his mind was thrown upon the correctness of some of the items of the original claim in respect to which relief was sought, and the Acting Secretary, in his communication to the President, suggests "that the rights of the Indians and of Messrs. Spencer & Mead would be fully protected by a modification of the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay such amount of their claim as might be found to be due." For the nature of the original claim, and the evidence upon which it is founded, your committee refer to the former report upon said bill by this committee, being House Report No. 93 of the present session. It appears that the claim had been approved by the chiefs and headmen of the tribe, by the agent of the tribe, by the superintendent of the superintendency within which the tribe was, by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and by the Secretary of the Interior. Your committee, believing that the claim is substantially just, believe that the rights of the claimants and the Indians will be secured by leaving the amount due upon the original account to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior upon the evidence and any further facts that may be shown; and they therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill as a substitute for the former bill, authorizing the Secretary to pay out of the proper tribal fund to the claimants such amount as may be found due, with interest.'

"The following is a copy of the bill thereupon reported by the committee:

"'Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, or cause to be paid, to Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, late the firm of Spencer & Mead, whatever sum he may find due, not exceeding the sum of $7,509.83, and interest on said sum at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 6th day of August, 1867, until paid, out of any money due and owing, or that may at any time hereafter become due and owing, the Kansas tribe of Indians in the State of Kansas from the proceeds arising from the sale of lands owned by said tribe of Indians in said State of Kansas, in full compensation for the goods and provisions furnished said Indians by said Spencer & Mead during the years 1866 and 1867.'

"The foregoing bill was on the House Calendar at the close of the then session of Congress, but was not reached for any action. In this condition this claim was reintroduced during the Forty-fourth Congress. Enoch Hoag, superintendent of Indian affairs, meantime sent to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs an important communication, of which the following is a copy:

"'OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, CENTRAL SUPERINTENDENCY,
"'Lawrence, Kansas, Twelfthmonth 21, 1875.

"'Hon. J. Q. SMITH, Commissioner:

"'I invite attention to a claim of Spencer & Mead, as indicated in printed report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, No. 93, accompanying House bill No. 1331, Forty-third Congress, first session. Said report refers clearly to all the necessary papers bearing upon the claim; embracing the indorsements of ex-Superintendent Thomas Murphy, ex-Agents Stover and Farnsworth, and the Indians. I recommend that Congress be asked to make provision to pay to the claimants such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may find to be justly due.

"'Very respectfully,

"'ENOCH HOAG,
"'Superintendent Indian Affairs.'

"On the 7th of July, 1876, Mr. Boone, from the House Committee on Indian Affairs, by the direction of that committee, submitted a report upon this claim, which, after setting forth the foregoing facts, concluded as follows:

"'Your committee find the facts in this case correctly stated in the two foregoing committee reports, made during last Congress, and as Messrs. Spencer & Mead are willing to resubmit their claim for the reinvestigation of the Secretary of the Interior, and as this action has been recommended by the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and the present superintendent of Indian affairs, having charge of the Kansas tribe of Indians, and the payment of this claim will not take any money out of the United States Treasury, and as the said Kansas tribe of Indians have asked to have their above-mentioned indebtedness paid, with interest, out of their own money, your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay, out of the proper tribal fund, to the claimants such amount as he may find due with interest.'

"The present bill is identical with the one last above referred to, and after a careful examination of all the facts we fully concur with the conclusions reached by the committee of the last House. We, therefore, report this bill back to the House, and respectfully recommend its passage."

Your committee find the facts in this case correctly stated in the foregoing committee reports, and after a careful examination of all the facts fully concur with conclusions reached by former committees of the House, with certain amendments noted on the bill.

LICENSE FEES OF STEAM-VESSEL OFFICERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 383) to amend section 4458 of the Revised Statutes, relating to license fees of officers of steam-vessels, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know in what respect that changes the existing law, and what the necessity is for the change?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It reduces the license of the officers mentioned therein from $5 to fifty cents. There is accompanying the bill a letter from the Treasury Department, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be sent for; it is in the Secretary's office. There is no report with the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not ask for the reading of the letter.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4185) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 4283) for the relief of Susan Marshall Massie was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

STATUE OF CHIEF-JUSTICE MARSHALL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, on which the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from California to yield to me to call up a bill to provide for the erection of a statue to Chief-Justice Marshall, which, if it excites a word of debate or a single objection, I shall allow to be passed over. I should like to have it acted on now. It will take but a moment's time, I think.

Mr. FARLEY. I will say to the honorable Senator from Ohio that my colleague, a number of other Senators and myself are very anxious to have the Chinese bill disposed of to-day, if possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. If this takes more than a minute I will not insist.

Mr. FARLEY. Then I accept the Senator's proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily for the consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a desire to have this statue set on foot at once. The bill is reported unanimously by the Committee on the Library. It was introduced by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] and I am sure there will be no objection. If there is, I shall not ask for the delay of the regular order.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 578) to authorize the erection of a statue of Chief-Justice Marshall.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives do appoint a joint committee of three Senators and three Representatives with authority to contract for and erect a statue to the memory of Chief-Justice John Marshall, formerly of the Supreme Court of the United States; that said statue shall be placed in a suitable public reservation, to be designated by said joint committee, in the city of Washington; and for said purpose the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DENVER A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. The Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] has kindly consented to allow me a few minutes to call up a bill which came over from the House a day or two ago and is now lying on the Secretary's desk. It is House bill No. 2192.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2192) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is now on the Calendar a Senate bill on the same subject, being the bill (S. No. 30) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado, which will be indefinitely postponed if there be no objection.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I was about to suggest that that be done.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1302) to amend section 4458 of the Revised Statutes, relating to license fees of officers of steam-vessels, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior dated the 2d instant, with accompanying papers, submitting an estimate of appropriation for the payment of expenses of removal of certain Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory.

The subject is presented for the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 3, 1882.

He also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting plans and estimates for the large military post proposed to be constructed at Fort Selden, New Mexico.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 3, 1882.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from California to state that immediately after the vote on the bill on which he is entitled to the floor, I shall call up for action and passage the bill (S. No. 930) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the Confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1881.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can determine the matter at that time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I give notice that I shall ask to have the bill considered at that time.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a very short time this morning. Were it not for the importance that the whole Pacific coast attaches to this measure, I should not trespass upon the time of the Senate at all; but this question is one that the people of the entire Pacific coast feel a deep interest in having some action taken upon by the Congress of the United States. As I remarked yesterday, there is a unanimity of sentiment there that is perhaps unprecedented on any one subject that has ever agitated this or any other country. It is one that strikes at the very foundation of what we believe to be the prosperity of the people of that coast. Such is the feeling of the people of the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and the Territories bordering on the Pacific slope. We believe that unless some legislative action is had prohibiting the further immigration of this class of people our coast will be to a very great extent left without that protection which the Government owes to every portion of the territory of the United States. We ask for this legislation also because it is in accordance with the terms of a stipulation in the recent treaty with the Government of China.

The Government of the United States, as has been properly said by the Senator from Massachusetts and others, has guaranteed to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and in order to protect the citizens of these States the strong arm of the General Government must be extended there to establish and carry out that right. If the immigration of Chinese to the Pacific coast in the numbers they have been coming for the last few years shall continue, those States will come to be anything else than republican forms of government. The strong arm of the law of the State, its constitution, cannot protect us; and hence we appeal to the right that Congress has under the present treaty between the two countries. Men and women who depend upon their every-day labor for a living to support their families, to provide a comfortable home or a place to sleep and something to eat, cannot afford and will not submit to the innovation upon their rights by this class of people.

Some Senators who are opposing this measure tell us that the introduction of this class of labor into California has been a benefit to that State. To some individuals that may be true; but to the great mass of the people, to the laboring classes of the people, to the producers of the country, it is not true. It has been a drawback to the best interests of that State. It has prevented immigrants from other countries from finding a home on the Pacific coast. Hundreds and hundreds of people you may meet on this side of the mountains who inquire why it is that foreign immigrants are not more numerous on the Pacific coast than they are to-day, and the answer given universally is that it is on account of the presence of the Chinese laboring class in that region.

Why, sir, I was somewhat astonished at the honorable Senator from Massachusetts the other day when he said that the Californians, using the expression of the lawyer, were estopped from setting up any right to oppose the immigration of this class of people there. How estopped? He said that California owed her place in the Union to the first great conflict with slavery. It is unfortunate for that Senator and unfortunate for his party, if they take the ground that the admission of California into this Union was caused by the conflict in reference to the slavery question, or that that agitation could have caused her rejection. The language of the Senator was this:

> California, herself owing her place in our Union to the first victory of freedom in the great contest with African slavery, is pledged to repudiate this modern heresy.

California was admitted into the Union in 1850. It is true that she was admitted with a constitution that had been adopted with great unanimity by her delegates assembled in the convention that framed the constitution, excluding slavery from her limits. A large majority of the delegates in that convention were men from Southern States, who in looking over the condition of California at the time did not believe that her population, that her soil, that the products of the country, that the general interests of the coast required the institution of slavery to be incorporated in their constitution. They came here and asked for admission with a constitution especially prohibiting slavery. It is true that a contest arose in the Congress of the United States and that contest brought about what were known as the compromise measures of 1850. The great constitutional expounder of the State which my friend, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, now represents, Mr. Webster, advocated the compromise measures of 1850 and voted for the provisions of that compromise, for which he brought down upon his head in the State of Massachusetts the condemnation of a very large portion of his constituents, and they even went so far as to refuse to allow him to address the people in old Faneuil Hall, where he had so often spoken before.

Now, sir, I say to that Senator, and to others who take the view of this subject he takes, that men who were so clamorous against what was known as African slavery in the United States, saying that it was demoralizing in its effects, that it was a relic of barbarism, that it was preventing the improvement and the advancement of those States where it existed, ought not now to sustain Chinese labor in our country. It comes with bad grace from gentlemen who took that ground in reference to African slavery, to stand up here now and say that the Chinese population shall be allowed to inundate the Pacific coast, when we all know that they are used as slaves by those who bring them to this country, that their labor is for the benefit of those who practically own them.

The great crime of slavery, it was charged, was in preventing young men of the North and the intelligent men of Europe from going down into the Southern States and finding a home, because they could not compete with slave labor. Does not that same reason, only to a very much greater extent, prevail to-day on the Pacific coast in reference to the Chinese laborers on that coast? They pretend to be free laborers; but are they? What are known as the Six Companies on that coast are those who control the Chinese; who make contracts with large contractors to build railroads, to dig canals, to undertake general improvements. Some wealthy men, men of great enterprise, against whom I have nothing personally to say, have endeavored to fasten upon the laboring classes of that coast this incubus under which the laboring men have suffered for the last fifteen or twenty years.

Now, sir, in order to sustain the position I have taken in reference to this matter, I will read from the report made by a committee of Congress the testimony of a very intelligent gentleman that was taken before that committee; and, by the way, I do not see the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in his seat.

Mr. DAWES. I was just going to suggest to the Senator that my colleague was temporarily called away.

Mr. FARLEY. It makes no difference, as I only propose to read from the report of the committee of Congress of which Senator Morton was chairman the report made by Senator Sargent on the part of the majority.

Mr. DAWES. I did not suppose the Senator meant anything personal to my colleague.

Mr. FARLEY. There is nothing personal in my remarks.

Mr. DAWES. I was not apprehensive that the Senator would be personal. I simply desired to call his attention to the fact that my colleague was absent, and that, therefore, would explain the absence of any reply at this time.

Mr. FARLEY. I am simply pursuing the line of debate I have marked out.

Mr. DAWES. I wished merely to have it understood that the absence of a reply to any interrogatories the Senator may put arose from the fact that my colleague was out of the Chamber. That was all. I do not mean by this interruption to intimate that the Senator is pursuing any unusual or improper course.

Mr. FARLEY. In order to sustain the position I take in reference to the question of the Chinese population on our coast being somewhat of a similar character to the slave labor in the Southern States, I propose to read from that report the testimony of a very intelligent gentleman, and a gentleman who belongs to the same political party that my friend from Massachusetts belongs to. I read from the testimony taken before that committee of Mr. Frank M. Pixley, in which, to the question being propounded to him by Senator Cooper—

You illustrated the effect of Chinese immigration by the State of Virginia and the immigration of the African race. Was the effect there to reduce the civilization of Virginia to the African standard?

Mr. Pixley answered:

No, it was not.
Q. Why?
A. Because it grew there very slowly in Virginia. I will not undertake to give the statistics; but, as I say, it was nearly a hundred years in growing there as it has grown here in ten years. You know how slow and imperceptible the growth of slavery was; but in the mean while the increase of the white population of Virginia was more rapid than that of California. It has been a long distance to get whites out here, and now we bring Chinamen for $12 a piece, and we bring them from a hive where there are 400,000,000.
Q. Suppose you should treble the population of the inferior race, do you think the higher civilization would be brought down, or would the lower civilization be elevated by contact?
A. I have some peculiar views upon that point. I have an idea that the poorest Mexican who comes here, the most ignorant and illiterate belonging to my race, has the same rights and the same authority to become himself a leader. I have no more right to keep him under me than he has to keep me under him. I would elevate the whole. I would not have a condition of things here as in India.

That was the testimony of Mr. Pixley, a man of great investigation, a fine lawyer, a man who has been attorney-general of the State of California and United States district attorney under the Republican administration under Mr. Lincoln, and his whole investigation of this subject and all the testimony he gave before that committee goes to the point I made a moment ago, that it is a similar institution so far as demoralization is concerned, only more so, in my own private judgment, than was the institution of slavery in any of the Southern States. Yet we are met here with an opposition to this bill which, though great in intellectual power, I do not think is very great in number.

Further, in regard to the testimony taken before that committee as to the conflict between the laboring classes, the white men and women of that coast and the Chinese, my immediate predecessor, Senator Sargent, who was as anxious upon this subject, who took as deep an interest in the passage of a law to prohibit this immigration as my colleague and myself, was a member of that committee, and he put this question to a witness:

I have here a petition sent to this commission, or a member of it, signed by fifty-nine working women. I should like to read you some of the statements in this petition, to see if your judgment differs from the statements which I shall read to you.
A. Very well.
Senator SARGENT. It is as follows:

"SAN FRANCISCO, November 15, 1876.

"We, the undersigned, sewing-women of San Francisco, present this petition to you in the hope that you will be pleased to forward our views in regard to the much-argued question of Chinese labor. We as a class of respectable and working women are treated by our employers worse than the Chinese, inasmuch as we cannot live by the labor of our hands and compete with the Chinese. Their expenses and habits differ materially from ours, a great many of us having large families to support, and we cannot stoop to live in squalid and ill-ventilated rooms, where a Chinaman can live in luxury for from twenty-five to thirty cents per day. Manufacturers taking advantage of us, being unprotected and therefore at their mercy, place labor so low that it is almost impossible to get a living, even by working at these prices. The prices are as follows:"

Then they go on and enumerate work upon ladies' apparel:

"Chemise trimmed handsomely, &c., sixty-five cents per dozen; ladies' wrappers, twenty cents each, and all other underwear in proportion.
"Remember that two-thirds of us are American women, Christians, and not heathen, and draw some distinction between them and us.
"That the Chinese are ruining all business (where decent women and men could support their families) by underworking, and thereby letting the manufacturer get all the benefit of it, and our children running the streets for want of employment, to be in a little while either dependent on the Magdalen Asylum or the Industrial School for their education.
"We therefore ask for your kind co-operation in forwarding this petition, and holding it up as a banner hoisted against white slavery, that our labor may not be in vain, which it will if not upheld and protected by the laws of civilization, and respect for our own people, in preference to Chinese.
"Yours, respectfully,
"The undersigned working women of San Francisco."

Amounting to fifty-nine in number.

Such expressions as these are universal in San Francisco and in other portions of the State of California. This population has permeated every village and hamlet in the State. You can visit no town in the State but what you find there a Chinese quarter, a Chinese population, with a sign up "Laundrying," and signs for other work which the poor women of the towns and villages had made a livelihood for themselves and their children by following, but who have been driven out of that employment by the Chinese. What is to be the result? Where are these poor women to go? What are we to do for them? Are they not to be protected against this class of people? Does the honorable Senator say that our own race and our own people, the white people of the country if you please, shall be driven out of employment, out of existence, by a heathen nation of people who are coming among us every day, and that no law is to be passed to protect our people from the innovation?

It may be humanitarian indeed, but it is humanitarian against the American people and in favor of a race that we know nothing of, and ought to have nothing to do with, so far as competing with our own people is concerned. The humanitarian part of the argument, then, falls to the ground. Humanitarian to whom and to what? To the Chinese, and not to our own people. Such is the position taken by those who oppose legislation upon this subject.

Mr. President, I took up much of the time of the Senate yesterday in attempting to answer some of the points or arguments made by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] whom I now see in his seat. So far as I am concerned individually, as I said before, I have no doubt about the passage of this bill. Our people are to-day and for months past have been holding public meetings and demonstrations in favor of the passage of this bill or some legislation that will protect them from these people. It is a well-known fact that the Chinese are not an ignorant class of people. I do not claim that they are. They are very cunning; they are very shrewd. They are imitators; they are not inventors. They can imitate anything. As soon as this treaty was entered into between the two countries——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if the Chinese did not invent the printing-press, gun-powder, and the mariner's compass?

Mr. FARLEY. In reference to those inventions, perhaps the Senator may be right, but I am speaking of those Chinese who come to California. It is not educated Chinese who come to California.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. The Senator from Massachusetts has asked if Chinamen did not invent gun-powder and the printing-press. In reply to that, I can say to him that the very best authority denies to them the honor of those inventions. The Count de Gobineau, in his very able History of the Diversity of the Races, absolutely lays it down, and, I think, conclusively proves that they had nothing to do with those inventions, but stole them from stray Aryan Caucasian people who had wandered into their midst.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator add to the astonishing piece of information he has given the Senate, who were those marvelous Aryan people who wandered down into China and proceeded to invent the printing-press and discover the mariner's compass and invent gunpowder?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I do not know that I can state to the Senator who the Aryans were, but it is most distinctly shown that in the arts the Chinese were constantly supplied with ideas by their Aryan neighbors, and they never invented any thing themselves. It is a well-known fact that the Chinese have been in a state of general decadence for the last five hundred years. Their pottery, their porcelain, and all their other arts are in a very low state compared to what we know they were five hundred years ago. They have been constantly deteriorating in arts and manufactures.

Mr. FARLEY. I desire to make a suggestion to my friend, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. I know that he has claimed upon this floor and elsewhere to be the devoted and attached friend of the colored people of the country. I ask him and all others who are to-day advocating the unlimited immigration of Chinese into this country what effect it would have upon the colored people of the Southern States if Chinamen were to come here and be located throughout the various Southern States of the Union where the colored population is largely in the majority, and where it forms the laboring class? What effect would it have upon those people to commingle with them the Chinese? Would it not have the effect to bring about a conflict between the two races?

It is my judgment, and only my judgment—I do not give it as the judgment of anybody else—that the African people, from my knowledge of them, are a superior people to the Chinese in many respects; and I say if you take the Chinese to-day and mix them with the colored people of the South you will find there will be a conflict between those races that will result in riot and bloodshed, and the laws of the country will have to be invoked to protect the interests of one or both races. From the State of California to-day there is immediate railroad connection with Louisiana and Texas, and you can run through in five days; San Francisco is eighteen days from China by steamer; making twenty-three days as the time in which Chinese can reach those States; and the States of Texas and Louisiana could be filled with a Chinese population in less than three years and give a majority of Chinese in the population of those States, if they are permitted to come here in unlimited numbers.

To show the shrewdness of the Chinamen, since the ratification of the treaty entered into between the Chinese Government and our own Government, they are continuously sending more Chinamen to this country than they had done during the same length of time for the previous six or eight years. I know it to be a fact, according to the statistics, that since the ratification of the treaty by the Chinese Government (I do not say the government itself as a government is the cause of such a large increase of immigration of the Chinese) their people have come to this country, to the coast of California, to the city of San Francisco, in larger numbers than they had been in the habit of coming here before for years and years. Why? Because, under the provisions of the treaty entered into in 1881, the Chinamen who may be in this country at the time that any legislative action may be had in reference to the prohibition of their further immigration will not be affected by the provisions of the treaty or the law that we may pass upon the subject. The Chinamen, knowing that fact, the steamers bring six to eight hundred every month. The clamor to-day on the Pacific coast is of such a character that my colleague and myself have come to the conclusion that we must do something, and that immediately, or else it will perhaps be too late to get the relief we expect to get by reason of the passage of this bill. They have been flocking into the country, and they know, they have been advised if they did not know it themselves, that they could not be affected by the provisions of any law we might pass, and that they would have a right to come to and go from this country as freely as any other people might do without reference to any law that might be passed in the United States.

Mr. President, I trust there will be no further delay in the passage of this bill; at least that as short a time as possible will only elapse before we can come to a vote upon it. I know that the employment of Chinese on our coast has been of advantage to some individuals, to some enterprises; but "the greatest good to the greatest number" is not the result of their immigration to that coast. I know that very respectable men, men of high character, employ Chinamen. It is very natural that they should do so because they can get their labor at wages from 30 to 40 per cent. lower than they can get the labor of white men and white women. For that reason, the white men and white women who are laborers are driven from the employment that has heretofore been the stay for themselves and their families.

We hear a great deal of sentimental talk about the humanitarian idea on this question. I am inclined to be humanitarian toward my own people; I am inclined to be humanitarian toward the American people, those who are native born or Americans by adoption, in preference to a class of people who have come here, and in many respects have driven some of the white people of this country to the commission of crimes. Many white people have been driven from employment, and they have found their homes in the lowest slums of the country. Why? Because they were servants, and they were driven from employment; a long pig-tailed Chinaman was admitted into the parlor to attend to the duties that an honest working girl had attended to before. These are facts that cannot be controverted.

If the people of the United States, through their Congress, are not disposed to extend to us that protection which we think we are entitled to as citizens, I can only say that we will do as heretofore; we will endeavor to see that the laws are enforced; we will endeavor to see that the provisions of the treaty under which these persons came here, under which they were permitted to exercise certain rights and privileges, shall be observed. California men, who are law-observing men, men who believe in the exercise of justice and right between all men, will stand by the law of the country and protect even those people who are daily depriving our own citizens of rights that we think they are entitled to have.

I say to my honorable friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, that many of the better class of people in California are from his own State. Many of the best educated people of California are from the State of Massachusetts; many from New England and from New York and Pennsylvania and all the country around have found their homes in California. They took upon themselves the responsibility and the great risk of passing from the eastern portion of the country to the Pacific Ocean; and when they and their posterity who are to-day living in that State find this kind of population depriving them of privileges and rights to which they think they as American citizens are entitled, and to which they are entitled under the laws of this country, they will think it a little hard to find one of the representatives from the noble old Commonwealth of Massachusetts standing here and opposing any law that will extend to them the protection which they think they are entitled to have. I for one have no hesitation in saying that, so far as the workingmen and the laboring interests of the people of this country are concerned, it would be better if there was a wall of fire between the United States and China than to permit this flood of immigration to flow to our shores, which in the end will have the effect, in my judgment, to destroy the best interests of the people of the entire country.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I desire to place on record in a very few words the reasons which will control me in supporting the measure now before the Senate. I beg to say that in that vote I am not controlled or influenced by any ecstatic sentimentality or sublimated philanthropy which would cause me to welcome into this country consecrated to liberty regulated by law, and to Christian civilization, all the people of all climes and colors and of all nationalities, including Chinese, and without regard to their adaptability to our institutions and form of government. My views have never extended that far, but rather I believed that—

> If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

"I love my own country better than any other country, and my own race better than any other race," was the sentiment uttered by Mr. Clay, and it expresses precisely the views I entertain. I welcome cordially the Englishman, the Scotchman, the Irishman, the Frenchman, the German, and men of my own race and color wheresoever dispersed around the globe. They come among us to enjoy the blessings of free government, and soon become part of us. They make valuable additions to the body-politic, but I trust that the refuse and dregs of the countless hordes of China will never find a welcome here.

The Constitution of the United States, in my judgment, never contemplated the bringing of all people of all colors, climes, races, and conditions into this country and making of them citizens. There is nothing in the Constitution which will justify in my judgment such a conclusion. The Constitution is the presentation in an orderly and compact form of the great principles underlying civil and religious liberty which induced the settlement of the colonies, and which great principles, growing with the growth and strengthening with the strength of the colonies, were formulated in the Constitution of the United States. A careful examination of that instrument in view of the surrounding circumstances at that time, in my judgment, establishes the fact that the only people ever dreamed of to be naturalized citizens of the United States by the framers of the Constitution or by the people of the States which ratified it were people of the Caucasian race.

The Constitution of the United States, in the eighth section, grants to Congress the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization; and in the ninth section it declares that—

> The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation, not exceeding $10 for each person.

Thus it will be seen that the framers of the Constitution drew a distinction between those who were to be naturalized and those who might be imported.

In view of the surroundings, in view of the condition of things at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, we must construe it. What class of people came here at the time the Constitution was adopted and claimed citizenship in this country? The Caucasian race, and no others. Prior to the adoption of the Constitution there were settled in the colonies which became States and framed the Constitution, Caucasians and Caucasians only; white people and white people only. The colored race were not citizens. They were not made citizens by the framers of the Constitution, and never became citizens until the adoption of the fourteenth amendment. When the Constitution was adopted there were no people of the Mongolian race coming to this country, and no one who framed the Constitution or voted for its adoption ever dreamed of incorporating people of the Mongolian race into our civilization. The preamble of the Constitution recites that—

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Does any man believe that the men who framed the Constitution ever for a moment thought of mingling the blood of the Caucasian race with any other race and call that their posterity? The "posterity" which was meant in that Constitution was the pure, unmixed Caucasian race. Circumstances—and it is not necessary in this connection to give the reasons why—forced into citizenship the colored race. But they were born here among our own people; they were within our limit; they were under the control of our laws and they had to be provided for. But the Mongolian race are not of our household; they are not of our people; nor is there any thing in the Constitution which would demand or require us to provide for them by opening out and extending the benefits of this Government to that class of people. It was never so designed; it was never so intended.

Every word which is referred to by Jefferson and by all the other great lights in respect to inviting the oppressed of foreign nations to this country referred, and referred alone to the Caucasian race—to white people, to those who could come here and become assimilated with our people and amalgamated with them, and become "bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh;" and their posterity would be pure and unmixed Caucasian, the same as those who made the Constitution. That, in my judgment, is the meaning of it, clearly, unmistakably, the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. President, the Mongolian race has a civilization wholly and essentially distinct. Is it the enlightened and intelligent of that people who come here and settle in our midst? No, sir; of all the 450,000,000 people of China it is the lower strata, the very dregs of that population, that are spewed out upon the Pacific slope, to move among our people but not be of them.

Let them come into our country at will, and without restriction as to numbers; let them scatter out from San Francisco to every nook and corner of the land to which they may see fit to go, and it is just as certain as that water flows down stream that in the progress of time they will become citizens, they will become voters, and they will mingle in and constitute a part and parcel of the sovereign people who control our governments, State and national; and should a dominating element as to numbers from that exhaustless human hive of China become citizens this country is destroyed. My judgment is that every untempered brick that is worked into the political edifice weakens the edifice to that extent. We can afford to work no more brick without straw into the political building. We have had the colored race made citizens and voters. They were here; they had to be provided for; and they have been provided for by our civilization; but the Anglo-Saxon race, powerful in individuality, strong in numbers and in intelligence, was able to bear that. But these Mongolians are aliens to our civilization, aliens in blood, aliens in faith, and clogs to the free movement of the wheels of Christian civilization and enlightened progress. Let the Mongolian race come here limitless in numbers (because they are as numerous in their country almost as the sands on the sea shore) and you place such a clog on the wheel of progress as will in time stop it altogether.

There is to-day direct railway connection between the State of Texas and the Pacific slope. A few days will carry a Chinaman or anybody else from San Francisco out into Texas. The white man and the colored man there to-day are getting along peaceably and harmoniously. Gradually the colored men are improving their condition and are endeavoring to educate their children and start them out in life better equipped for the struggle than themselves. I do not pretend to be the special champion of the colored man, but I do claim that my position toward the colored man on this question is better supported, more philosophical, and more in his interest and that of his offspring than those of any man whose policy would fill that country where most colored people live with the Chinese, with their Joss gods, their superstitions, their opium, their filth, their gambling, and all their other vices. No friend of the colored man who thoroughly comprehends the situation would wish to empty the Chinese refuse population upon the Southern States. The effect of it would be twofold: first, that you would get a bad population there, and second, that you will have grievously injured that colored population which is already there.

The colored man is naturally superstitious, and how far he might be carried away from Christian civilization after the Joss god of the Chinaman no one can tell. That he would be liable to fall into his vicious habits is greatly to be feared.

Do not let those colored men be brought in contact with these Chinese people. It will not do. Let them be alone with us. We are trying to build them up. We have schools there; we give them all the benefits of the schools which our own people get. Our constitution compels, and rightfully and properly compels, a fair and equitable distribution of the school money for the benefit of the colored children and the white children alike. That is right; they are there. I believe in helping the colored man, not because I claim to be so peculiarly a colored man's friend, but I am a friend of my own people; and the more the colored man is improved, the better the colored man becomes, the better for my own race as well as the better for him.

I oppose this Chinese immigration, so far as Texas is concerned, first, because they do not come here to become citizens, and if they did, they are unfit material; second, it is the lower and degraded class of that population which does come; third, they bring every character of vice, degradation, and a pagan religion along with them to poison the minds of those less intelligent of our people with whom they would be brought in direct contact—the colored race—and it would be injurious in every sense of the word to the people among whom I live; and as a citizen of the United States I oppose his immigration or importation, because it is the addition of a most vicious element, and therefore hurtful to all.

Taking this view of the question, Mr. President, I have no hesitation in saying that I shall support the measure under consideration, being perfectly satisfied from the concurrent testimony of Senators from the Pacific States, re-enforced by that of Representatives in the other House, and the almost undivided sentiment of the people there, as shown by their recorded vote, that the Chinese element is bad, altogether vicious, and that we can do far better without it than with it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I only desire to occupy a very few moments in discussing the subject under consideration. The bill proposes to limit the immigration of the Chinese population to this country, and establish a regulation on that subject that has not been applied to the people of other countries. It seems to me therefore that the reasons for the application of the proposed law to the Chinese people ought to be such as to justify the measure, otherwise we ought not to adopt it.

I have listened to this debate and have read some of the testimony in the reports that have been made from time to time upon the subject; but the conclusions to which I have arrived have not been derived from the testimony of others, but principally from my own observation. I have come to the conclusion from what I have seen of the Chinese on the Pacific coast that there are substantial reasons for applying some restrictions to the immigration of the Chinese population on that coast.

In the first place, they are a distinct and different people from those who now control this country. They are of a different race and possess an entirely different civilization, and in my opinion are incapable of being brought into assimilation in habits, customs, and manners with the people of this country. Any one who will go to the Pacific States will find an isolated community of Chinese, separated from the other people there residing, associating only with themselves, and indulging in their own habits and modes of life, and worshiping at their own distinctive shrines. Though living in the midst of other people they are entirely separate from them in all their habits of life and in all that enters into our civilization.

Their proximity to the Pacific coast renders it very certain that if they are permitted to come to this country for purposes of gain, which I suppose are the only purposes that impel them here, at no distant day not only California but the entire Pacific coast will be largely overrun by that heathen population. I say, if any one will go there and examine the condition of that people, their habits and modes of life, he will come to the conclusion that no such people can long live in our towns and cities and villages on that coast without being not only offensive in all their manners and their degrading habits, but that their presence is calculated to engender strife and discord and lead to possible collision with the people among whom they live.

I had an opportunity a few years ago to visit the Chinese quarter in the city of San Francisco. I went in company with another member of this body in the daytime among their merchants, some of whom I was told were doing a business of three million dollars a year. They were educated men, they understood our language, and they were respectable people so far as I could judge from their demeanor; but they were but a very small portion or percentage of the Chinese population that inhabits San Francisco. The great mass of them are in the very lowest depths of degradation. While they are industrious and perhaps may be intelligent in the matters with which they are familiar, in all their habits of life, so far as I could judge, they are a degraded people, and I know of nothing in their civilization that has an elevating tendency. They cannot be brought I am sure to assimilate with our people, or to adopt our ideas either of government or religion.

Among other places that I visited was a Chinese Sabbath-school, where there were some one hundred or one hundred and fifty persons in attendance from fifteen to twenty-five or thirty years of age, but the superintendents told me that the object of the Chinese in attending those Sabbath-schools was not to learn anything of the Christian religion, that that was foreign to their purpose in attending, their only object being to acquire familiarity with our language; and while there had been perhaps half a dozen Chinese converted to the Christian faith by their attendance upon Sabbath-schools, the great body of the Chinese people did not desire to learn anything of Christianity or anything of our civilization, but simply desired to learn our language that they might be the better able to pursue the callings which they followed in this country. The same I believe is true all along the coast. In Portland, as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. GROVER] knows, there is also a Chinese quarter, not so large as that in San Francisco, but it stands there in the center of the city, occupied by Chinese, with their own civilization, and there is no assimilation whatever between them and the other people of that city.

I say, if I were a resident of one of those cities, living there, the presence of those people would be a standing offense, because everybody knows that there is a state of degradation exhibited by the lower Chinese that endangers, to some extent, by its influence and example the youth of those cities. It might not be becoming in this presence to narrate how the youth of San Francisco have been contaminated by the presence of the Chinese. To refer to one fact, I have been told that young men of those cities have been induced to enter their opium dens and become habituated to the use of opium as the Chinese are. Under the protection of the police of the city, I went at night to one of their lodging places, and I found in one of their sleeping apartments ten or fifteen or twenty persons in a small room, ten or twelve feet long, and of the same width. Part of them were in a perfect state of stupefaction from the use of opium; others were smoking the opium for the purpose of getting under its influence. There they lived, and I was told there were six hundred human beings in that single tenement engaged in the same occupation of smoking opium and getting into a state of complete stupefaction. I was told they induce the young men of that city to enter those places and indulge in the habit of smoking opium, and thus they become demoralized, not to refer to other places of even greater contamination. I say, therefore, that if I lived in the city of San Francisco I should be unwilling to have that people abiding there as residents of the city. The same thing is true, to a greater or less extent, as I remarked, all along the Pacific coast.

It is true the Chinese are industrious. They work for less wages than our people do, and they can command labor. While I was in San Francisco I visited a woolen factory, the employés of which were exclusively Chinese. They were engaged in making blankets; and the superintendent of that establishment told me that they employed the Chinese laborers because they could employ them much cheaper than white laborers, and because of the fact that they could get Chinese labor they were enabled to compete with the eastern manufacturers in the manufacture of blankets. Senators will see very well how it affects the interests of the poor laborers upon the coast. There were two hundred men, I was told, in that establishment. I went into their dining-room when they were at dinner, which consisted principally of fish and rice. I suppose a Chinese dinner such as I saw them eating did not cost half a dime each. With that condition of affairs they can well compete with the white laborers for employment, and monopolize a great deal of labor that otherwise would be given to the white laborers of that community.

I say, however, that I would not close the gates against the immigration of the Chinese to this country simply upon the ground that they enter into competition with labor, but I put it upon another ground, which is that it introduces a distinct race of people with a different civilization from that to which we are accustomed, wholly incapable of assimilation with our people. In my opinion, their presence among us will not improve their condition morally or in any other respect, save in enabling them to accumulate money and send it back to China, while it may lead to discord and possible collision with the Anglo-Saxon race among whom they live.

No man who goes to their temples of worship and sees their images there set up can ever believe that such a people, after they have been away from China for twenty years and are still attending their Joss houses and paying their devotion to their images, can become Christianized by their contact with the people of this country. In one of their temples was placed the image of the devil, not for the purpose of worshiping him, as I am told, but in order that they might pay him proper respect, so that he might be induced not to do them any harm. With that kind of civilization growing up in the city of San Francisco and other portions of the Pacific coast, it is not surprising that the people of the Pacific States feel sensitive about the presence of the Chinese and want a limitation put upon their immigration to this country.

The time specified in the bill during which there shall be a suspension of immigration may perhaps be a little too long. It is, however, one of those features that can be corrected hereafter by legislation, if it should be found to be so. The bill, I believe, suspends immigration for twenty years. If hereafter it shall be found that that period is too long I suppose it would be competent for Congress to reduce the time by subsequent legislation. I would be willing, however, to see that feature modified now so as to try it for ten years. But that feature does not form such an objection as would cause me to vote against the provisions of the bill. I think that the proper thing to do is to suspend the immigration of that people to this country. There are 400,000,000 people in China it is said; they can throw upon the Pacific coast 50,000,000 people without scarcely missing them in their own country; and I should be unwilling to see this country overrun with that race of people. While they are industrious, while they may have contributed to the material prosperity of the State of California, I think we should not go further and permit any longer an immigration from China to this country.

I shall vote, therefore, for the bill. If it would seem proper to limit the period to ten years I would prefer it, but if that modification is not made I shall vote for the bill as it is.

Mr. GARLAND and Mr. INGALLS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GARLAND. I give way to the Senator from Kansas, if he desires the floor now.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to offer two or three amendments to the bill. If the Senator from Arkansas desires to speak to the merits of the bill as it now stands, I prefer to wait until he has concluded.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the power that we are called upon to exercise under this bill is a very delicate one, as indeed is every power that Congress exercises in reference to the relations existing between this Government and foreign governments. The bill apparently draws a distinction in regard to the treatment by this Government of the Chinese and that of people of other countries; but that difference of treatment is only apparent at least when we consider the existing laws on the subject of foreigners and the naturalization of those foreigners.

As to the particular facts that make it necessary to pass a bill of this character, I shall not discuss them at any length. We as Senators, to use the language of Judge Field in a case that I will allude to a little more lengthily after awhile, are not bound to shut our eyes to what we know and see as individuals. Unless all the standards of testimony, unless all the standards of teaching by facts by and through human agencies are at fault, we cannot deny that this matter in the States which are called the Pacific States is an absolute pest in point of fact; and it is a pest that has cried aloud for some remedy. It is a pest which Oregon has attempted by her laws to protect herself against, and which California has repeatedly attempted to protect herself against; yet the courts have decided every one of those State laws to be unconstitutional, against the Constitution of the United States; and therefore those States are left without any protection against what is called by them, and what is absolutely in point of fact, a pest upon their body-politic.

I will take the statements that have been read from different papers and different reports; the statements of the Senators and Representatives from that section of the country; I will take the vote of the State of California when her people voted almost as a unit against this immigration; and I will take the language of the eminent judge who delivered the opinion in the queue case, to which the attention of Senators was called the other day in a few words by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR;] and assuming the facts to exist as claimed by the friends of this bill upon which to predicate it, the question which then arises, and naturally the first question in the progress of the debate, is as to the power of the Government to do this, the right of the Government to do it, which seems to have been controverted by the Senator from Massachusetts the other day throughout his able and exhaustive speech upon the other side of the question.

Now, what is the law upon the subject? I read from Phillipps on Jurisprudence, section 416:

> This brings us to the question, how far an independent state can be justified upon grounds of public policy in making an express distinction by law between its own citizens and foreigners resident within its territory, to the disadvantage of the latter. The principle upon which the answer must be given seems sufficiently clear. Every independent state has, as we have seen, a right to exclude foreigners from its dominions; and consequently every state which admits foreigners into its dominions has a right to deprive them of all or any of the advantages of such admission. If therefore the Blefuscudian legislature were to enact that no foreigner shall be capable of acquiring property within the Blefuscudian territory, or that no contract between a foreign resident and a Blefuscudian citizen shall be held valid in the Blefuscudian courts, the enactment, absurd and iniquitous as it would be, could not be considered by the Lilliputian government as a casus belli. The right to say "you shall not come here" includes the right to say "you shall acquire no benefit by coming here."

He refers in this extract to a previous section, section 382, in which the author says:

> We can scarcely refuse to admit that this jurisdiction extends, if it should bona fide be thought necessary to insist upon its extension, to the entire exclusion of every foreigner from the occupied territory. It is impossible to deny that there are nations whose peculiar habits and institutions could scarcely be maintained if their citizens were allowed free intercourse with the rest of mankind—

That is this case according to the statement of the distinguished Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] who made a personal inspection of the country that is infected by these people, and of their social habits and of their intercourse with themselves and with the regular citizens of California—> and it is equally impossible to pronounce that such peculiar habits and institutions, however absurd they may appear to us, do not conduce to the happiness of those who maintain them. If, therefore, an independent State insists upon isolation, its will ought not to be resisted. Neither the subtleties of the medieval publicists concerning the right of transit, nor the simpler American maxim that those who can trade and will not trade must be made to trade, can be allowed to limit its prerogative of uselessness. If the Chinese have occupied China for the express purpose of remaining infatuated barbarians, the European who endeavors to make them reasonable beings is clearly depriving them of the expected benefit of their labor.

The words of this distinguished author are applicable in all their length and breadth to the question that we have in hand. The right is conceded to say to these people or any other people abroad, "you may come here, but you must come upon the terms which we choose to prescribe." What is called the Burlingame treaty did specify certain conditions and terms upon which they might come. That in the minds of some gentlemen stood in the way of legislation of this character; and for one, three years ago, when the subject was before the Senate, I was not favorable to such a measure with that treaty standing. But since then, and very recently, another treaty has been made which provides expressly for the very thing that this bill is seeking to accomplish. The area and the theater of legislation has been enlarged by this recent treaty. The treaty is upon the desks, I believe, of all the Senators, and this bill does not travel one iota beyond the terms and the measure of the treaty.

I was one of the few who three years since voted against a measure of this character because there was a treaty then in force which I thought it contravened; but now this has been stipulated for, it has been agreed upon by the treaty-making power of the two countries, and it is simply a question of policy whether the Congress of the United States shall adopt it. It is admitted, and it has been shown, that there is an evil to be remedied. I will attempt to show to the Senate how California sought to remedy this evil. I will read from 5 Sawyer's Reports, in the ninth circuit, the case of Ah-kow vs. Nunan, where the celebrated queue ordinance came up for judicial determination and construction in the State of California. This is a decision upon an ordinance of a municipality of the State of California. The Senator from Massachusetts the other day in his speech cited what Judge Field, who delivered the opinion of the court in the case, said in reference to the barbarity of the ordinance, which I do not controvert; but I will read the judgment of Judge Field, and I will read after awhile his own opinion as to what should be done with this question. Judge Field said—I read from the syllabus—

> The general supervision of all matters appertaining to the sanitary condition of the county jail in San Francisco is confided by the act of April 4, 1870, to the board of health of the city and county; and only in exceptional cases would the preservation of the health of the institution require the cutting off of the hair of any of its inmates within an inch of his scalp.
> Accordingly, where an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco, passed on the 14th of June, 1876, declared that every male person imprisoned in the county jail, under the judgment of any court having jurisdiction in criminal cases in the city and county, should immediately upon his arrival at the jail have the hair of his head "cut or clipped to an uniform length of one inch from the scalp thereof," and made it the duty of the sheriff to have this provision enforced, it was held that the ordinance was invalid, being in excess of the authority of the board of supervisors, whether the measure be considered as an additional punishment to that imposed by the court upon conviction under a State law, or as a sanitary regulation, and constituted no justification to the sheriff acting under it.
> The ordinance being directed against the Chinese only, and imposing upon them a degrading and cruel punishment is also subject to the further objection, that it is hostile and discriminating legislation against a class forbidden by that clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which declares that no State "shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." This inhibition upon the State applies to all the instrumentalities and agencies employed in the administration of its government; to its executive, legislative, and judicial departments, and to the subordinate legislative bodies of its counties and cities.

Then he goes on to pronounce that this ordinance is unconstitutional; that no body but the Congress of the United States can legislate in a matter of this character. That was an attempt in California to remedy this evil within her borders to some extent. In a note to this case there is an interesting article by Judge Cooley referred to, reviewing this decision, which it is not necessary to read. In addition to that, the Senators who care to examine this question will find that the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Chy Lung vs. Freeman, in 2 Otto, have decided to the same effect; as also in The Railroad Company vs. Husen, in 5 Otto; and in the celebrated Passenger Cases, in 7 Howard; and there are a number of State decisions referred to here.

Now, I come to the next case, which is on page 566 of the same volume of Sawyer's United States Reports, ninth circuit, where Oregon came in to protect herself against these evils:

This suit is brought to enjoin the city of Portland from enforcing an act of the Legislature, approved October 16, 1872, entitled "An act to prohibit the employment of Chinese laborers on the improvement of streets and public works in this State."

The judge says briefly upon that:

The right to reside in a foreign country implies the right to labor there for a living.

A State has no power to interfere with or in any way limit the operation of a treaty of the United States.

He holds that laws of this character could only be passed by Congress and not by State Legislatures. This was under the Burlingame treaty, which has now been superseded by the treaty to which I referred a few moments since.

Thus it appears that the States which are suffering from these evils have attempted in their way to protect themselves, but all to no purpose. Then the question comes, who can do this? The court says no one but Congress can do it. Then how shall it be done? I hold in my hand a pamphlet issued some time in 1878, in which the views of Judge Field, who decided the queue ordinance case, are given upon what he considers would be a proper remedy in reference to this matter, for he had examined it not only as a jurist but as a citizen and as a taxpayer of California. He goes on at some length to show what the existing state of things is there and the absolute evils under which the State is suffering from this population. He says:

Independent of the legal questions involved, I am of the opinion that no good can come from a resort to small vexations against the Chinese. To deny to them the privilege of sending to China their dead, to cut off their queues, to subject them to inconveniences and petty annoyances, is unworthy a generous people, and will result in no practical benefit. I recognize the Chinese question as one of prominent importance—a national question, demanding the consideration of jurists and statesmen, and not to be solved by a resort to sanitary laws, nor by local and municipal police regulations. It is a broad question, to be discussed by broad-minded men, and determined upon principles of law that govern nations in their intercourse with each other. This question cannot be solved by San Francisco nor California; nor is it a local one, nor are its consequences to be confined to this side of the continent. I am impressed with the fact that there is danger in a military point of view, and the fact that China is purchasing armor-clad war-vessels from England—is opening her own workshops for the construction of iron-clad ships, is importing and manufacturing arms of precision, is increasing, arming, and drilling her army and navy—is worth the consideration of our people.

I am aware that commercial intercourse with China is a one-sided affair, and that the English, German, and American merchants are being driven out of the Chinese trade, and that the Chinese merchants have monopolized not only their foreign commerce, but the navigation of their own coast and interior waters. Now, what is the remedy? To me it seems plain. We have a treaty with the Government of China. We find that treaty, in its practical workings, one-sided. It is not equal. The Chinese have denied to our people the privilege of trading with the interior of China; they open certain ports, known as treaty ports, and practically deny to our merchants the right to enter any other; Americans are not allowed to dig in their mines, work on their farms, build railroads, navigate streams, obtain franchises, and are restricted in the enjoyment of any but the most limited privileges. They are not allowed the freedom of the country. We may not peremptorily abrogate this treaty, because to do so would be a declaration of war; but we may say to the Chinese authorities, that because we find this treaty works unequally and to the disadvantage of our people, we desire to modify it; we may give the required notice of six months or one year; we may then make another treaty, and give to the Chinese the privileges they practically accord to us. We may say to them: your people shall only come to the United States, and shall only remain here for the purpose of general commerce; you shall be welcome to certain ports and to none other; you shall engage only in foreign trade; you shall be excluded from all employments not connected with or incidental to foreign commerce; you shall be allowed the privilege of crossing our continent in pursuit of business; you may be welcome to visit any port of our land; you may educate your youth in our colleges. But you shall not send to us an immigration to engage in the general industries of our country; you shall not send a population to become permanent residents in our country; you shall not come into competition with our laborers; you shall not engage in mechanical and manufacturing employments; you shall not own or till our agricultural lands; you shall not fill menial employments. Those who are now here, it is perhaps well enough to allow to remain. If there are one hundred thousand of them, they will disappear in a short time from natural causes; many will return voluntarily; they will be absorbed. What forty millions of white people will do with any part of one hundred thousand male Chinese, is not a consideration of consequence, and will soon be disposed of. Thus, the question may be solved, rationally, speedily, and peacefully.

So that every feature that is incorporated in this bill is specified in a general way and indicated by Judge Field in these views now made public, aside from the decision already cited, as a necessity to meet the difficulties arising from the case to which I have just referred. In the same pamphlet there is another matter to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. Our minister to China, in a communication to the State Department, under date of May 16, 1878, speaks of the want of reciprocity in the privileges accorded by the treaty with that country, as follows:

From the diplomatic point of view, we have always been at a disadvantage in dealing with China. We have voluntarily accorded to her people within our borders the privileges of those of the most favored nations. China, however, has yielded only a few privileges to our people, and we are constantly obliged to resort to diplomatic representations to secure to them the enjoyment of even these. As a consequence, we are always asking something from China, while she has nothing to ask from us. If, however, it has now become an object for her to secure for her people in our country the privileges so freely accorded to them, the situation has changed, and may be taken advantage of in all future negotiations.

A very few words are needed to indicate the lack of reciprocity between us. I think there are no opportunities of residence or of enterprise from which the Chinese among us are debarred. They can go where they will and do what they will in all our broad domain. But it is not so here. Our countrymen may reside in a few cities only, and they may engage in no enterprise outside of the ordinary interchange of commodities and their transportation between defined points. Opportunities exist to develop mines, to establish furnaces and factories, to construct roads, canals, railroads, and telegraphs, to operate these, and steam or other vessels on many routes not now open to them; but from all these and many other important branches of enterprise we are effectually and perhaps hopelessly shut out. Perhaps, then, the time has arrived when we may say to this government that we expect a more perfect reciprocity, and that, if our people cannot be admitted here to all the privileges enjoyed by theirs in our country, they must not blame us if we demand such a revision of our treaties as will leave us free to meet the necessities of our situation. It is very certain that China would not consent to the extension of the privileges enjoyed by foreigners in this country, and it is possible that, rather than do this, she would agree to such a revision of our treaties as I have indicated. But if she should not do so, and should plant herself firmly on existing treaties, refusing to grant to us anything, or assent to the withdrawal of any privileges from her people, we would have proceeded, nevertheless, as I have said, in an honorable way, and could then consider the whole situation and determine the policy which would most conduce to our welfare.

So, we see that we are dealing with a fact that is established beyond any cavil before the country, and we have the power to deal with it according to international law. We have the power under our Constitution and under our system of legislation to deal with it. No one but Congress can deal with it effectually according to these decisions, decisions of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts. It occurs to me, so far as the general proposition of the bill is concerned, there can be no doubt about the propriety of its passage.

Are we in point of truth drawing a distinction against these people that does not already exist under the statute? The naturalization statute excludes these people from its benefits. In this same volume, 5 Sawyer's Reports, where a Chinese applied to be naturalized in California, Judge Sawyer makes this distinction:

A native of China, of the Mongolian race, is not entitled to become a citizen of the United States under the Revised Statutes as amended in 1875.

A Mongolian is not a "white person" within the meaning of the term as used in the naturalization laws of the United States.

That is the statute in the Revised Statutes and that is the statute which is construed by the court here. There is a distinction already against them. When this statute was enacted in 1874 we put in a provision that Africans could be naturalized, but we omitted to put in these people. I am told by the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] that in some places they evade this law and do naturalize them notwithstanding this statute, and notwithstanding the decision of the court in the case that I have just read. Hence, I think, as a matter of precaution, his amendment should be adopted prohibiting the naturalization of these people any further. That is all I care to say at present.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the first article of the treaty between the United States and China, concluded November 17, 1880, proclaimed October 5, 1881, is in the following language:

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein affects, or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of such immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

I read this for the purpose of saying that whatever doubts may exist as to the policy of this proposed legislation, there cannot be any doubt whatever as to the right of Congress to enact it. That has passed beyond the domain of legitimate discussion. By a solemn treaty between these two contracting parties, a treaty in pursuance of an agreement reached for the specific purpose, the two contracting nations have agreed that the United States Government may enact such legislation as it may be deemed best to enact. If it shall seem to the Government of the United States that the immigration of the Chinese is not only detrimental to the entire interests of this country, but that the good order and the improvement and advancement of any particular locality are retarded, hindered, or impeded thereby, restrictions may be imposed.

I am not disposed at this time to dwell upon what seem to my mind to be the economical and what may be called the sentimental objections to this legislation. I am frank to say that my instincts revolt at it. I would myself as soon think of destroying all the mules or all the domestic animals in the country, or of destroying all the engines and labor-saving machinery in the country, as to either expel or repel a class of docile, patient, obedient, frugal, and industrious laborers, whether skilled or unskilled. But I pass that, because conceding to other localities the same rights that I demand for my own, and resting upon the maxims and dogmas of local self-government and home rule, I am prepared to say that the communities upon the Pacific coast have a right to judge for themselves as to the propriety in an economical sense of this immigration, and when they have spoken through their authorized representatives, with their declaration I shall be content.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Do not the provisions of this bill extend to the whole United States?

Mr. INGALLS. I was about to come to that. With regard to these localities, however, under the treaty I have no doubt of the competency of Congress to legislate, because it is so expressly declared in the article that I have read; not that this migration shall be held to be detrimental to the interests of the entire country, but that if it is interfering with or prejudicial to the good order or the welfare and advancement of any particular locality, then Congress may provide for the suspension or limitation of Chinese immigration. Therefore, Mr. President, in my mind the only question is whether or not the terms of this bill are reasonable and just in accordance with the stipulations made solemnly and entered into between these high contracting parties; and I must say that upon two or three points I think they are not. I am aware that the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] desires to obtain a vote this afternoon, and therefore I shall not make any protracted remarks.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I find it will be impossible to get a vote this afternoon. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] desires to speak on Monday, so the Senator from Kansas need not restrict himself at all.

Mr. INGALLS. I will then, Mr. President, briefly and more in the nature of a statement, without argument or giving special reasons, suggest two or three amendments that I think good faith toward the Government of China requires to be incorporated in this bill.

It will be observed, by the language of the article I have read, that this prohibition shall not be absolute, and that it shall be reasonable, and the first point to which I desire to call attention is one suggested by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] and that is the period prescribed within which this prohibition shall be operative, namely, twenty years after the promulgation of this legislation. I shall move to amend the bill in that particular by striking out the word "twenty" and inserting "ten," and for two or three reasons.

In the first place, it is apparent to my mind that this legislation is invoked under the influence of overmastering passions. Whether justly or unjustly, public opinion upon the Pacific slope, by importunate and inflammatory appeals, has been wrought to that heat of passion that we are not at this time, I believe, capable of taking an entirely unbiased and unprejudiced view of what the social and economical requirements of the country in regard to this question are. The period of ten years will allow a sufficient time to elapse in which the passions of men will subside. It will allow another census to be taken under which we shall be able to contrast the statistics of labor and of production under the condition of things as it now exists and that which will obtain when Chinese immigration has been prohibited; and beside this it will, in my judgment, comport more absolutely with that fair dealing which we are under obligation to observe toward the Government of China, in declaring that this prohibition shall not be absolute. The insertion of the period of twenty years appears to me to be an infraction of the agreement in the first article of this treaty that the suspension shall not be absolute. I shall therefore hope that the Senate will agree to the modification suggested by the reduction of the period named from twenty years to ten.

There is one other point upon which I shall move an amendment. The first paragraph of the fourth article of the treaty is in the following language:

> The high contracting powers having agreed upon the foregoing articles, whenever the Government of the United States shall adopt legislative measures in accordance therewith such measures will be communicated to the Government of China.

The provisions of this bill in the first section are:

> That from and after the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of twenty years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended.

In my judgment this legislation is in accordance and pursuance of the treaty that has been made between these two parties, and it is necessary, it appears to me, that if this proposed legislation is adopted information as to its terms should be communicated through the State Department to the Government of China, and the time when the limitation should commence should be fixed at a period of sixty days after information of the passage of this law shall have been communicated to the Government of China. I am also very much in doubt whether the period prescribed of sixty days would suffice to permit immigrants who had left China lawfully under the provisions of existing treaties and laws to reach the ports of the United States, and they might thereafter, if this is insisted upon, be landed upon the shores of California and subject to the penalties imposed by this act, which are very severe.

Mr. FARLEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARLEY. We are within twenty-six days of China in this city, so that would give them thirty-four days' notice.

Mr. INGALLS. That is by steamer.

Mr. FARLEY. By steamer.

Mr. INGALLS. Suppose they want to go to Boston?

Mr. FARLEY. If they were on the way to Boston or any other point, they would have time enough.

Mr. INGALLS. They might be storm-tossed; they might be in ships that were crippled and torn by storms, so that they would be driven out of their course and not arrive in due time.

Mr. FARLEY. That would be an extreme case. Of course it might happen.

Mr. INGALLS. So that in any event, no matter which view of this case you take, it is apparent to my mind that there should be a different period of limitation prescribed as to the time when this act shall go into operation; and I shall move, as I have said, that this act, if adopted, shall be communicated to the Government of China as the treaty provides, and that the period within which it shall be unlawful for Chinese immigrants to land here shall be changed so as to prevent them from sailing within a certain specified time after the Chinese Government has been advised of our action.

There is also in the last section of the bill a provision that appears to me very inaccurate and uncertain and that requires either modification or specification. I read, commencing in line 10, section 14:

> And any Chinese unlawfully entering within the United States, or who shall have unlawfully entered the United States in any way, either by land or by water, shall be removed therefrom by the collector of customs of any collection district in which such Chinese may be found, at the cost of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

"Removed therefrom," and where to? The collector of customs of the collection district is authorized to remove at the expense of the United States these unlawful immigrants from that district; but where are they to be removed to? I presume that the intention of the committee was that they should be returned to China, because it would be obviously unjust to remove these obnoxious immigrants, so declared by statute, from one collection district of the United States into another that might not want to receive them. They would still be exactly as open to the penalties of this bill in an adjacent collection district as in the one in which they had landed. Therefore, there must be some amendment here. I shall not offer any amendment to that provision, because I do not know what the purpose of the committee was. I content myself with calling attention to the imperfect condition of the section as it now stands.

I will now move, Mr. President, that the substitute be amended in line 4 of section 1 by striking out the word "twenty" and inserting "ten."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas is first in order, as it is an amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations; the other amendments proposed are additional sections. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas just proposed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I supposed the first vote taken by the Senate would be on adopting or refusing to adopt the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas proposes to amend the committee's amendment; and it is first in order to perfect the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MILLER, of California. There are two other amendments pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are in the shape of additional sections, as the Secretary informs the Chair. This amendment is germane, being an amendment to the committee's amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The amendment reported by the committee is in the nature of a substitute which has not been acted on by the Senate. Is that subject to amendment before it is acted on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the amendment of the committee was agreed to it would not then be open to amendment; but it can be amended before it is adopted. There has been no action on the committee's amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think, with great respect, that inasmuch as the committee amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a series of sections, the first amendment that is offered by any Senator to the amendment of the committee, no matter where it comes in, is the one that is first entitled to be submitted to the Senate; and therefore if any Senator has moved to add an additional section to this amendment of the committee, I think that is the thing that is first to be voted upon, although it may be more convenient to take it by sections. The amendment of the committee is one single amendment, although it is divided into sections; and some Senator, I understand, has proposed to amend that, before the motion of the Senator from Kansas was made, by adding to it at the end something more. Now, I think in the regular order under the rule the amendment to this general amendment of the committee that is first proposed should be first put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was in the chair yesterday and ruled contrary to that, as the Chair understands; that the other amendments were additional sections to the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The ruling on yesterday was precisely in accordance with the ruling of the Chair to-day, that if any amendment is proposed modifying or changing the amendment reported by the committee such amendment must be acted upon before the question is taken on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HARRIS. And that independent propositions as additions could be acted on after the committee amendment had been perfected and acted upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think that is the law, but I do not care.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the impression that the text of the committee's amendment is to be first perfected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but the Senator who has offered an additional section to the amendment proposes to perfect it by making it say something more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair adheres to his ruling. If any Senator wishes to appeal, the question can be tested. [A pause.] The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MILLER, of California. To that amendment I desire to speak for a moment. The original draft of this bill as introduced by myself declared in the first section that the immigration of Chinese as described therein "is hereby declared to be unlawful, and is suspended and prohibited until otherwise provided by law."

The committee in considering this particular clause of the section came to the conclusion that that in some measure contravened that clause of the treaty which declared that the United States might suspend immigration but not absolutely prohibit it; and therefore it was suggested, I believe by the Senator from Vermont, or at any rate by some member of the committee, that fixing a term for which this immigration might be suspended would relieve it from that objection. The question then came up on the length of time which would be thought reasonable for this suspension, and after a very elaborate discussion we came to the conclusion, perhaps not unanimously, that twenty years would be a reasonable term. I contended, and would contend now if it were an original question, for a longer term than that. My principal reason is that it is desirable to settle this question one way or the other, to settle it for a time sufficiently long to not only give notice to the Chinese and the importers of Chinese that they must suspend this traffic, but to permit our people to make their arrangements to carry on their business with a definite understanding as to the time during which this suspension shall exist. I thought and still believe that twenty years was not too long a time.

On the Pacific coast for about thirty years the experiment of admitting Chinese has been tried, and we have found, as we believe, that it works greatly to the detriment of the best interests of our people and will ultimately work a great injury to the whole people of the United States. I think, therefore, if we change the policy, that twenty years is not too long a time, and especially when it is within the power of Congress at any moment to repeal this act and relieve the suspension. If it be found, as is predicted by the opponents of this measure, that the people of the Pacific coast will within ten years or a lesser period ascertain by experience that this act is not beneficial, that this suspension ought to be removed, they can appeal to Congress for its removal, or, if it is the judgment of the nation at any time that this suspension should be relieved, Congress can then act and repeal this law.

It may be said on the other hand that if you fix it at a lesser period, say ten years, and at the expiration of that time we find the people of the Pacific coast are of the same opinion, and the people of the nation are of the same opinion that they are now, Congress may extend the suspension; but it is just as easy to repeal this act; it is no greater hardship on the other side than it is on our side. And while we are engaged in the settlement of this question I desire it definitely settled. If I had my own way about it I would not fix any term at all; and I think our commissioners made a mistake when they agreed to that language that we should not absolutely prohibit Chinese immigration. If we had to dictate the terms of a treaty we would not put any such language in that treaty; and if there were no treaty in the way I would make the suspension a prohibition and make it absolute and eternal.

I hope that the term will not be lessened, believing that twenty years is reasonable under the circumstances; that it gives our people an opportunity to adapt themselves to the new order of things and that it settles the question which, if you make the short term, is not settled; the agitation continues, and as the expiration of the suspension grows near the agitation is resumed with greater excitement and fury. I trust that the friends of the measure will vote down this amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I understand that the question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS] to reduce the period of the suspension of this immigration of Chinese laborers, from twenty to ten years; and I rise merely to express my hope that the amendment will not prevail, and for the reason that this proposed law I understand to be the expression of a policy on the part of the Government of the United States in respect of the oriental populations who, by their propinquity to the States upon our Pacific coast, have endangered, in the mind and belief of the American citizens of that coast, their happiness and welfare, and even the continuance of republican government itself. Under modern discoveries the Pacific Ocean that once was a barrier has now become a bridge; that which was once a severance has become a link; and by steam transportation the ocean, instead of separating, actually unites Asia and America.

In the consideration of this question there are involved problems than which none are more difficult and profound. One that is obviously touched and affected by this bill is the great problem of the relative rights of capital and labor, and in what relative measure the profits of the joint production of the two shall be divided between those who combined to create it. This is the first time in the legislation of this country that labor qua labor has been made the subject of legislation. There is therefore much of gravity involved in the results of this legislation.

I do not propose to detain the Senate by repeating the points that have been already touched in this discussion, but desire that a vote should be reached upon the measure this evening if possible.

One fact strikes me more and more forcibly as my experience of the government of this country is enlarged, that the mere fact of the vast area over which the Federal Government extends its jurisdiction, prevents the citizens of one part and section from comprehending truly the needs, the necessities, the sympathies, the wants of citizens in other parts; and perhaps it is well that it is so, because the very realization of our inability, here in our homes upon the Atlantic slope, to comprehend the dangers that threaten the interests that are involved, the wants that are so keenly felt by our brethren upon the Pacific slope, should instruct us that the great principle of local self-government, that essential school of the American citizen, the school of freedom and self-reliance, should have its lessons heeded; and never was the call for obedience stronger than in the present case. I do not believe the history of the world discloses such an illustration of unanimity of feeling, upon the part of a local population comprehending and expressing its own needs, as is proven to us to-day, on this subject of immigration from China among the American citizens of the Pacific States. Think of it, Senators; at a special election held some four years ago, held by secret ballot, in which any voter without the slightest risk of disclosure, in absolute secrecy, could register his opinion upon this subject—at an election held in the State of California, less than one-half of 1 per cent. of the voters of that population, expressed their wish for non-interference with Chinese immigration, and over 99¼ per cent. testified their abhorrence of it—I think I may say that no more unanimous expression of popular opinion can be conceived, and if there is a precedent of record for it it is unknown to me.

Mr. President, those who feel and realize the danger, those who are closely confronted with the fact and its consequences, are those by whom we should be instructed as to its extent and its reality. If in the State which is my home there was a question local and peculiarly distressing to my people, threatening them and their civilization, their economical, political, social, and religious systems, and I should come here presenting the facts, and asking for relief under the forms of law, and under forms of law expressly provided for by treaty between the Empire of China and the Republic of the United States, I should feel that there was absolute cruelty and injustice, if the voice of my people, speaking with unanimity, was not heard and respected by my associates, the representatives of the States of the Union in this Chamber. And so, sir, when I hear the voice of California, and Oregon, and Nevada, and of the adjacent Territories, all speaking in the same earnest tone and all declaring the same truths, I must heed it. I mean to include all those States which lie on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains, not only those whose soil is laved by the waters of the Pacific, but those adjacent to them, coterminous States, with the same character of local interest, all declaring one result and all praying for the same relief. I should be unfaithful as a friend, as a member of this Senate, as a citizen of the Union, if I did not respond to their cry of distress. They have spoken in terms too loud and earnest for us to answer them by reciting mere speculations of our own. They have told us that these evils of which they complain are terribly real and not imaginary. They have said to us that everything which men hold dear, their traditions, their liberties, their sympathies, social habits, political rights, are all in jeopardy unless a check shall be put to the incoming and terrible wave of an approaching Mongolian overflow of everything like Christian or American civilization in the States of the Pacific slope.

Mr. President, I willingly recognize the brotherhood of man, and respond to humanity wherever its voice may be heard; but there is an instinct of self-preservation in nations as well as in individuals. There is an instinct and a duty of justice. A man must be true to himself before he can be true to others; and a nation must be true to its own people before it undertakes to expand its energies in favor of strangers and aliens. There is no inhumanity, there is no injustice in saying, that our duty to republican institutions compels us to consider the character of the population under which such institutions may hopefully be conducted. We consider it in our treaties, we consider it in our laws; we consider the tendencies of treaties and the tendencies of laws; and in the present case, acting under an explicit treaty stipulation, under a statute proposing a remedy confessedly less extreme than the treaty itself obviously would permit, the opportunity, and, it seems to me, the duty for us has arisen to act.

I do not state this case too strongly. I find in a newspaper from California, dated the 24th of February, not a week old, the Call, published in San Francisco, a report of the trades assembly of the Chinese committee, and an appeal made "To the working men and women of the United States," which I have read, and by which I have been much impressed. Senator Morton, our late associate, has been cited as in some way giving indirect approval to the continued and uninterrupted immigration of Chinese laborers into this country, and yet I find by this paper, that when he had in 1877 conducted an investigation into this very question, in the very communities most affected by it, and where the cry of distress was loudest, he concluded that it had "become painfully evident that the Pacific coast must in time either become American or Mongolian." That was his judgment in 1877. Years have rapidly and constantly reaffirmed its justice; and when it comes to that—and that is the issue presented to the American people or presented to the American Senate—I ask how can there be other, or ought there to be other than one reply?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, may I, without troubling the honorable Senator from Delaware, ask him for the authority on which he ascribes to Mr. Morton that sentiment?

Mr. BAYARD. I find the extract from Senator Morton's opinion published on the 24th of February in the report of the Trades Assembly of the Chinese Committee, ending with an appeal to the American people and stating themselves to be—

> The representative assembly of trades and labor unions of the Pacific coast, having appointed a committee some three months ago to collect statistics on the Chinese cooly-labor question, now present the result of its investigations as contained herein.

And in the course of that appeal—and I shall have it read presently—occurs the language which I have just read and which is ascribed to the late Senator Morton who, it is said,

> Joined with the other members of the committee in declaring that it has become painfully evident that the Pacific coast must in time either become American or Mongolian.
> Also, that the Chinese have advantages which will put them far in advance in this race for possession. They can subsist where the American would starve. They can work for wages which will not furnish the barest necessities of life to an American.

Mr. HOAR. Will the honorable Senator permit me to say that Senator Morton left unfinished at his death a document which stated his conclusions upon the evidence taken by the Congressional committee of which he was a member, in large part, and conclusions diametrically opposite to, impossible to be reconciled with, the existence of such an opinion as has been ascribed to him, if I correctly understand what the Senator now says. I will say further that the gentleman to whom Senator Morton, his strength being somewhat impaired, dictated that report I saw yesterday. I read to the Senate some portions of it. Some sentences will be found in the remarks which I had the honor to submit. I should trespass on the courtesy of the honorable Senator if I were to undertake to read them through. I was inclined to do so when I rose; but I will not ask the Senator to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall be very glad for any and all facts to be presented.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to read?

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator will understand that for the purposes of the short discussion which I propose in this case, I had rather read what I have read for its force, it being adopted by the people of California and by the trades unions, than to stand upon the fact whether it was in ipsissimis verbis the language of Mr. Morton himself. They adopt this language supposing him to have used it, and I adopt it as their language, as what I believe to be a correct statement of the proposition; unless some check shall be put to it there is that alternative and none other. You are to choose, Senators, sooner or later, and soon rather than late—you are to choose between the civilization of the United States, of our own systems social, political and religious, and that of China.

Mr. HOAR. I did not rise, I should not have taken the liberty of asking the honorable Senator from Delaware to yield that I might interject into his speech a reply to the argument or the point he was making. It was only as to the fact of the opinion of Senator Morton. Now, my belief is that there is nothing which could have more distressed that distinguished Senator and lover of liberty than to have the opinion ascribed to him which the Senator has ascribed on the authority of this meeting.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him to read again the sentiment ascribed to Senator Morton?

Mr. BAYARD. With pleasure. I may remark that it is ascribed to Senator Morton and the committee with whom he acted:

> The late Senator Morton joined with the other members of the committee in declaring that "it has become painfully evident that the Pacific coast must in time either become American or Mongolian;" also, that "the Chinese have advantages which will put them far in advance in the race for possession; they can subsist where the American would starve; they can work for wages which will not furnish the barest necessaries of life to an American."

Mr. McMILLAN. The committee referred to in that extract, as I understand it, was a committee of the Senate appointed in 1877 which visited the Pacific coast, of which Senator Morton was the chairman, and of which I had the honor to be a member. The Senator's colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] was also a member of that committee. The committee journeyed to the Pacific coast and remained and spent some weeks there.

Mr. FARLEY. If the Senator will allow me to correct him as to a question of date, the committee that was appointed to investigate the Chinese question, of which Senator Morton was chairman, was appointed in 1876, and the investigation took place in the city of San Francisco in October and November, 1876.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand that; but the extract quoted by the Senator from Delaware refers to a committee appointed in 1877, of which Senator Morton was chairman, and of which committee I had the honor to be a member. We were together during a period of six weeks, and I wish, in justice to Senator Morton's memory and in justice to myself, to say that I never heard an intimation from Senator Morton at any time during the period we were together at all changing his opinions in regard to the Chinese question as expressed in the minority report, which has been referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I certainly never expressed any such opinion as that imputed to Senator Morton in connection with other members of that committee.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President I have not the slightest objection, on the contrary I am very glad indeed, to hear the Senators who were members of that committee in regard to any fact——

Mr. MILLER, of California. Will the Senator from Delaware permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator will allow me to conclude and then I will with pleasure give way. It strikes me that there has been rather a misapprehension in this interruption and in this debate. I was not making a statement of my own knowledge. I expressly stated the paper from which I read this language; I did not vouch for its authenticity. It must stand or fall by its own weight, and I am very glad if it be inaccurate that it should be impeached, and if any statements in it be incorrect that they should be set right. So far as I am concerned, in the few remarks I was submitting to the Senate, it strikes me that the interruption has been really very fruitless, and I say that with all respect and in all kindness.

Now, Mr. President, it is no impeachment of the character of Chinese civilization, it is no denunciation of them, either as a people or as individuals, to say that they are unlike ourselves, to say that their civilization has proceeded and to-day is based upon a principle profoundly different from our own. So far as I can learn, the great governing principle of the Chinese Empire over its people is the sense of a dominating and coercive exterior force. So far as I comprehend the true strength of American civilization, it is from the interior; it is from the self-expression; it is that which lies within his breast that governs the citizen, and not his fear of and compulsion of that which lies without. Taking that great and as I consider profound distinction between the main-springs of power of the two governments, to what results are you led? That you are to rely upon the voluntary principle of self-government to control a people and a race which have never known any but the involuntary principle of coercive government! These habits of thought and rule are ingrained. We are all children of the same Great Father, but by centuries of habit marked and essential characteristics are formed, and the characteristics of nations are so widely different, that he who fails to recognize them, must be blind indeed, or utterly regardless of those great facts, which are not improperly styled "God's arguments."

Now, sir, without, as I say, impeaching the variant civilizations, or speaking unkindly or with any absence of proper humanity and sense of human brotherhood, toward these different nations of the earth, the question is for us to determine how far they can and do adjust themselves to those things near and dear to us, and which we believe to be the very foundation-stones of our social and political existence. That is the question.

I will not detain the Senate, for I have no set speech to make upon this subject, worthy as it is of the most careful study and of the most deliberate discussion; but when I say that these oriental populations write us backward, I state a familiar truth in a familiar way. Many of their conventional virtues are held by us to be vices; many things admirable in them, according to their code, are with us punishable by law. Their system of marriage, their systems of religion, the relations of the sexes, are wholly and utterly different from our own. It was only the other day that we heard the practice of polygamy in Utah discussed in this body. There was not a man in this body who did not raise his hands in horror at it. There was difference of opinion as to the means of stopping it; but that it was a social and political evil, and an evil fatal to the existence of a republican state, was admitted everywhere. And in the case of these oriental populations what have you? You know partly, not thoroughly and well, but you know well enough to judge, what the marital relation is in China; and how can any American speak of comparing that with the monogamy existing in this country, or the relations of the sexes under their different institutions of marriage? Who desires to see the American matron degraded to the position of the so-called Chinese wife?

No, sir, the civilizations are totally distinct and different; they are founded upon different bases; they lead to different results; they cannot be followed under the same political forms, and I do not see how any intelligent man, studying the history and character of the Chinese people, their habits, and traditions, the results, consequences, and accompaniments of their peculiar and wonderful civilization, can believe that a republic is possible under such conditions. Their immense superiority in point of numbers we all admit. It is that very fact that rises like a dark cloud in the mind of every man, woman, and child upon the Pacific slope. It is the very fact of their mighty and inexhaustible numbers, that creates alarm and consternation on that coast. It has been truly said that if the practice of infanticide were arrested for only ten years in China, the natural increase of population would be sufficient to swamp the American population upon the Pacific slope. I find from the same paper from which I have read and which I ask to have published in the RECORD for the benefit of the Senate—

> It has been calculated that the number of Chinese in California is about 150,000, or nearly 20 per cent. greater than the number of male whites capable of bearing arms.

Although forming one-sixth of the total population of California, they pay less than one four-hundredth part of the revenue required for the State government. In the city of San Francisco they number from 35,000 in summer to 40,000 and 50,000 in winter, when many come in from the country. In his testimony before the Senate committee Alexander Badlam, assessor of San Francisco, said the Chinese in the city have personal property to the amount of $500,000, and real estate to the amount of $200,000 assessed to them, thereby only paying one three-thousandth part of the taxes, although forming nearly one-sixth of the population. Nearly $8,000,000 are sent home to China annually on the Pacific coast.

The Chinese women are imported almost wholly for the purpose of prostitution, San Francisco being cursed with about four thousand of these human chattels, and whose contamination and pollution are destroying our youths.

Mr. President, I would ask any Senator, does he believe that a State, with such an element of population, if it shall continue to flow in with a mighty current until it shall become a majority of the people, is capable of being a republican State in any sense demanded by our Constitution? If, then, in those States that are, and in those inchoate States that are to be, this impossibility, this inherent impossibility of republican government exists, can you with fidelity, not simply to our civilization, which may be a more indefinite phrase, but to the Federal Constitution itself, which compels the Union to guarantee a republican form of government to each State—can you withhold a remedy to an evil, which so appallingly threatens to create a class of States within our Union not republican in form or substance, and to change the American to the Mongolian system of civilization?

Mr. President, I have said as much as, perhaps more than, I intended when I rose. There are many other features of this law, there are many other results of this law, of deep and great interest, but I have said enough to satisfy me that I should be wrong, in the face of the facts proven to exist, and in full hearing of that cry of distress from that section of the country, if I did not feel authorized by the very spirit of comity, and by this treaty deliberately and voluntarily made and solemnized between these two nations, to apply a remedy, and apply it at once, and for a practical period, not ten years short and unstable.

Here perhaps I may as well present for insertion in the RECORD the "appeal" to which I have alluded.

An appeal to the working men and women of the United States.

The representative assembly of trades and labor unions of the Pacific coast, having appointed a committee some three months ago to collect statistics on the Chinese cooly-labor question, now present the result of its investigations as contained herein.

The time has come when decisive action must be taken to stop Chinese immigration. A bill will be introduced in the United States Senate in December by Senator MILLER, of California, totally prohibiting Chinese immigration into the United States, and the other California Representatives have promised to support the bill for this purpose. The people of California desire the hearty co-operation of all interested in the freedom and elevation of labor throughout the United States to agitate this question by public demonstration at the time the bill is introduced in the Senate, and thus bring the pressure of public opinion to bear upon Congress, in order to show that the people are alive to the importance and gravity of the situation.

The experience of thirty years of Chinese cooly competition with free white labor on the Pacific coast entitles us to speak with every degree of authority as to its pernicious and degrading effects. This competition is inevitably destructive, and will be certain to force the laboring American down in habits and expenses of life to the level of the half-barbarian. Labor should be honorable and honored, and not degraded by being compelled to compete with a debased and servile race. In the struggle between cooly and free white labor the latter is heavily handicapped. The cooly brings neither wife nor family with him; consequently he finds no difficulty in underbidding the Caucasian worker, who maintains his family in a decent, civilized manner, and has been taught to believe that honorable toil is worthy of more than a bare subsistence. The cooly comes here with the sole purpose of accumulating all the money he can. To do so he lives poorly, crowded together as close as possible without regard to sanitary requirements—a hundred of them being contented in a house not large enough for ten of our own race—and, as a consequence, they have developed all the evils engendered by such overcrowding and close personal contact. His five thousand years' training to wretched frugality in competition with his five hundred million of fellow-Mongolians has taught him how to live upon the least possible amount of air and food. The conflict of the two races in California has, so far, only been a question of the "survival of the CHEAPEST," and not a "survival of the fittest." Cheap labor, as such, is a curse to any country—even from a dollar-and-cent stand-point. The policy of cheap labor is a policy tending to the degradation and decivilization of the many by the enrichment and advancement of the few, and as such we must oppose it. The permanent prosperity of a country depends upon the just distribution of the wealth of labor among the producers of it.

In 1877 a Congressional committee was appointed to take evidence in California from all classes of the community in order to arrive at an intelligent estimate of the influence and probable results of unrestricted Chinese immigration. After impartially investigating the question, in their report they spoke of the Chinese as "making their way by revolting characteristics and by dispensing with what would be mere necessaries in modern civilization." The late Senator Morton joined with the other members of the committee in declaring that "it has become painfully evident that the Pacific coast must in time either become American or Mongolian;" also, that "the Chinese have advantages which will put them far in advance in the race for possession; they can subsist where the American would starve; they can work for wages which will not furnish the barest necessaries of life to an American."

The evidence taken before the California State senate committee on Chinese immigration, at Sacramento, in 1878, when testimony was taken from witnesses of all classes—clergymen, judges, lawyers, ship captains, State and city officials, &c.—fully sustained the general belief of the people of California as to the disastrous consequences of Chinese presence in this country.

THE GREAT NUMBER.

It has been calculated that the number of Chinese in California is about one hundred and fifty thousand, or nearly 20 per cent. greater than the number of male whites capable of bearing arms. Although forming one-sixth of the total population of California, they pay less than one four-hundredth part of the revenue required for the State government. In the city of San Francisco they number from thirty-five thousand in summer to forty and fifty thousand in winter, when many come in from the country. In his testimony before the Senate committee, Alexander Badlam, assessor of San Francisco, said the Chinese in the city have personal property to the amount of $500,000, and real estate to the amount of $200,000 assessed to them, thereby only paying one three-thousandth part of the taxes, although forming nearly one-sixth of the population.

Nearly $8,000,000 are sent home to China annually on the Pacific coast.

The Chinese women are imported almost wholly for the purpose of prostitution, San Francisco being cursed with about four thousand of these human chattels, and whose contamination and pollution are destroying our youths.

Our objections to the Chinese may be summed up as follows: They underbid white men in the labor market; purchase little or no American products and manufactures; live squalidly crowded together, constantly engendering disease; unlike white immigrants, they do not come to make homes with us and help build up the country, but come without wives or children; they do not and cannot assimilate with the Caucasian race; they continue their heathenish religion and customs; evade our laws, especially internal revenue, whenever possible; use the State and Federal laws frequently to carry out sentences which have been awarded by their own secret tribunals, and also to keep Chinese women in a state of bondage and prostitution, these poor creatures being openly bought and sold among them; have secret tribunals of their own for trying and punishing those who dare to rebel against the arbitrary authority of the Chinese companies, which, under the name of benevolent associations, virtually control nearly all the Chinese in the State, these companies, through their agents, making contracts to supply workmen, receiving the wages from the white contractor and settling with the Chinese cooly after their own fashion. Recent developments show that the Six Companies have been increased to nine in number. The dangerous criminal element among the Chinese, known as "Highbinders"—men ready for any deed of violence for a money consideration—leagued with the gamblers and others, have lately succeeded in gaining control of the Chinese companies, who levy blackmail and collect head-tax. One company alone collected $4,000 head-tax on the departure of the China steamer this month—November. This latter practice is carried on in defiance of a State law passed by the last Legislature to prevent such infamous extortions.

The results in all occupations where the Chinese compete with white labor are most disastrous to the latter. In cigar-making they have nearly driven out the whites. In 1878 there were about five hundred white cigar-makers in San Francisco. At present they number only one hundred and seventy-nine. The Chinese cigar-makers number 8,500. A large quantity of tobacco is brought to California from the East, manufactured into cigars by Chinamen in San Francisco, and reshipped east, to the amount of sixteen to eighteen million cigars a month, thus directly competing with eastern white labor. The white cigar-makers of California have suffered more from the curse of Chinese labor than any other trade, most of whom, despairing of any improvement in the future, have left the State or engaged in other employments.

In view of the foregoing facts, we repeat our appeal to the producers of the United States to agitate this question when the bill is introduced in the Senate, and thus arouse the public to the danger that is threatening white labor throughout the Union. Unless stringent measures are adopted to entirely prohibit emigration we are lost, for the evil, although greatest on the Pacific coast, is working its way eastward, and all large cities now have their Chinese colony. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. The experience of the Pacific coast must be heeded as a warning to the eastern people to crush the evil before it is too late. By united effort success is assured. Our cause is just, and should prevail.

Twenty years is short enough for this; and for that reason I hope there will be no hesitation in assenting to this perfectly reasonable proposition, so amply authorized by the terms of the treaty, that we may "suspend such coming or residence but may not absolutely prohibit it;" and that this measure of relief may be passed and passed speedily to relieve the apprehensions of our own people, of our own race, of our own citizens upon the Pacific coast. I propose, after this amendment has been disposed of, to offer one or two amendments which I may as well explain while I am up to save the trouble of further discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware can hand his amendments to the Secretary and have them printed.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not propose to offer any amendments at this moment, but merely to suggest them so that when I do offer them they may be understood, for I do not think they will be objected to, and this may save me the trouble of further discussion hereafter.

In section 2 there is a penalty against the master of any vessel bringing this class of immigrants within the jurisdiction of the United States. I think that the penalty is too roughly affixed and that no man should be punished who does not "knowingly" violate this law. I believe the word "knowingly" should be interpolated on the second line of the second section after the word "shall." I think further that on the third line not only should there be the words "knowingly on such vessel bring within the jurisdiction of the United States" but the words should also be inserted "and permit to be landed." The two things I think should be necessary to constitute the offense, first that there was the intent to violate the act, and next that the spirit of the act had been violated by permitting the landing of this class of people, because one or two might be on board a vessel secreted without the knowledge of the master as is oftentimes the case in voyages between here and Europe, and be discovered after the ship had left port; and yet it would subject the captain to malicious prosecution by some one who proposed to levy black-mail on him. I have no doubt the amendments are reasonable and they will probably be accepted by the honorable Senator from California.

I should also be disposed to enlarge the time, after the passage of this act, for this class of people to come in and make it ninety days instead of sixty, but that is simply a question of detail, not affecting the main object of the bill, but I think relieving it from any possible hardship in individual cases where from want of knowledge of the law the thing may be attempted, for the penalties are very severe involving heavy fines and long imprisonment.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he expects to resume legislative business after the executive session?

Mr. HARRIS. I have no such expectation, Mr. President; but I am quite satisfied, with the amendments already suggested, that this bill cannot be finally acted on to-night unless we sit to an unusually late hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think we can dispose of this bill in half an hour. If we keep right at it we can do it easily in half an hour. Most of the amendments are unimportant and can be readily passed on. I insist upon having a vote to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] wanted to speak on Monday.

Mr. MILLER, of California. He has withdrawn his request in that regard, and I shall be glad if the Senate will continue the consideration of the bill, and finish it to-night.

Mr. TELLER. I am willing to vote to continue this bill, but I have no idea that we can finish it to-night.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Let us try it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 29, noes 22.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 3, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CLAIMS FOR HORSES LOST.

Mr. HASKELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4776) to provide for the payment of claims for horses used in the service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF JAMES RILEY.

Mr. HASKELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4777) for the relief of the estate of James Riley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TRUE E. G. PETTENGILL.

Mr. HASKELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4778) for the relief of True E. G. Pettengill; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM C. O'BRIEN.

Mr. HASKELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4779) for the relief of William C. O'Brien; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SOLOMON SPITZER.

Mr. BLISS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4780) for the relief of Solomon Spitzer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BROWNE. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask that the evenings of Monday and Friday of next week be set aside for the consideration of private pension claims on the Calendar; and that the House take a recess on those evenings from half past four until half past seven o'clock, for the consideration of such claims only, no other business being transacted.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. BROWNE. Do I understand that objection has been made?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. If in order I will state to the House the reasons for my objection.

MARINE HOSPITAL, MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. No. 1233 be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the title of the bill to be read, after which objection will be asked for.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read a first and second time. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee," approved May 3, 1880, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the word "purchase," in the second section of said act, the words "at voluntary sale or by condemnation;" so that it will read:

That the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to procure a proper site in or near the city of Memphis, Tennessee, and cause to be erected thereon a building suitable for a marine hospital, after plans and specifications which shall be furnished under his direction by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money now in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase, at voluntary sale or by condemnation, of said site and the erection of the aforesaid building thereon; and the cost of the site and the erection of the building shall in no event exceed the sum hereby appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no wish to object to the present consideration of the bill, but it seems to me that the gentleman from Tennessee ought to be permitted to explain why it is that this bill is necessary.

Mr. MOORE. The appropriation for the construction of this building was made by the last Congress, but by the time the building was to begin it was discovered that there was a flaw in the title. The Department of Justice, with a view to clearing the title, inserted this amendment to the original bill, and ask its adoption by Congress. This bill is therefore, Mr. Speaker, to clear the title only and permit the construction to go on.

Mr. ATKINS. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that it is a mere re-enactment to cure a faulty title.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and, being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. MOORE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LICENSE FEES OF OFFICERS OF STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 1302) in relation to license fees of officers of steam-vessels, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the title of the bill to be read, after which objection to its present consideration will be asked for.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1302) to amend section 4458 of the Revised Statutes, relating to license fees of officers of steam-vessels.

Mr. MILLS. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4458 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended by striking out the words "ten dollars" in the eleventh line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one dollar and fifty cents," and by striking out the words "five dollars" in the twelfth line and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-five cents."

Mr. DUNNELL. I think this is a very important bill. It involves the revenues of the Government quite largely, and there should be some explanation in reference to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I will make a statement if the House will permit me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CAMP. I desire to object, but will reserve the objection until the gentleman makes his statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that in 1852 the license fees were $5 for each engineer and pilot of steam-vessels, and $1 for each renewal. In 1864 this was increased to $10 for each, and no reduction on renewal. By an act passed February 8, 1871, the number of persons who were compelled to take out license was increased. All of these license fees have been accumulating in the Treasury, and are used to create a fund with a view to making the service of inspection self-sustaining. There is now in the Treasury of the United States over $600,000 collected from these fees, and also collected on inspectors of vessels, which sum is lying there in the Treasury at this time. This is the only class of individuals in the United States to-day who are compelled to pay a license tax, and these persons have been paying these fees into the Treasury for the last fifteen years. It is only just that they should be relieved from the payment of this personal tax. I ask, therefore, that the bill be taken from the Calendar and put upon its passage.

Mr. REAGAN. In addition to what the gentleman from New York has said I desire to state that in three different Congresses the Committee on Commerce have agreed substantially to this reduction.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4781) making appropriations for the construction, repair, completion, and preservation of certain works on the Mississippi River in accordance with the recommendations, plans, specifications, and estimates of the Mississippi River Commission; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, and ordered to be printed.

MAPS OF NAVIGABLE RIVERS, ETC.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish for the use of the Committee on Commerce of the said House a complete set of maps and engineers' charts of the navigable rivers and harbors of the United States, at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR and Mr. RANDALL called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports; this being Friday, only reports of a private nature are in order.

GEORGE W. WICKS & CO.

Mr. HASKELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4782) for the relief of George W. Wicks & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH CONRAD.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1432) for the relief of Joseph Conrad; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE S. TRAMEL.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 32) for the relief of George S. Tramel; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

EMANUEL KLAUSER.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1982) for the relief of Emanuel Klauser; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM T. M'COY.

Mr. JOYCE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1421, a bill (H. R. No. 4783) granting a pension to William T. McCoy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DANIEL D. LONG.

Mr. JOYCE also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3064, a bill (H. R. No. 4784) granting a pension to Daniel D. Long; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS S. HOPKINS.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2769, a bill (H. R. No. 4785) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DENNIS SULLIVAN.

Mr. RAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1012, a bill (H. R. No. 4786) granting an increase of pension to Dennis Sullivan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CATHERINE SILVEY.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2148) granting a pension to Catherine Silvey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. M'BRAYER.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 539) granting a pension to John H. McBrayer, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN F. DOBSON.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a subsitute for House bill No. 2257, a bill (H. R. No. 4787) for the relief of Benjamin F. Dobson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN MACK.

Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4022) granting a pension to John Mack; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. W. LINKER.

Mr. WEBBER, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with an adverse recommendation the petition of J. W. Linker, a soldier of the Mexican war; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHILDREN OF JOHN PHEMESTER.

Mr. WEBBER also, from the same committee, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1262) granting a pension to the children of John Phemester; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY WADE.

Mr. BROWNE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1422) granting a pension to Mary Wade; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ELIZA M. FRICK.

Mr. BROWNE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1487) granting a pension to Eliza M. Frick, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN TAYLOR.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1166) granting a pension to John Taylor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WARREN HALL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have a report to make from the Committee on War Claims, and before doing so I desire to make a statement to the House. Some time since the House passed a Senate bill for the relief of Warren Hall. A similar bill had been referred to the Committee on War Claims. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HALL] who had the bill in charge has requested me to report the bill back to the House and, in view of the fact that a Senate bill for the relief of the same person has already been passed by the House, to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that the bill be laid upon the table. It is House bill No. 1727, for the relief of Warren Hall.

The bill was received and laid upon the table.

MOBILE MARINE DOCK COMPANY.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4.) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that the same be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The call of committees was resumed and concluded.

Mr. McCLURE. I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit the report.

DISTRIBUTION OF SENATE AND HOUSE JOURNALS.

Mr. McCLURE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives to public and law libraries.

The SPEAKER. That is not a private bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not require any expenditure of the public money. There are surplus documents of this kind in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior, and he desires authority to distribute them to such public libraries as have not a complete set of them, and where they would be of more use than in his possession.

Mr. McCLURE. I ask that it be referred to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order under this call. The Chair was of the opinion that the gentleman desired to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

JOHN G. ABERCROMBIE.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 28) for the relief of John G. Abercrombie; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask the gentleman to permit me to submit a request to the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no objection, if it does not take up too much time.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on Foreign Affairs have leave to sit during the sessions of the House while prosecuting the investigations which they have been directed by the House to make.

The SPEAKER. What investigations?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. In regard to the Chilian and Peruvian correspondence, and other investigations which have been ordered.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

ADMISSION OF SOUTHERN DAKOTA AS A STATE.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that Tuesday, the 4th of April next, be set apart by the House for the consideration of the bill for the admission of Southern Dakota as a State.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, and call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before going into Committee of the Whole, I desire to ask consent of the House to take up and consider a joint resolution granting permission to an officer of the Army to accept a position under the Government of the United States of Colombia.

The SPEAKER. The House has already decided to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HENDERSON. If this joint resolution is to pass, it is very important that it should be passed now.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can that interrupt the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have been waiting for the river to run dry, but I see that I shall have to cross over the bridge after all, and I object.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The House has already decided to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. BELFORD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 670) for the relief of William M. Maynadier.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the absence of the honorable gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] who has charge of this bill, I ask that it be passed over.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to that. And the next bill on the Calendar, for the relief of Major Candee, another paymaster of the Army, which was also sent back to the Committee of the Whole, ought to be passed over.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to have both bills passed over, not to lose their places on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MARTHA A. LEWIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2141) granting a pension to Martha A. Lewis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha A. Lewis, widow of William G. Lewis, late a private in Company B, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2141) granting a pension to Martha A. Lewis, have considered the same, and report:

The committee find the facts to be as stated in House Report No. 1142, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, which said report is hereto annexed and made part of this report:

"Martha A. Lewis is the widow of William G. Lewis, who was enlisted as a private in Company B, Second Regiment Vermont Infantry Volunteers, August 15, 1862; discharged said service on account of disability February 12, 1863, and died January 21, 1871, of tubercular consumption.

"It is alleged that his death was occasioned by disease contracted during his service in the Army.

"The Adjutant-General reports: 'William G. Lewis sick in hospital, Washington, D. C., November and December, 1862; discharged for disability February 12, 1863.'

"The Surgeon-General reports: 'Private William G. Lewis, Company B, Second Vermont Volunteers, admitted to Epiphany Hospital, Washington, D. C., November 17, 1862, with febris typhoid, and transferred January 12, 1863; was admitted to Columbian College Government Hospital, District of Columbia, January 12, 1863, with febris typhoid, and discharged the service February 11 or 12, 1863. Cause, chronic hepatitis; not incident to service.'

"Surgeon's certificate of disability for discharge states: 'William G. Lewis is incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of chronic hepatitis, having existed previous to enlistment.'

"Lewis L. Bateman, Levi L. Munson, and Joseph Mears testify that they were comrades of Lewis in the service; that they knew him before his enlistment intimately; that he was to all appearance a sound man, and they so considered him; that while in the service he was sick, sent to hospital, and discharged; that they saw him immediately after the regiment was mustered out of service; that at that time his health was totally shattered, and that he was never well again.

"The claimant files an affidavit in which she states her inability to procure the affidavit of the surgeon of said regiment because of her ignorance of his residence.

"Dr. S. H. Griswold states that he was called to treat the said Lewis in April, 1870, and found him suffering from tubercular consumption; that he continued to treat him till his death, in January, 1871.

"Dr. L. D. Ross testifies that he knew the soldier well prior to his enlistment, and that at that time he knew him to be to all appearance a sound man; that no disease had at that time developed itself, and he continues: 'Had it been otherwise, it would seem to me, from my intimate acquaintance with him, I must have known it.' Dr. Ross says that some time after the soldier's discharge he treated him professionally for a chronic cough, which the soldier claimed he contracted in the Army. At that time he was somewhat emaciated and unable to labor. Dr. Ross continues:

"'Between the 20th March and 20th April, 1865, I was called to attend and treat said soldier for pneumonia, and found him with high fever, difficult breathing, great pain in left lung, distressing cough, expectorating musty-colored sputa, left lung heavily congested, from which, after fourteen or fifteen days, he began to amend, and so far recovered as to be able to do some light work. He never fully recovered from the cough, which after a few months began to grow worse, and he continued to lose flesh. This condition continued as long as I knew him until his removal to Rutland, Vermont, when I ceased to treat him. I am of opinion he never was a well man after his discharge from the Army.'

"The marriage of claimant to the soldier is fully shown by competent testimony, as is also the birth of the following children, issue of said marriage: Laura, born February 7, 1860; Nettie E., March 3, 1862; Ella L., May 15, 1864; Charles W., August 28, 1868; Frankie L., August 31, 1868."

The committee are satisfied from all the evidence that the disease of which the soldier died was attributable to his Army service, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOYCE. When this bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole a week ago there was some question raised by gentlemen here as to whether this claimant had made an application to the Pension Bureau. I could not then answer the inquiry definitely, although I stated I had no doubt that such application had been made and rejected. I immediately took measures to find out the fact, and have received from the Pension Bureau a line saying that the claim was made there and rejected.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask the gentleman whether his communication from the Commissioner states on what ground the application was rejected?

Mr. JOYCE. It does not. I have only a line from the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. BUCKNER. When was the application made?

Mr. JOYCE. This line from the Commissioner does not show that.

Mr. BUCKNER. It seems to me that the application presented in this case is simply an appeal from the judgment of the Pension Bureau upon a question of fact, which should be determined either by a court or by the appropriate department of the Government, that question being whether the disease of which the claimant's husband died grew out of his service as a soldier. Now, I submit to the House whether we ought not to put a stop to such proceedings as this. We have organized a tribunal with judicial powers to decide these questions. We have prescribed the sort of testimony which shall be required in order to make out a case; and the tribunal established by us, with jurisdiction over the question, has decided that this party is not entitled under the law to a pension. Yet, in spite of such decisions, parties come here day after day and year after year asking us to review the judgment of this tribunal which we have authorized and whose decision is conclusive upon the Government, though we make it inconclusive as to the pensioner himself.

We have talked about establishing courts to decide cases of a private nature. What is the use of doing so if we thus oust the jurisdiction of the tribunals we establish and take upon ourselves the authority to decide questions of fact which have been once passed upon by a tribunal established by law?

Sir, this Calendar is full of just such cases. We may sit here forever and never come nearer to right and justice than this court; for it is a quasi court—a tribunal organized under the law and exercising a quasi-judicial power in the investigation of testimony and the decision of questions between the Government and these various claimants. By declining to reconsider cases which have thus been once decided we ought to put a stop to the presentation of such cases here; otherwise we shall never get rid of these private claims of this character.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

SAMUEL BURWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1979) granting a pension to Samuel Burwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Burwell.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In the fourth and fifth lines strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and add to the bill the words "at the rate of $20 per month from the passage of this act."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, [Mr. BROWNE,] why these words should be struck out.

Mr. BROWNE. If my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] is addressing himself to me, I must say in response that I do not hear a word he says. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. My question is, why the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" should be struck out?

Mr. BROWNE. Because, for reasons stated in the report, the committee propose to fix in the bill a special rate of pension different from that fixed by the general law. I ask that the Clerk read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1979) granting a pension to Samuel Burwell, of La Salle County, Illinois, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to make the following report:

It appears from the evidence submitted in this case that the petitioner enlisted as a private in Company C, Twentieth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers, June 27, 1861. He was discharged from the service March 28, 1862, in consequence of a severe attack of piles. The petitioner returned to his home in Minnesota, and was authorized to enlist soldiers for the Army, and by the 21st of August, 1862, had succeeded in forming a company of one hundred and three men. On the 14th day of August, 1862, he was commissioned as second lieutenant of Company B, Tenth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, in which capacity he served until the winter of 1863–'64, when he was promoted to the position of first lieutenant. He remained with the company, rendering active service until discharged at Fort Snelling, about August 21, 1865. He was in the battle of Mill Springs, Kentucky, and in all the other battles in which his regiment was engaged.

At the date of his first enlistment, in 1861, the petitioner was a well-preserved man of fifty-five years of age. He served continuously during the entire war of the rebellion, except three months in 1862, and during that time he was recruiting soldiers for the Army. While in the service he was troubled to some extent with diabetes, from which he still suffers. He is now more than seventy-six years of age; is poor, having no relatives upon whom he can depend for support, and no property. He thinks the country he served so well should save him from a pauper's portion the few remaining years he may live. The petitioner served also in the Mexican war.

The relief prayed for, if granted, must be at least partially in the nature of a gratuity pension, and your committee have decided to report favorably on the prayer of the petitioner, and recommend the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1979) amended as hereinafter stated, granting a pension to Samuel Burwell at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. CULLEN. I desire to correct a typographical error which occurs in the second line of the body of the report. It should read "second regiment" instead of "twentieth regiment."

I will say, also, that this is the unanimous report of a full committee. The case is one of unusual merit, Mr. Burwell being now over seventy-six years of age, and a man who deserves well of his country. I trust the bill will pass this Committee of the Whole, as it did the Committee on Invalid Pensions, unanimously.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 67, noes 10.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill as amended will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

JOHN B. TRAINER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of John B. Trainer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John B. Trainer, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $267.74, for services as messenger in the House of Representatives during the years 1877 and 1878.

Mr. CAMP. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of John B. Trainer, having had the same under consideration, find that the same bill was before the last Congress, and was unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims for favorable action.

Mr. Covert, of New York, in his report for the committee, says:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6580) for the relief of John B. Trainer, report as follows:

"Your committee, after a thorough examination, find the facts in the case to be as follows: That John B. Trainer was duly appointed a messenger in the House of Representatives at the opening of the Forty-fourth Congress, and continued to do duty as such until he resigned, February 1, 1878; that he was regularly paid until the month of October, 1877, for which month and the month of November he received, all told, $135.59; that under the representations of John W. Polk, Doorkeeper of the House, and the assurance that he would surely be paid, Mr. Trainer continued to do duty until he resigned, February 1, 1878; that Mr. Trainer reported for duty and performed the same daily during that period is a fact well known to nearly every gentleman from New York who was a member of Congress at that time.

"Your committee find the salary due Mr. Trainer, and to which he was clearly entitled, to be:

For October, November, and December, 1877	$300 00
For January, 1878	103 33
	403 33
Less the amount paid	135 59
Leaving amount due him	267 74

"Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

The statements of the report are fully justified by the facts, and the committee report that the claim is just and should be paid; and they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. CAMP. I desire to inquire of the gentleman having this bill in charge whether the compensation recommended in this case is at the same rate as that allowed to other messengers who performed like service.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The same rate precisely.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

JOHN H. MORRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1136) for the relief of John H. Morris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to John H. Morris, late collector of internal revenue of the tenth district of New York, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $823.17, it being the amount due him upon a settlement of his account with the Treasurer of the United States for services as such collector for the term of one year and three days, ending April 10, 1864, under and by virtue of an act of Congress passed July 1, 1862, and amended by an act of Congress passed May 3, 1863, said sum having been refunded by him, under protest, upon a claim made by the Secretary of the Treasury that the compensation for his services should be governed and controlled by an act of Congress passed after he had rendered the services for which he claimed the right to retain said moneys, and after his term of office had ceased, to wit, on the 30th of June, 1864.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of John H. Morris, late collector of internal revenue of the tenth district of the State of New York, having had the same under consideration, would respectfully report:

The report of the Committee on Claims of the Forty-fifth Congress (No. 904) was as follows:

"That the claimant was appointed collector of said district April 7, 1863, and held said office and faithfully discharged the duties thereof for one year and three days, when he resigned said office and turned over the same to his successor. The right of the claimant to the relief prayed for depends upon the construction to be placed upon the laws relating to the compensation of collectors, and especially upon the act of June 30, 1864.

"When Mr. Morris was appointed to this office he was entitled, under the act approved July 1, 1862, as amended by the act of May 3, 1863, to compensation as follows: Upon the first $100,000 collected a commission of 4 per cent., and upon all sums over $100,000 a commission of 2 per cent., (the whole not to exceed $10,000 per year,) such commissions to be computed upon the amounts paid over and accounted for by the collector. During the year following the appointment of Mr. Morris, he 'paid over and accounted for' more than $400,000; and, under the laws in force during the whole time he held this office, he was entitled to the sum of $10,000 as his compensation for that year. During the three days following the first year Mr. Morris collected and accounted for the further sum of $13,150.23, upon which, by the law as it then stood, he was entitled to a commission of 4 per cent., or the sum of $526; or to compensation at a rate not exceeding $10,000 per annum. After Mr. Morris had resigned, Congress passed the act approved June 30, 1864, which contains the following provisions:

"'That in the adjustment of the accounts of assessors and collectors of internal revenue which shall accrue after June 30, 1864, and in the payment of their compensation for services after that date, the fiscal year of the Treasury shall be observed; and when such compensation, or any part thereof, shall be by commissions upon assessments or collections, and shall during any year, in consequence of a new appointment, be due to more than one assessor or collector in the same district, such commissions shall be apportioned between such assessors or collectors; and the salary or commissions of assessors and collectors heretofore earned and accrued shall be adjusted, allowed, and paid in conformity to the provisions of this section, and not otherwise.'

"The Secretary of the Treasury, in settling the account of Mr. Morris, claimed that under this statute, passed after Mr. Morris went out of office, the fiscal year of the Treasury should be observed, and the commissions earned by Morris and his predecessor during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863, and those earned by him and his successor during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, should be apportioned; the account of said Morris not having been 'adjusted, allowed, and paid' June 30, 1864, when the act was passed. If this construction of the law is correct, Mr. Morris has no claim to the relief asked for, and if it is not correct, he is entitled to the sum of $1,265.84. In passing upon this question of construction it will be observed that the question could never have arisen had the account of Mr. Morris been settled immediately upon his retirement from the office in April, 1864.

"The committee are of opinion that the construction put upon this statute by the Secretary of the Treasury is not correct. The compensation fixed and determined by the law when this claimant assumed the duties of this office, and which remained so fixed and determined during the whole time he held the office, is, by this construction, taken away from him by an act of Congress passed and approved some two months after he went out of office. The law passed June 30, 1864, is claimed to apply to this account between Mr. Morris and the Treasury Department simply because the account was not settled at the time the act was passed. It must be conceded that if the account had been settled prior to June 30, 1864, as it might and should have been, the claimant would have received for his services the amount he now claims. But when he resigned the office and accounted for and paid over the property and money of the United States in his hands, he had acquired a right to the compensation for his services which the law, up to that time in force, provided for those services; and your committee are of opinion that Congress did not intend by the act of June 30, 1864, to take from him any part of that compensation. The act provides 'that in the adjustment of accounts of collectors,' &c., which shall accrue after June 30, 1864, and in the payment of compensation for services after that date, the fiscal year of the Treasury shall be observed; and when such compensation, &c., 'shall be by commission,' &c., 'and shall during any year in consequence of a new appointment be due to more than one collector in the same year, such commissions shall be apportioned between such assessors,' &c.

There can be no question as to the meaning of this language. It was not intended to be retroactive, or to affect in any way commissions already earned. It speaks only of accounts "which shall accrue" and of "compensation for services after that date," and says that as to them the fiscal year of the Treasury shall be observed, and where there shall be two or more collectors during any fiscal year there shall be an apportionment of their commissions in a certain manner.

The act further provides as follows:

"And the salary or commissions of assessors and collectors heretofore earned and accrued shall be adjusted, allowed, and paid in conformity to the provisions of this section, and not otherwise.

"And the claim is made that this provision makes the language above quoted, relative to the 'fiscal year of the Treasury,' the 'appointment of two or more collectors' during the fiscal year, and the apportionment of their commissions, applicable to all accounts of collectors which were unsettled June 30, 1864, and, therefore, to the account of the claimant. Your committee think this construction of the law cannot be sustained. The accomplishment of the object for which the law was enacted does not require it. That object was to provide hereafter for the observance of the fiscal year in the settlement of these accounts, and as thereafter the accounts of each collection district were to be settled upon a fixed date without regard to the duration of the term or terms of office of the collector or collectors of the district, this provision for an apportionment of the commissions, where there should be more than one collector in the district during any fiscal year, was a proper and necessary one; but there was no necessity for it when the fiscal year was not observed. Nor was there any necessity or propriety for the observance of the fiscal year in the settlement of accounts which accrued prior to June 30, 1864.

"This provision for the observance of the fiscal year seems to have been one for the convenience of the officials of the Treasury Department, in the keeping of the books of the Department; and it is not easy to see how Congress could have discovered any benefit or convenience to the Treasury by the observance of the fiscal year in the settlement of accounts past due. These could be settled at any time. There seems, therefore, to have been no reason for the passage of a law providing for the observance of the fiscal year in the settlement of accounts of collectors who before that time had gone out of office; and your committee are of opinion that this provision was not intended to and does not apply to them. The law by express terms provides for the observance of the fiscal year, and the apportionment of commissions in certain cases, after June 30, 1864, and thereby, by implication, excludes all other cases from the operations of those provisions of the law; and when the law further provides that the commissions before that time earned shall be adjusted, allowed, and paid according to the provisions of that section, it does not mean that, as to such commissions and in the settlement therefor, the fiscal year of the Treasury shall be observed, but that where the term of any officer should be less than one year, his commissions should not be 4 per cent. on the first $100,000 collected, and 2 per cent. on all over $100,000, without regard to the time he held office, but that in such cases the salary or commissions should be apportioned, so that he should in no case receive more than at the rate of $10,000 per year. As the claimant served for more than a full year, this provision of the law has no application to his case. The committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to the sum of $739.84 for his services for the year ending April 7, 1863, and for his services for the three additional days he should be allowed compensation at the rate of $10,000 per year, which would be the sum of $83.33, in all the sum of $823.17.

"The committee report a substitute for the original bill, and recommend that the same do pass."

This committee adopt said report as their own, and therefore report back the accompanying bill, and recommend that the same do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill does not involve a large sum of money, not more than $1,200, but the principle involved is quite important, as under the legislation of 1864, in the adjustment of salaries between outgoing collectors and assessors and incoming collectors and assessors, there was a uniform ruling in harmony with the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury in this case. I apprehend therefore it will be found the principle involved in this bill of making compensation on the basis adopted by the Committee on Claims will give rise to a large number of similar cases growing out of the same state of the law. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] whether he would not deem it safer and better that the question of law involved, as well as the subject-matter, should be referred to the Court of Claims. Let the Committee of the Whole House report the bill back with a recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims, with instructions to amend so as to refer the subject-matter, as well as the question of law, to the Court of Claims.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I do not know of any other case than this, and I think there is no other case of the same kind. This would only have occurred in consequence of the incumbent of the office being entitled to more than $10,000, receiving his pay by commissions. If he had received his commissions on the amount, and been allowed that amount at the time he held the office, he would have been entitled to more than the committee reported, and it is only in consequence of the commissions on the amount which gave rise to this question. The only question presented, Mr. Chairman, is where a party whose account was not settled at the time of the passage of the act, which did not apply to it in any way, can be deprived by it of his just compensation. That is the only question. If Congress can pass such a law as that, they can take away a man's claim if it occurred thirty years ago. There is no limit to it. But there was no intention to pass such a law; and if there was, it is an unjust law, and ought not to be allowed for one moment. This man is entitled to the money, and I wish the House to vote for or against it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend the gentleman is mistaken as to whether the principle involved here is confined to this case. I can remember several myself. It was a difficult matter, under the laws of 1864, 1865, and 1866, to determine exactly the proportion of salary of the outgoing and incoming collector or assessor, taking the year together. Certainly the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury in this case is in harmony with his other decisions. The same question occurred in my own district. If this gentleman receives what is here proposed, it will be making double payment. We are paying the same money over again for the same service. Who knows how many other cases of like character there are?

Now, if my friend from New York had occasion to look into the practice of the Treasury Department during that period in reference to outgoing and incoming collectors and assessors, I think his opinion would be modified. In that connection I would like to ask the gentleman from New York how it happened that a transaction occurring way back in 1864 should not have been determined in some form or other at an earlier moment. This question of law, at one time, was within the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims. How did it happen, if this gentleman had a legal right to this money, he did not go to the Court of Claims and have it adjudicated?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I will answer the gentleman by saying this matter has been before Congress, and this is the third or fourth committee by which it has been favorably reported. If the claimant mistook his remedy and ought to have gone to the Court of Claims, the time has now gone by for that.

There can be no reasonable objection to it. He earned the money, and this House ought not to cut off salaries which are due. The House understands that it is always an honest principle to pay your debts. The Government owes this money. The gentleman does not deny it. It was earned, and it should not be taken away from him. Any court in Christendom would have given it to him. It does not deserve any other consideration but favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say the Government has not paid this money? It necessarily was paid to his successor.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I do not know whether it was paid to his successor or not, or whether it was all paid. All I know, and all that it is necessary to know in this connection, is, that it was not paid to the man who earned it, and if paid at all it was paid to somebody else other than the person entitled to it. In this case the claimant was not paid his salary for this period, being limited to $10,000 per annum, to be made up on commissions, and this sum was not paid to the man who should have received it. I might conceive a case—my own case for instance—where the Government might pay my salary to somebody else, but if it did I should come in and claim it, and have a right to claim it, just as this man had a right to claim his salary. The only question here is, who is entitled to the salary? It is conceded to be due; there is no question in reference to that. It was due for two months before the law of 1864 was passed. The only thing is, shall we pay it? He had a right to it before the passage of that act, and could have gone before any court and brought suit for it; but he waited to have it audited, and because it was not audited before the passage of that law, it was not paid. In point of fact he would be entitled, under a strict construction of the law, to some five hundred dollars more than the Committee have allowed him, but in order to make up that amount he would receive commissions on the sum of $13,150.23 collected by him during the three days after the expiration of the year, and which at 4 per cent. would have amounted to $526. But the committee thought that for these three days he should be allowed at the rate of $10,000 per annum, instead of allowing 4 per cent. on the amount collected.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a single question?

Mr. HUTCHINS. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask if this money has not been paid to the wrong person, and if it is not simply a malappropriation?

Mr. HUTCHINS. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. HOFMAN. But the question here is, was it paid to the wrong person? Has it been paid to the person who earned it or not?

Mr. HUTCHINS. It has not been paid to the person who earned it.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the question.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Have you any doubt that it was paid to the wrong person if it was not paid to the claimant, or that the claimant here was entitled to the money earned by him prior to the passage of the act passed June 30, 1864?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have always thought that the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury was entirely correct.

Mr. HUTCHINS. But have you any doubt that he was entitled to this money at the time of the passage of that act? The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot answer the gentleman in a word, but I will answer him. The yearly salary had not accrued.

Mr. HUTCHINS. But it had.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is mistaken. If I understand the law the salary had not accrued in this case until the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. HUTCHINS. But that is just where the gentleman from Indiana is mistaken. The salary had accrued, but this act of 1864 came in afterward, and the Secretary of the Treasury based his opinion on that act. The salary was due before the passage of the act.

Mr. HOLMAN. He had resigned before the year terminated. The salary had not accrued——

Mr. HUTCHINS. The gentleman from Indiana is totally mistaken. The salary had accrued. The money was due him when he resigned. There is just as much difference as there is between this side of the Potomac and the other. The salary was earned at the rate, for three days, of a sum not to exceed the rate of $10,000 per annum. The committee have allowed the amount that he was entitled to for the year ending April 7, 1863, and think that for the three days over he should be paid at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. This salary was paid by commissions on the amount collected by this officer.

Mr. HUTCHINS. At a rate of $10,000 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. At a rate not to exceed $10,000 a year; and these commissions, as my friend will take notice, did not accrue day by day during the year, but the sum of all the commissions made up the yearly salary, and this sum was ascertained in a great multitude of cases at the expiration of the year, and for that reason you could not estimate a definite period of time in one year which would complete the salary of $10,000. That was the trouble with the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, this gentleman went out of office and was entitled to certain commissions on sums of money that went into the Treasury after that time.

Mr. HUTCHINS. No, sir; on sums of money that had gone into the Treasury before that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not all.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Yes, all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken. That was just the trouble with the Secretary. Therefore, the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into account the sum to be awarded between this party and his successor, gave one part to one of them and the other to his successor, and in that arrangement the successor of this gentleman received this sum of money.

Now, it can hardly be supposed that the Secretary of the Treasury would make a decision so unfair to the Government as that one party should receive all of the commissions while at the same time another party is entitled to a portion of the commissions.

This involves a principle of considerable importance. The question should go to the Court of Claims, to be decided there. The reason why I am more pertinacious is because the matter was within the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims for a long time after this claim accrued, and yet this gentleman did not seem to think it proper or necessary to avail himself of that tribunal. I think he should have gone into the Court of Claims. This presents a question of law for the House to decide, which if decided one way overrules the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say in response to the gentleman from Indiana. Here is an unlettered man, who perhaps did not understand the law as well as my friend from Indiana, who has been here for four or five sessions of Congress trying to get relief, and now to tell him that he should have gone into the Court of Claims I think is a gross injustice.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will make the motion which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims with instructions to amend the bill so as to refer the subject and question of law to the Court of Claims.

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion, there were—ayes 12, noes 40.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be a quorum to decide upon a question like this. I will not, however, insist on a quorum, but will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] when this goes to the House to admit a motion to recommit before the previous question is called.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I agree to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is quite satisfactory.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LIEUTENANT HENRY R. LEMLY.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House take up for consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 54) to authorize Lieutenant Henry R. Lemly, United States Army, to accept a position under the Government of the United States of Colombia.

I think it will take but a moment. It is recommended by the Secretary of War. His letter and the report of the Adjutant-General, which are given in the report of the committee, state what the facts are. The joint resolution simply gives an officer who had sick leave of absence the permission to accept a position as instructor while in the United States of Colombia, which permission is to terminate on the 1st of April, 1883.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That Lieutenant Henry R. Lemly, of the United States Army, be, and he is hereby, permitted to accept from the Government of the United States of Colombia a position of instructor at the military school at Bogota.

The joint resolution was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with the following amendment:

Add to the joint resolution these words:

"Provided, however, That the permission hereby given shall be held to terminate on the 1st day of April, 1883."

The amendment was agreed to; and the joint resolution as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HEIRS OF COLONEL STEPHEN H. LONG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2756) to settle the claim of the heirs of the late Colonel Stephen H. Long, of the United States Topographical Engineers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of William D. Long and Lucy L. Breckenridge, children and heirs of Colonel Stephen H. Long, for compensation for the adoption and use by the United States Government of a certain invention in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors made by said Stephen H. Long, and for which he obtained letters-patent numbered 31811, under the description of "dredging machine," be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, which court is hereby vested with jurisdiction in the premises, and whose duty it shall be to hear and determine whether said Colonel Stephen H. Long was the inventor of said dredging machine, and what amount of compensation, if any, his said children and heirs are justly entitled to receive from the United States for the use of his said invention before or since the date of his letters-patent for the same up to the time of adjudication, and for a full and entire transfer of said patent to the United States; and in determining the amount to be so paid for the use of said invention, and the transfer of the patent therefor, the court shall take into consideration the fact that while the said Stephen H. Long was engaged in perfecting said invention he was in the service of the United States as an officer of Topographical Engineers: Provided, That the amount to be allowed by the Court of Claims for the use and transfer of said invention shall not exceed $20,000. Either party may appeal from the judgment of said Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States within ninety days after the rendition of such judgment, as in other cases of appeal; and any judgment rendered in favor of the claimants shall be paid in manner as other judgments of said Court of Claims; and the payment of the same shall vest the right to said patent in the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2756) to settle the claim of the heirs of Colonel Stephen H. Long, have had the same under consideration, and report:

Stephen H. Long was colonel in the Army of the United States, and was in the department of Topographical Engineers. On the 26th of March, 1861, he was granted by the Government a patent for a dredging machine, called "Long's scraper." This patent is recorded in volume 127, page 248 of records of patents, Interior Department, and is numbered 31811. Colonel Long remained in the service of the Government till his death, on the 4th of September, 1864. The Engineer Department found the scraper of great advantage in the works at the mouth of the Mississippi River, before the war and before it was patented.

It was then used by the inventor, who was in charge of that work. Since his death it has been used in the improvement of the Upper Mississippi, and found to be very serviceable. It is still being used by the Engineer Department of the Government.

Colonel Macomb, of the Engineers, says:

"There has never been a question as to the usefulness of 'Long's scraper' in affording the temporary relief to navigation of the Upper Mississippi River, as described in the written report of Captain Davis; and that sort of relief will be required in every season of low water until a permanent system of improvement of the Upper Mississippi shall have been provided for and executed, as contemplated in the reports and estimates from this office for improving transportation routes to the seaboard."

Captain Davis, of the engineers, says he has used "Long's scraper," and testifies to its efficiency, and the great advantage the Government has derived from its use in the Upper Mississippi River; he recommends the continuance of the use of said scraper.

There is no doubt of the efficiency of the scraper; its constant use by the Government proves that. It is contended by some of the Army officers and others that, as Colonel Long was an officer in the Army and in the pay of the Government, he was not entitled to pay for the use of his patent during his life-time. However that may be, after his death the Government had no right to use his patent without payment to his heirs. This patent is property which they have inherited from their ancestor, and they are under no such obligations to the Government as it is contended their father was. They therefore ask permission to go before the Court of Claims and recover, if they can, compensation for the use of said scraper or dredging machine. To this request we think they have a right to a favorable response; and we therefore report back the bill to the House, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BRAGG. This bill belongs to a class of applications to Congress which it has been my fortune heretofore to oppose, and I hardly feel willing to allow this bill to pass without stating what the objections to it in my judgment are.

This officer was an officer of the Army of the United States. He was educated at the expense of the United States, educated at the school at West Point, wherein he graduated as an engineer, undertaking for the pay which the Government gave him, and for the education which they had given him, to use his brains and his ability at all times and under all circumstances for the Government that had educated him. He was assigned to duty as an engineer in charge of public improvements involving the question of dredging, and by the education which the Government gave him, and in the discharge of his duty as an officer superintending such work, he devised, as an aid to him in the discharge of his duty, this system of dredging, which he had patented. And I maintain, sir, that so far as the Government of the United States is concerned they ought not to be required to pay for that invention to him, which was the result of the education which they gave him and the application of the principles of that education to the department of work to which he was assigned in the discharge of his duty. The fact that it is necessary to come to Congress for a bill to authorize these claimants to go to the Court of Claims shows that there was no provision in the law by which a remedy against the Government of the United States was secured by law. Therefore, when we are called upon to pass a law to give a court jurisdiction to take up a case of this kind, I think we ought to consider the circumstances attendant upon the case; and if we find the invention, as this is, to be the product of the education given by the United States, we should decline to give any court jurisdiction to render a judgment against the United States.

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman from Wisconsin has stated very clearly and very fairly the manner in which this claim originates. This Colonel Long was an officer of the Army, and while in the performance of his duties he invented this machine, which has been found to be useful and valuable to the Government of the United States, and which is still in use by them. Now, the very fact that the Government of the United States patented this machine called "Long's scraper" to Long was evidence that under the law the property was his. I do not know the object of a patent unless it is to secure to a man his own invention and his own property. I do not know, in fact, what more I can say as to this claim.

This bill is an exact copy of the bill in what is called the Dahlgren case, a case considered here in the House and reported favorably by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It will be remembered that in that case Admiral Dahlgren, while in the service of the United States as a Navy officer, invented certain ordnance, and the Government availed itself of that invention, and used it both before and after it was patented. And the Congress of the United States authorized him to go into the Court of Claims and establish what he reasonably ought to have for that invention and that property which was vested in him by reason of his patent.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to say in connection with this case that if a man is educated by the Government and any patent that he invents belongs to the Government, it seems to me it would operate to prevent the bringing into requisition that skill which the party perhaps has obtained by reason of the Government having educated him. And another point, it seems to me, is this: that if I should educate a man and he should happen to get up an important invention, the natural consequence would be, according to the principle which has been laid down in this case, that his invention belonged to me because I educated him. I hope no such principle will obtain here. The Government educates a man to draw out of him all that is in him, and if he has the brains to bring forward an important invention that is of benefit to the country, I say that which emanates from his brain belongs to him, is his property, and does not belong to any one else.

Mr. MILLS. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] has stated that this man, Colonel Long, was educated at the expense of the Government of the United States, which I do not deny. And he contends, as do a great many others, that whatever invention this officer may have made while he was a salaried officer of the United States and under the pay of the Government it is right for the Government to use it without any payment to him.

Now, I will not undertake to make any issue with the gentleman on that question in this case. I do not agree with him, but it is unnecessary in the disposition of this case for me to take issue with him on that point, because the facts show that the Government of the United States has taken this patent and used it after the death of Long, and when the patent belonged to his children.

My understanding of the object of granting a patent, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] says, is that it is for the purpose of giving to the patentee the exclusive right of proprietorship in the patented article, as well against the Government as against the whole world, wherever the jurisdiction of the Government extends.

What a piece of nonsense it would be for the Government to grant to a man the exclusive proprietorship in an article, and then to take that article away from him. If the Government did not intend that he should enjoy the rights that follow the grant of exclusive proprietorship conveyed by a patent it should not have stultified itself by giving him such a grant.

Now, to test the matter: does the Government of the United States still pay the salary of Stephen H. Long to his children? The ground upon which gentlemen claim here that the Government has the right to use this invention of Long is that he was a pensioned officer of the Government, that the Government had educated him to discharge these duties. Does the Government still carry him upon its rolls and pay him? Does the Government pay his children now that he is in his grave? Is that argument sound as against the children of Long?

What right has the Government to take this property from the child who inherited it from his father and to continue to use it without paying for it? It has the right which the brigand has on the highway. It has no other right on earth to take the property of the child because it educated his father than has the brigand who on the highway puts his pistol to the head of the traveler and demands his goods.

Mr. BRAGG. I am a great deal surprised at the judicial intellect of my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. HUMPHREY] and at the legal attainments of my friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] which have been brought to bear upon the question I have presented for the consideration of the House.

Both of those gentlemen, with all their sagacity and close application, have entirely omitted to see the point which I made. And one of them has run off on one tangent, and the other, in order to balance him, started off on another tangent. One comes in here with a brigand and a baby, and the other comes in with a sort of judicial equity, and they proceed to consider the case.

Now, sir, I have heard all this sort of argument before. I heard it pressed here in the Dahlgren case, that had been defeated session after session. I heard it when the Dahlgren case was actually forced through this House by the use of parliamentary practices which ought never to have obtained. And the very next day after the passage of that bill an envelope was sent to me containing information which showed that discoveries had been made proving the utter groundlessness of the entire claim.

The point I made is this: the Government educated this man for an engineer, under the contract that as an engineer he would serve the Government faithfully. The Government assigned him to duty as an engineer. When he reached the place where he was to discharge his duty had he a right to seat himself down and say: "If I use my brains I can do this work; but as an officer of the Army I am not required to use my brains, and I will therefore sit here until somebody else comes along with brains enough to prepare means which I can utilize to perform this work." Had he a right to do that? No.

Now, what was his duty as an engineer? It was to proceed with that work, and in doing it to use the best means which the education given him by the Government suggested to his inventive brain to employ. Having applied his brains to the work, having prepared the means for performing the work, then those means, so far as the Government was concerned, became Government property.

When, at a subsequent time, he received a patent for his invention, I maintain that he received it subject to the use of the United States without payment of royalty. [Mr. MILLS rose.] Wait one moment. That is the English law. I cannot now turn to the case, but if any gentleman desires to refer to it he will find a report made by the Committee on Military Affairs in the Forty-sixth Congress, written by myself, in reply to an application for the payment of $40,000 for the discovery of a method of crossing streams, which an officer of the Army had discovered in the Oregon campaign against the Rogue River Indians. That officer claimed his right to demand payment from the Government for his discovery of the practicability of crossing streams by means of ponton-boats. That officer was Captain Buchanan. Congress has recognized impliedly that the right to use without the payment of royalty exists, because there is no provision by which any court or anybody else ever had any jurisdiction to render judgment against the United States in such cases. In all other cases where liability on the part of the Government has been recognized jurisdiction has been conferred on the Court of Claims. That no jurisdiction is conferred for cases of this kind is patent because we are now asked to confer jurisdiction.

Still further: in 1867 or 1868 Congress, in order to prevent any further question upon this subject, passed a law reserving expressly to the United States the right to use these patents without royalty. If we go on in this way, what do we do? We have an ordnance office here in Washington. It is said by inventors (I do not know how truly) that no improvement in arms can be introduced unless the invention comes through somebody connected with the Ordnance Department; that all private citizens who make such inventions have to hold them subject to the action of the Ordnance Department, which is liable to condemn them. Every little while we find an invention coming out of the Ordnance Department, sometimes taken out in the name of the officer himself, at other times in the name of one of his employés, by whom it is subsequently transferred to him. Thus we find officers of the Army coming here and making application for payment for the use of their inventions in respect to arms, caps, &c. Though the very purpose of putting them into this department was their supposed special adaptation for it, selections for the Engineer and Ordnance Departments being made from the graduates of West Point in order to give us the benefit of their brains, yet in a few years they come here under one pretext or another and ask us to pay them in addition to their official compensation large sums for the use of their inventions. I say that such a policy ought not to be tolerated by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. The Chair hears none.

The Clerk proceeded to read the title of the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. BRAGG. What has become of the bill just under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that if there were no objection, the bill would be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I supposed I had made an objection.

Mr. MORRISON. I suppose the Chair took it for granted that the gentleman from Wisconsin would be satisfied with working this man as long as he lived, and did not want to work him after he is dead.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass, there were—ayes 28, noes 24.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BRAGG and Mr. MILLS were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 28.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

JOSEPH L. STEVENS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1014) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper officers of the Post-Office Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit in the account of Joseph L. Stevens, postmaster at Manchester, New Hampshire, the sum of $3,285, being the value of certain postage-stamps which were stolen from the safe in said post-office on or about the 16th day of June, A. D. 1877, without the fault or negligence of said postmaster.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report ought to be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph L. Stevens, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

Petitioner is postmaster of Manchester, New Hampshire. June 16, 1877, he deposited forty-seven hundred and eighty-five dollars' worth of stamps in a safe in his office belonging to the Government. June 26, 1877, it was discovered that three packages of these stamps, worth $3,285, were missing. He asks to be relieved from the loss. The only persons who had the privilege of access to the safe were the postmaster, the assistant postmaster, and a clerk, who is the postmaster's son. The testimony satisfies us beyond a doubt that all three of these officials have always borne the highest character, and that there is no reason that any suspicion should attach to either of them.

The stamps were kept in one of the compartments of the safe. Spofford, the assistant, testifies:

"On the 16th day of June, 1877, there were deposited in the lower left-hand apartment of said safe postage-stamps of the amount and denominations as follows:

2 packages of 50,000 threes each	$3,000
1 package of 40,000 threes	1,200
1 package containing 20,000 twos, 2,000 sixes, 650 tens	585

"That on said day I took from said compartments fifty ten-cent stamps for sale, and observed the packages to be all present. I did not have occasion to observe these particular packages again until the 26th of said June, when I discovered that all but one package, containing 50,000 threes, were missing. The packages being in the lower part of the safe, their absence would not be so readily discovered as if located higher in the safe, unless attention was particularly called to this apartment; but I am very confident that they could not have been taken any considerable length of time before the discovery of the theft. The three upper packages were taken, leaving the bottom one undisturbed. During business hours it was our custom to leave the safe unlocked, as it is necessary to have access to some portion of its contents at all hours of the day, and it is impracticable to lock and unlock it every time access is had to it."

The Post-Office Department was promptly notified by petitioner of his loss and dispatched a special agent to Manchester, who reported as follows:

"BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, February 8, 1878.

"SIR: I have the honor to return case No. 2107 B, and to inform you that I have made personal investigation and search relating to the loss of postage-stamps from the Manchester, New Hampshire, post-office.

"I found that the postmaster, J. L. Stevens, took account of the number of his stamps that were kept in the safe in the office June 16, and at that time the amount was correct. On June 26, when he again made an examination, he found that two original packages and parts of broken packages, amounting in the total to $3,285, namely:

200 sheets two-cent stamps	$400 00
900 sheets three-cent stamps	2,700 00
20 sheets six-cent stamps	120 00
6½ sheets ten-cent stamps	65 00

were missing. He at once commenced a thorough search for the same, but failed to find any trace. The postage-stamps were kept by him in the safe at the office, the safe being kept open during office hours. Besides the stamps there was kept in the safe money-order funds, post-office money, and his private funds. Nothing but the stamps was molested. At no time between the 16th and 26th of June (at which latter time he discovered his loss) was the safe without a large sum of money in the same, and yet no money was taken. The safe was located in the office, about twenty feet from the office window, where the clerks at all times are employed, and about fifteen feet from a rear door. During the warm weather this door was left open, and at a part of the day (6 to 7 p. m.) there was at times but one clerk on duty, and at no other time of the day or when the office was open would there be less than four of the employés present.

"The only theory as to the loss arrived at was, that during the time there was only one clerk in the office, his attention being called to the window for stamps or money-orders, and back being turned to the safe, some one came into the office through the rear door, stepped to the safe, and stole the packages. As ten days had passed between the time of Mr. Stevens knowing his amount of stamps in the safe and the discovery of his loss, we found it impossible to arrive at any conclusion who the depredator was. Every effort has been made by Mr. Stevens and myself to find some clue to the loss. He has employed private detectives and devoted his own time in following every trace and studying every theory, but without success.

"Mr. Stevens has held the office of postmaster for the last eight years, and has the best of records, is an industrious and energetic man, always at his post, and this is the only serious trouble that has occurred at his office during his term.

"From the thorough investigation made by me, and after a close study of all the facts relating to this loss, I am satisfied that he gave the same care to the Department's property intrusted to him that he did to his own, as at no time but what there were his personal funds and funds to the money-order department in the safe.

"In summing up, I can only add, that after a most thorough search and investigation no trace of the stamps or depredators could be found.

"Very respectfully,

"CHARLES FIELD,
"Special Agent Post-Office Department.

"DAVID B. PARKER,
"Chief Special Agent Post-Office Department, Washington, D. C."

We have also examined a plan of the office. We are of the opinion that the petitioner used ordinary care and the same that he took of his own property; he had on hand only the usual amount of stamps; we find that said theft was committed without fault on the part of the claimant in the opinion of your committee; he took prompt and active measures upon the discovery of the loss to find out and apprehend the thief and recover the stolen property, and employed the best detectives at home and in Boston, at large expense, but without avail, and that he ought to be relieved from the loss.

The claim of said Joseph L. Stevens was presented in both Houses of the Forty-fifth Congress, and referred to both the House and Senate Committees on Claims respectively, by whom the matter was fully heard and investigated, and their conclusions and findings embodied in Senate Report No. 789 (by Senator HOAR) and House Report No. 33, third session, Forty-fifth Congress, (by Representative Ellsworth;) also in the Forty-sixth Congress, second session, by the House Committee on Claims, report No. 874, (by Representative Barber.)

All of said committees unanimously recommended the passage of a bill allowing the claim. The Senate bill was duly passed by that body, but failed of passage in the House, being received so late in the session that it was not reached for action.

We report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware, sir, that it seems to be the present policy of the House of Representatives to pass this class of bills; but I wish to call attention to this measure and the report accompanying it as indicating where we are drifting in relieving public officers from liability. The report of the special agent of the Post-Office Department, who was sent to inquire into the circumstances of this case, says:

I am satisfied that he—

gave the same care to the Department's property intrusted to him that he did to his own.

The committee state:

We are of the opinion that the petitioner used ordinary care and the same that he took of his own property.

The question whether Congress is prepared to relieve a public officer from loss by robbery committed by some person unknown, when the fact appears that he simply used ordinary care in the custody of the public property intrusted to him, has never been so well presented as it is in this case. If it is understood that a public officer who loses Government funds intrusted to him, and in regard to which he has simply exercised ordinary care, is to be relieved of liability, it is not at all surprising that these defalcations and embezzlements are crowding upon us in unexampled number.

I do not think it improper for me to say that twenty years ago a measure like this could not have received the sanction of Congress, as the earlier history of our Government fully demonstrates. At that time a public officer was held to the highest diligence in the discharge of his public duties. It was held that public property placed in his care was entitled to receive the highest degree of protection which human capacity and intelligence could bestow upon it. If Congress had confined itself to the practice of relieving from loss by robbery or embezzlement public officers who had used the highest degree of care, perhaps such a policy could not have been condemned except upon the single ground that this relief from responsibility might tend to weaken the inducement on the part of public officials to extreme vigilance.

But, independently of that, the rule I have alluded to is not an unreasonable one, that if it shall be shown in the fulfillment of his public trust and public duty he has brought to the task the highest degree of ability and vigilance of which he was capable, and which might properly belong to a man of fair intelligence, that then he is to be relieved, and perhaps no public interest would suffer. But to relieve him on the mere showing that he has simply used ordinary care of the public property is going beyond what I think is safe. I cannot vote for such a bill; I cannot vote to relieve a public officer from such loss upon the ground merely that he has used ordinary care in protecting the property of the Government.

I do not think this bill ought to pass. I am aware our practice is to act on the report of the committee, and finally we act on the judgment of a single member. For, as to matters of fact and as to the terms in which the report is couched, that report is, as we all know, the determination and judgment of a single gentleman. Yet as a general thing these bills are passed. I have not known during the present session of Congress a single bill defeated that proposed to relieve a public officer from embezzlement. While this policy continues, and we relieve gentlemen from responsibility for making use of only ordinary care, who shall complain if fraud, dishonor, and dishonesty shall everywhere pervade the public service.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will not look upon this case unfavorably, merely because the honorable gentleman from Indiana thinks there was a want of proper care under the circumstances. Perhaps the language used in the report to describe the degree of care actually taken of this stolen property by the postmaster of Manchester is a little inaccurate, and does not convey to everybody precisely the idea intended by the committee. I have been taught to believe, sir, that "ordinary care" is a relative term in the law; that what would be ordinary and sufficient care in respect to common things or articles of small value might not be ordinary care in respect to the custody of a large sum of money or other valuable property deposited with a person for safe-keeping.

Now, the reason why this particular expression was made use of in the report, probably, was because the legal definition and interpretation of the phrase "ordinary care" has been established in my section of the country by the more recent and best-considered judicial decisions to mean that degree of care which a prudent person takes of his own property.

In my judgment, if this postmaster, being a depositary of public property, took as good care of that which was stolen out of his custody—considering its value and what it consisted of—as a prudent man would take of his own, then he completely filled the legal measure of what was required of him, whether you call it ordinary or extraordinary care.

When this House, by a large majority on both sides, has exonerated and relieved the assistant treasurer of the Government at Boston, who had millions of the public money in his keeping, from an admitted embezzlement thereof by one of his subordinates amounting to more than $500,000, it will not, I trust, stultify itself by refusing to apply substantially the same principle, or to extend the same relief to a New Hampshire postmaster, shown to be free from fault or negligence, for the robbery of postage-stamps, quite small and insignificant in amount when compared with the Chandler case at Boston before referred to.

According to the evidence laid before the committee, Mr. Stevens is a man of most excellent character. Among those who certify to his honesty, integrity, and efficiency as a public officer are Hon. Samuel N. Bell, formerly a member of this body; Hon. James A. Weston, formerly a governor of New Hampshire; Judges Stanley and Clark of the New Hampshire supreme court, all Democrats residing in the same city with Mr. Stevens; also, Hon. Daniel Clark, formerly a United States Senator, now United States district judge for New Hampshire; Judge I. W. Smith, of our State supreme court; ex-Governors Smyth, Shaw, and Cheney, all of Manchester, and many others, among the most prominent business men of both political parties in that city, who have had occasion daily to transact business with Mr. Stevens, both in an official and private capacity. No man has ever come before Congress with better certificates of character for honesty and for faithfulness in the discharge of duty than Mr. Stevens. The bill ought to pass.

Mr. Chairman, I now move it be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have a vote on that motion.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 11.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Several MEMBERS. Do not make that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to break the quorum, but I am anxious the views of Congress on a question like this shall be clearly defined. If there is no objection to having a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill in the House, I will withdraw my demand for a quorum.

Mr. RAY. If the gentleman insists on a vote in the House by yeas and nays, and that will satisfy him, of course we cannot object.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that is agreed to, there is no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If the gentleman will be satisfied with the vote in the House, very well.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; and with that understanding I do not make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation it do pass.

JULIAETT PRESCOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3541) directing the issue of a check on the Pequonnock National Bank in place of one heretofore issued to Juliaett Prescott, a pensioner of the United States, and lost.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the Pequonnock National Bank of Bridgeport, which institution is located at the city of Bridgeport, county of Fairfield, State of Connecticut, on the 4th day of October, 1879, mailed a letter directed to the National Shoe and Leather Bank of New York City, inclosing, with other checks and coupons, a draft drawn by D. W. Gooch, pension agent, dated October 3, 1879, on the assistant treasurer of the United States at the city of Boston, State of Massachusetts, numbered 134210, payable to the order of, and indorsed by, Juliaett Prescott, for the sum of $1,318.46, which check was cashed by said Pequonnock National Bank of the city of Bridgeport, in Connecticut, and made payable to said National Shoe and Leather Bank of the city of New York; and

Whereas said draft, with the other checks and coupons mailed with the same, were lost while being transmitted by mail from said city of Bridgeport to said city of New York; and

Whereas duplicates have been issued for the other checks and coupons mailed with the above-described draft, but no duplicate has been issued for such draft, nor has the same been ever found or paid: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the pension agent at the city of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, be, and he hereby is, instructed to issue a check for $1,318.46 in favor of said Pequonnock National Bank, in lieu of the one lost in the mail October 4, 1879, as aforesaid: Provided, That said bank shall first execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, for $2,600, to hold the United States harmless against loss, cost, or damage on account of said original check.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 83) directing the issue of a duplicate check to Juliaett Prescott, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

It appears that Juliaett Prescott, of Connecticut, a pensioner, having received a check for $1,318.46 from D. W. Gooch, United States pension agent at Boston, Massachusetts, dated October 3, 1879, numbered 134210, drawn on the United States assistant treasurer at Boston, payable to her order, negotiated said check by indorsement to the Pequonnock National Bank of Bridgeport, Connecticut, and received of said bank the full amount thereof. Said bank, the next day, namely, October 4, 1879, inclosed said draft in a letter directed to the National Shoe and Leather Bank of the city of New York, together with other checks and coupons, the same having been duly indorsed and made payable to said National Shoe and Leather Bank. The letter was lost and the contents never received. The Pequonnock National Bank asks to have another check issued in place of the lost one, and is ready to indemnify the Treasury therefor, but the laws of the United States (Revised Statutes, sections 3646, 3647) do not provide for issuing a duplicate check to replace a lost one for a sum larger than $1,000; wherefore the Pequonnock Bank prays for the passage of an act authorizing the issue of a duplicate check in order that they may receive back the money they advanced in good faith to said Juliaett Prescott.

No good reason occurs to your committee why the relief prayed for should not be granted by authorizing the pension agent at Boston (from whose office was issued the lost check) to issue another of the same amount payable directly to the Pequonnock National Bank, provided the said bank shall first execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of $2,000, to save the United States harmless against loss, cost, or damage on account of the original check.

Your committee therefore report the following bill as a substitute for the one referred to us, (H. R. No. 83,) and recommend its passage.

Mr. RAY. I move to strike out the preamble.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the gentleman any particular object in striking out the preamble?

Mr. RAY. Only to save space in the statute-book.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass as amended.

TIMOTHY E. ELLSWORTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1143) for the relief of Timothy E. Ellsworth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to refund to Timothy E. Ellsworth, late collector of customs at the port of Suspension Bridge, New York, the sum of $2,580.50, being the balance of moneys paid into the Treasury of the United States by mistake by the said Ellsworth during the fiscal years 1870 and 1871.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1143) for the relief of Timothy E. Ellsworth, respectfully report as follows:

Timothy E. Ellsworth was collector of customs at the port of Suspension Bridge, New York, from March 5, 1870, to 1878. Entering upon the duties of his office, he found a letter from the Treasury Department, directing that all moneys, of every description, received by the collector not received by warrant on the Treasury should be turned over to the United States, or that they would be charged against him. By law he was entitled to retain for his own compensation as collector out of his receipts from storage a sum not exceeding $2,000 per annum, and sufficient to make his yearly compensation from all sources equal to $4,500.

Not being fully advised of his rights, and unwilling to enter into a contest with his superior officers, Ellsworth obeyed instructions. The result was that during his entire term of office he received less than $2,600 per annum, when he was entitled by law to $4,500 for each year he served.

At or near the close of his term of office he brought suit in the Court of Claims for moneys exacted from him by the Treasury order. The court rendered a unanimous judgment in his favor for the moneys so paid by him subsequent to June 30, 1871, this being all that was within their jurisdiction to consider or render judgment for under the statute of limitations applicable to actions in that court. (See 14 Court of Claims Reports, 382.) The case then went to the Supreme Court, and the decision of the court below was unanimously affirmed. (See 101 United States Reports, 170.) The Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Clifford delivering the opinion, said:

"Peremptory instructions were given to the officer that all moneys, of every description, not received by warrant on the Treasury must be actually deposited. * * * His compensation as received was derived wholly from the other statutory sources of emolument, the findings of the court showing that he was not paid any thing out of the yearly amounts collected from rent and storage. * * * The payments in question made under the peremptory order of the commissioner cannot be regarded as voluntary in the sense that the party making them is thereby precluded from maintaining an action to recover back so much of the money paid as he was entitled to retain. Call it mistake of law or mistake of fact, the principles of equity forbid the United States to withhold the same from the rightful owner."

As there is no dispute about the facts in the case, and as the exact amount of Ellsworth's money paid into the Treasury is stated by the Supreme Court, and as he has only received a part of it, he now asks Congress to authorize the balance to be returned to him. This balance amounts to $2,580.50, being the amount due him for the year 1871 and a part of the year 1870; it is now in the Treasury, and yet the Supreme Court has decided that it belongs to Ellsworth.

Under these circumstances the simple question is whether the United States will retain the money which has been legally ascertained to belong to a citizen, merely because its recovery is barred in the Court of Claims.

Though no statute of limitations concludes the action of Congress, there are times when, in analogy to the action of the courts, stale claims or those rendered doubtful by lapse of time and the laches of the claimants may properly be disregarded. But your committee are of opinion that this claim is not one of that class, and that, under the circumstances and the absolute freedom from all doubt as to the exact facts, the Government cannot honestly continue to withhold this balance from the claimant. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WALLACE W. SCREWS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1957) for the relief of Wallace W. Screws.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Wallace W. Screws, of Montgomery, Alabama, the sum of $365.25, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for advertising, in 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, by direction of the officer of the United States Army commanding the forces of the United States then at Montgomery, Alabama.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1957) for the relief of Wallace W. Screws, have had the same under consideration, and report:

The claimant is the publisher and proprietor of the Montgomery Daily Advertiser, published at Montgomery, Alabama. In the latter half of the year 1865 he published in his paper, by order and direction of Major-General Henry R. Davies, jr., then commanding the United States forces in the military district of Alabama, sundry advertisements of sales of Government horses and mules, proposals for bids for Army supplies, general orders, and other notices.

The committee find the several items composing said claim to be just, not barred by lapse of time, and that the claimant has been diligently striving to obtain payment thereof.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of said bill, with an amendment striking out "Wallace W. Screws," both in the title and body of said bill, and inserting in lieu thereof "William Wallace Screws."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title and body of said bill by striking out "Wallace W. Screws" and inserting "William Wallace Screws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEAMER JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2156) for the relief of certain owners of the steamer Jackson.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to A. R. Godwin, the sum of $1,290.17; to John P. Lockey, the sum of $1,290.17; to John R. Ely & Co., the sum of $2,580.36; to Thomas M. White, surviving partner of T. and J. M. White, the sum of $2,580.36; to S. and J. Erwin, the sum of $2,580.36; and to Ellison & Hughes, the sum of $2,580.36, with interest on each of said sums from the 15th day of September, 1871, being the amounts then found to be due to said parties, and which were wrongfully paid to Barnett and Fry on their bond of indemnity, which is now held by the Government.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2156) for the relief of certain owners of the steamer Jackson, beg leave to report thereon as follows:

This claim was before the House at the third session of the Forty-sixth Congress, and was referred to the Committee on Claims. That committee submitted a report, detailing the circumstances out of which the claim arises, which report this committee adopt as their own, substantially as follows:

An agreement or charter-party was entered into on the 18th day of June, 1865, between the United States and Samuel J. Erwin, agent for Daniel Fry, captain, for the charter of the steamer Jackson, which agreement is in words and figures as follows:

"This indenture, made this eighteenth day of June, 1865, between the United States Government, of the first part, & Samuel J. Erwin, agent for Daniel Fry, captain of steamer Jackson, of the second part, witnesseth—

"That for & in consideration of the sum of ninety (90) dollars per day, to be paid by the United States Government to Capt. Daniel Fry or his agent, at such times as the government may direct, he, the said Capt. Daniel Fry, does hereby charter the said steamer Jackson to run on the Chattahoochie & Apalachicola Rivers between the cities of Chattahoochie and Eufaula in the service of the United States. He further agrees to furnish the crew to run the said steamer Jackson, also the rations, fuel, oil, & all other necessary articles for the successful operation and running of the steamer Jackson, the said steamboat at all times to be subject to the orders of the chief quartermaster Cavalry Corps, M. D. M., until released from this contract. The said Capt. Fry does hereby bind himself not to carry freight for private parties; he is, however, authorized & permitted to carry passengers in the cabin of said steamer Jackson, so far as it will not, in his judgment, interfere with the transportation of government property & freight.

"WM. E. BROWN,

"Capt. 4th Cav'ly, & Act'g Ch'f Q. M. Cav'ly Corps, M. D. M.

"Sam. J. Erwin, ag't of Daniel Fry, Capt. st'm'r Jackson.

"(Written across face:) Approved. J. H. Wilson, Maj. Gen'l."

On or about the 28th day of June, 1865, while the said steamer Jackson was in the performance of the foregoing agreement, one Captain M. B. Peters, a special agent of the Treasury Department of the United States at Eufaula, Alabama, came aboard said steamer and commanded the captain thereof to take on board and transport a quantity of cotton, about one hundred and fifty bales, belonging to the Government, and consigned to one H. H. Nobles, assistant special Treasury agent at Apalachicola, from Eufaula to said Apalachicola.

Much of this cotton was unbaled and loose. The captain of the steamer Jackson, for this reason, protested against taking the same aboard. But the said Peters, having the military force at hand, and threatening to use it if necessary to enforce his command, the cotton was taken aboard, and while the same was being transported to Apalachicola the said steamer Jackson, near Apalachicola, was burned, supposed to have taken fire from the loose cotton stored in the engine.

It appears that the original stock of said steamer was divided into fifteen shares, owned or subscribed for as follows: D. Fry, two fifteenths; Farley & Davis, one fifteenth; J. R. Ely, one fifteenth; J. B. Lockey, one thirtieth; A. R. Goodwin, one thirtieth; William J. Davis, jr., one fifteenth; Davis & Wilson, four fifteenths; A. Barnett, one fifteenth; J. Erwin, one-fifteenth; J. F. Hughes, one fifteenth; T. & J. M. White, one fifteenth. But one of the shareholders representing one fifteenth interest in said vessel failed to pay his share of the expense of construction, and said share was afterward paid out of the earnings of the vessel by the purser, and it thus became the joint property of the other shareholders, thereby increasing the value of each share from one fifteenth to one fourteenth.

Subsequent to the burning, to wit, on or about the 20th day of March, 1866, Davis & Wilson, who were the general agents of said steamer, transferred their interest therein to Barnett and Fry. They also undertook to transfer to said Barnett and Fry the interests of Messrs. Ely, Lockey, Goodwin, Erwin, Hughes, and White, without having any special authority for that purpose, but assumed to make said transfer by reason of being the general agents of said steamer. Therefore an application was made to Treasury Department of the United States, on or about —— day of August, 1866, by said Aaron Barnett and Daniel Fry for payment for said steamer Jackson. The matter having been referred to the Third Auditor, that officer, on the 15th day of November, 1870, rendered his decision therein, in which he held that the accounting officers of the Treasury were prohibited from entertaining the claim. He said, however, in conclusion:

"This decision determines no question of material right, but the claimants may appeal on this point or go to Congress, which tribunal, not being embarrassed by any jurisdictional question, can decide upon the liability of the Government under the contract and the law."

An appeal was taken from this decision of the Third Auditor to the Second Comptroller, which officer, on the 23d day of March, 1871, rendered an opinion, concurring in the decision of the Third Auditor.

In the mean time the attorney for the claimants submitted a written argument in favor of the claim to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, on the 21st day of November, 1870, referred the same to the Second Comptroller. That officer, on the 22d day of November, 1870, returned said argument to the Secretary, with the indorsement thereon that "in his opinion the settlement of the claim would be contrary to the views of the Secretary, as expressed by him in a letter addressed to his office February 8, 1870, relating to the claim of Stanton and Palmer."

On the 15th day of December, 1870, the Secretary of the Treasury concurred in the decision of the Second Comptroller. On the 25th day of April, 1871, the attorney of the claimants addressed a letter to the Second Comptroller, asking a re-examination of the case, of which the following is a copy:

"WASHINGTON, April 25, 1871.

"SIR: I respectfully request a re-examination of the case of the steamer Jackson, on the ground that the vessel, being in the United States military service under contract, it is a case in which jurisdiction is not taken from the Executive Department by the acts of 1864 and 1867. In support of this view I refer to the opinion of Attorney-General Evarts in the 'Rolling Case,' and the recent opinion of Attorney-General Akerman explanatory of the acts of 1864, 1867, and 1871, sustaining and extending the opinion of Attorney-General Evarts.

"I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,

"E. L. KINNEY,

"Attorney for Claimants.

"SECOND COMPTROLLER United States Treasury."

This letter was referred by the Second Comptroller to the Secretary of the Treasury, April 26, 1871, with the following indorsement:

"Respectfully referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, together with the following papers: Report of the Third Auditor of November 15, 1870, with the decision of the Second Comptroller indorsed thereon, and the argument of E. L. Kinney, attorney for claimant, with indorsements of the Secretary of the Treasury and Second Comptroller thereon.

"Respectfully,

"J. M. BROADHEAD, Comptroller.

"SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, April 26, 1871."

It will be observed from this indorsement that the Secretary of the Treasury had before him the adverse report of the Third Auditor of November 15, 1870, with the indorsement thereon of the opinion of the Second Comptroller concurring therein; the argument of the attorney of claimant, with the adverse opinion of the Second Comptroller and the opinion concurring therein of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. William A. Richardson, rendered the decision of that Department upon the question thus submitted to him, which opinion is as follows:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

"Washington, D. C., April 28, 1871.

"The steamer Jackson was 'lost' by 'unavoidable accident' while in the military service of the United States by contract, and the owner is entitled to the payment of the value thereof under acts of March 3, 1849, and March 3, 1863, unless barred by subsequent acts.

"The act of July 4, 1864, entitled 'An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims,' does not apply to a case like this, because it is not 'a claim growing out of the destruction or appropriation of, or damage to property by the Army or Navy,' but by the loss by unavoidable accident while the vessel was in service by contract. So the act of February 19, 1867, does not prevent the payment of this claim, because it is not 'for supplies or stores taken or furnished for the use of or used by the armies of the United States, nor for the occupation of or injury to real estate, nor for the consumption, appropriation, or destruction of or damage to personal property by the military authorities or troops of the United States.'

"This vessel was not consumed, appropriated, or destroyed by the military authorities. It was lost by unavoidable accident while in the service of the United States by contract.

"The restricting acts do not appear to be intended to interfere with contracts made with the Government nor with any liabilities growing out of the same, but to be enacted to prevent persons in the rebel States from enforcing certain claims against the Government founded on acts and doings of the military authorities and troops of the United States where no contract existed; acts and doings which were rather in the nature of torts, if they had not been by military authority, or for property appropriated without the voluntary consent of the owner.

"This view finds support in the opinion of Attorney-General Evarts, volume 12, page 439.

"WILLIAM A. RICHARDSON."

The questions of jurisdiction and liability having been thus determined, the matter was referred to the Third Auditor by the Second Comptroller for report as to the value of the steamer. The Third Auditor, on the 9th day of August, 1871, made his report thereon, which concludes as follows:

"I therefore now recommend that the sum of $30,200 be allowed as the value of the steamer Jackson, and that of that sum Daniel Fry, having originally owned two fifteenths, purchased one fifteenth of Farley & Davis, and received half of the interest of Davis & Wilson, to wit, one-half of four fifteenths, being the owner of five fifteenths, should receive the sum of five fifteenths of $30,200—$10,066.65—and that Aaron Barnett, the owner of four fifteenths, as hereinbefore shown, be paid the sum of $8,053.32, and that the balance of said sum, to wit, $12,081.03, be held for further evidence of ownership of remaining interest in said steamer."

The second Comptroller, on the 15th day of September, 1871, acknowledged the receipt of the report of the Third Auditor, which, with the other papers in the case, he that day returned to the Third Auditor, with his opinion upon the two questions involved—

First, as to the value of the vessel.

Second, as to whom payment should be made.

The Second Comptroller fixed the value of the vessel at $36,125.

As to whom payment should be made, that officer said:

"It appears that prior to the sale and transfer by Davis & Wilson of their own interests and also the interests of other shareholders, whom they claimed to have represented as agents, to Barnett & Fry in the spring of 1866, the claimants owned in their individual right as follows, viz: Daniel Fry, three fourteenths; Aaron Barnett, two fourteenths.

"March 20, 1866, Davis & Wilson sold and transferred to the claimants, Barnett and Fry, jointly, their own interest in said vessel, viz: four fourteenths.

"I am satisfied that the agents, Davis & Wilson, had no power at that time, even if they had powers of attorney from the shareholders they represented, to convey to the claimants any interest said stockholders may have had in said vessel.

"First. Because the vessel had been destroyed, and there was nothing of that kind to convey.

"Second. The only interest left was in the nature of a claim against the United States for the value thereof, and such conveyance is prohibited by act of 1853 prior to the settlement of the claim.

"It is evident, however, that the claimants have a large equitable interest in these five shares in question, on account of moneys advanced by them to pay the debts of the vessel, for repairs, &c., and under the circumstances I think that payment on these five shares may properly be made to the claimants jointly, provided they file a good and sufficient bond of indemnity in double the amount represented by those shares to save the United States harmless against any claims that may hereafter be made by any of these original holders, their heirs or assigns:

"To recapitulate:

Three fourteenths to Daniel Fry	$7,741 07
Two fourteenths to Aaron Barnett	5,160 72
Four fourteenths to Barnett & Fry	10,321 43
Five fourteenths to Barnett & Fry, on bond of indemnity	12,901 78
"Total amount	36,125 00"

The Third Auditor on the next day sent the following reply to the Second Comptroller:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,

"September 16, 1871.

"SIR: I have received and read your decision of the 15th instant in the matter of the claim of the owners for the value of the steamer Jackson. The amount of your allowance somewhat exceeds the sum of my recommendation; but as the value of the boat was very difficult to determine from the evidence submitted, I am not prepared to say that it is excessive, but, on the contrary, would adopt perhaps the decision and make a statement for the amount allowed, were it not that I am not satisfied that Barnett & Fry are entitled to receive payment of any other shares than those mentioned in my report. The evidence does not convince me that they were the owners of the five fourteenths for which they were asking payment, and to idemnify the Government, against which they propose to execute bond. In the absence of proof of such ownership I cannot see the propriety of making such payment, but think it much wiser and safer that the Government should retain possession of the sum of twelve thousand nine hundred and one seventy-eight one-hundredth dollars (the said four fourteenths) until claimants, or some other person or persons, shall prove themselves entitled to receive the same.

"With this view I respectfully return the papers in the claim for such further action as you may deem proper.

"I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ALLAN RUTHERFORD, Auditor.

"E. B. CURTIS, Esq., Acting Second Comptroller."

The case, as stated by the Second Comptroller, was settled and drafts were drawn, on or about the 22d day of September, 1871, as follows:

In favor of Aaron Barnett for two fourteenths	$5,160 72
In favor of Daniel Fry for three fourteenths	7,741 07
In favor of Barnett & Fry for four fourteenths	10,321 43
In favor of Barnett & Fry for five fourteenths	12,901 78
Total	36,125 00

The latter item, to wit, $12,901.78, was paid upon a bond of indemnity which is as follows:

"Know all men by these presents, that I, Aaron Barnett, of Savannah, in the State of Georgia, as principal, and Gabriel H. Schiffer and Louis G. Schiffer, of the city and State of New York, as sureties, are held and firmly bound unto the United States of America in the sum of $26,000, lawful money of the United States of America, to be paid to the United States of America, or their assigns, to which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally, by these presents.

"Whereas Aaron Barnett and Daniel Fry have presented a claim against the United States of America for the value of the steamboat Jackson, destroyed by fire while in the military service of the United States, and the said Barnett & Fry claim the whole ownership of said vessel; and

"Whereas the said vessel was divided into fourteen shares, of which the title to the ownership of nine fourteenths of the said vessel is admitted by the United States to be well and sufficiently vested in the said Barnett and Fry; and

"Whereas the title of the ownership of five fourteenths of the said vessel remaining, formerly owned as follows: J. R. Ely, one fourteenth; J. B. Luckey, one twenty-eighth; A. R. Goodwin, one twenty-eighth; J. Irvin, one fourteenth; J. F. Hughes, one fourteenth; T. and J. M. White, one fourteenth, is not deemed altogether perfect and absolute; and

"Whereas the said claim for the loss of said steamboat Jackson has been admitted to be valid, and payment is about to be made therefor in the sum of $36,125 for the whole vessel; and

"Whereas if the United States of America pay to the said Barnett and Fry the sum of $12,900.78, being the amount allowed for the said five fourteenths above described, in addition to the sum of $23,223.22, for the value of nine fourteenths as aforesaid, this bond has been required to indemnify the United States of America against any and all claims which may or might arise on account of any of the said original shareholders or their heirs or assigns appearing and making demand for their share or shares in the five fourteenths mentioned, or any part thereof:

"Now, therefore, the condition of this obligation is such that if the above-bounden obligors, their heirs, executors, administrators, or any of them, shall and do well and truly pay or cause to be paid unto any person or persons who shall establish a valid claim to any of the said five fourteenths of the steamer Jackson above-mentioned, the full amounts as paid by the United States to the said Barnett and Fry, or shall pay or cause to be paid unto the United States of America or their assigns the full amounts paid by the said United States on account of said five fourteenths of the said steamer Jackson hereinbefore mentioned, with the legal costs and interest on such sum without any defalcation or delay, then this obligation to be void, or else to be and remain in full force and virtue.

"SAMUEL LEA."

The case stood thus until the 21st day of July, 1876, a period of nearly five years, when an application was made to the Secretary of the Treasury by J. R. Ely, John P. Lockey, A. R. Goodwin, S. and J. Erwin, J. F. Hughes, and J. W. White, survivor, for their respective shares of the allowance made in payment of said steamer. The application was based upon the ground that the alleged assignment of their respective interests to Barnett & Fry was without authority in law or in fact and without their knowledge or consent, and that Barnett & Fry, nor either of them, had ever paid the claimants for their respective interests any part of the money received from the United States, and that until the making of the application they had not had any knowledge or information of the action of Davis & Wilson, or Barnett & Fry, in the premises.

The matter was referred to the Third Auditor, who, on the 2d day of October, 1876, after stating the history of the claim when before the Department originally, as well as the action of the Third Auditor, as hereinbefore stated, said that, in his opinion, his office had "no further duty to perform in the premises."

The matter was thereafter, to wit, on the 17th day of February, 1877, referred by the Second Comptroller to the Secretary of the Treasury, with the following letter:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., February 17, 1877.

"SIR: Accompanying this letter I forward to you papers in the case of the steamer Jackson, alleged to have been burned on the Chattahoochee River on the 29th day of June, 1865, while in the military service of the United States, and under circumstances making the Government liable to the owners for the loss. The salient points shown in the papers have been compiled by my direction in the 'memoranda' inclosed herewith, which will give a full knowledge of the case without reading the mass of papers which have accumulated in the former examinations of this claim. It is sufficient for my present purpose to say that from the evidence before my predecessor, an allowance was made and paid of $36,125 to two of the owners (Barnett & Fry) who represented themselves as empowered to collect for the owners. Recently, however, a claim has been filed in this office by several of the owners for $12,901.78 of the value as allowed, who allege that they were joint owners in the vessel; that they did not authorize Barnett & Fry to act in their behalf, and that they have received no part of the valuation paid under the former settlement. This claim has led to an examination of all the papers in the case, and I have arrived at the conclusion that there are so many questions of doubt involved in this whole matter that all the papers should be referred to the Attorney-General, with the request that, under the authority and the means provided in the third paragraph of the appropriation for the judiciary, on page 206 of volume 18, Statutes at Large, the whole question of the validity of this claim be examined. There are two questions which, in my judgment, demand special consideration in such examination:

"First. As to whether this vessel, when burned, was in the military service of the United States, under a contract of such a character as to render the Government liable for the loss and to bring the settlement of the claim within the jurisdiction of the accounting officers of the Treasury.

"Second. Were the owners a copartnership, or were they joint owners, having the rights of tenants in common?

"If the first of these questions, upon investigation, is determined affirmatively, and the owners are held to be joint owners, then good faith to the creditors of the Government demands that the persons not represented by Barnett & Fry (professing to have authority to act for them) should be paid the shares due them, after which steps should be taken by the law officers of the Government to collect from Mr. Barnett the amount so paid.

"C. C. CARPENTER, Comptroller.

"Hon. LOT M. MORRILL, Secretary of the Treasury."

The Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the request of the Second Comptroller, referred the matter to the Attorney-General, which officer, on the 8th day of March, 1877, rendered the following opinion thereon:

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
"Washington, March 8, 1877.

"SIR: Yours of the 26th ultimo (received at this Department the 3d instant,) relating to payment for the steamer Jackson, has been under consideration, which has led to the conclusion that the original payment for that vessel was not authorized by law, for reasons which are equally cogent to prevent any further payment to the present claimants.

"The voluminous documents accompanying your letter, and which are herewith returned, present numerous questions which it is not thought necessary to discuss, since the correct solution of the single one, whether or not the boat was, under the act of March 3, 1849, chapter 129, section 2, as amended by that of March, 3, 1863, chapter 78, section 5, to be paid for by the Government, in case of accidental loss, will determine whether or not any payment on account of her destruction was legally justifiable. The essential facts, succinctly stated, are that the steamer was chartered June 18, 1865—after the perils from actual hostilities were substantially over—to run on the Chattahoochee and Apalachicola Rivers, the 'owners to pay all the running expenses;' this agreement leaving the old captain in charge, and having been effected with his agent. Under this engagement the boat was laden with cotton, to be transported from Eufaula and Fort Gaines, Georgia, where it was put on board, to Apalachicola, Florida, and there delivered to the United States Treasury agent. At 3 p. m. on January 29, 1865, when within four hours of reaching her destination, she and her cargo were wholly destroyed by a fire, originating from some unexplained cause, the vessel being still under the exclusive management of the owners' master, and no Federal officer, civil or military, being then on board.

"The charter was a mere contract of affreightment, (Reed vs. United States, 11 Wall., 600, 603; United States vs. Russell, 13 Wall., 623;) consequently the craft was not 'in the military service of the United States' within the meaning of the statutes of March 3, 1849 and 1863. (See opinion of the Supreme Court in Guttman's case, 9 Ct. of Cls. Rep., 68, 71.) The case of John S. Shaw vs. The United States, argued and decided at the current term of the Supreme Court, is much stronger against the Government, on the facts, than the present case; yet it was held that the defendants were not liable, and that the vessel should not have been paid for out of the Federal Treasury.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"ALPHONSO TAFT,
"Attorney-General.

"Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY."

Such is a full and complete statement of the facts upon which the claimants base their application to Congress for relief.

It will be observed that the accounting officers of the Government on the 15th day of September, 1871, adjudged the Government to be indebted to the claimants in the aggregate sum of $12,901.78. This sum was paid to Barnett & Fry, upon the bond of indemnity. As soon as the claimants ascertained the fact that the money adjudged to be due them had been paid to Barnett & Fry, to wit, on the 21st day of July, 1876, they made application to the Government for payment of the money to them. A period of nearly five years had elapsed, and the question arises whether or not, upon the simple demand of the claimants for payment of the sum ascertained to be due them in the manner stated, the Second Comptroller, or the Secretary of the Treasury, can reverse the decision made by his predecessor, and refuse payment to the parties to whom the money was found to be due. It is well settled that when a Secretary has officially decided or determined any matter or case, and goes out of office leaving his decision on record, his successor cannot lawfully overturn it, unless upon the production of such new evidence as would be sufficient in a court of chancery to sustain a bill of review, or to get a new trial in a court of law. This rule is so obviously necessary in order to prevent intolerable disorder and confusion in the business of the Government, that it is not thought necessary to set forth the many reasons by which it might be defended. (J. S. Black, Attorney-General, 9 Opinions, 101.)

The deliberate decision of a former administration of a question involving private rights and interests (no new facts being shown to exist which were not known when the decision was made) cannot with propriety be reconsidered by its successor. (Rear-Admiral Goldsborough's case, 13 Opinions, 33.)

The principle has been so frequently declared that the final decision of a matter before the head of a Department is binding upon his successor in the same Department, under certain well-defined exceptions, that it is now to be regarded as a settled rule of administrative law. (See, on this subject, United States vs. Bank of Metropolis,, 15 Peters, 401; 2 Opinions, 9; Ib., 464; 4 Opinions, 341; 5 Opinions, 2; Ib., 12; 9 Opinions, 301–'2, 387; 12 Opinions 358; 13 Opinions.)

The real question in this case is, whether the Government can recover the money in a case where an accounting officer, in the proper discharge of his duties, has, under the direction of the head of the Department, finally settled and paid a claim.

It is true the Government paid the money to Barnett & Fry instead of the claimants, to whom it was adjudged to be due, but this was wrongfully done, and the Government, it seems to your committee, ought not to be permitted to take advantage of its own wrong to defeat the demand of the claimants.

In Shaw's case, cited by the Attorney-General, the accounting officers of the Government decided that the Government was liable for the loss of the steamer in question, and estimated its value at $57,000. The insurance companies had paid him $25,000, leaving due him $32,000, which amount the Government paid him. Subsequently he made claim upon the Government for the still further sum of $13,859. The court decided that he was not entitled to recover; that the vessel should not have been paid for out of the Federal Treasury, as it was not "in the military service of the Government" in the sense of the statute; but it did not hold that the $32,000 adjudged previously by the accounting officers to be due him and paid to him could be recovered back. All that the counsel for the Government contended for in his brief, as reported, was that the acceptance of the $32,000 was an adjustment of a disputed claim and barred any further recovery.

In that case the question was whether or not there had been an impressment of the vessel. The assistant quartermaster at Saint Louis had sent Shaw a notice that he would require the services of his vessel for a trip to Memphis and other points, accompanied with a statement of the per diem compensation which would be allowed him for its use, &c. Shaw accepted the terms and, in the language of the court, "entered upon the service with alacrity." It became, therefore, a voluntary arrangement and not an impressment. It is possible that but for the assent of Shaw to the terms proposed the vessel would have been impressed, but the voluntary acceptance by him, and that with alacrity, of the terms proposed, upon the first intimation of force, relieved the transaction of anything like an impressment.

In the case under consideration the vessel was taken into a particular service under a voluntary arrangement. But were it to be admitted that this arrangement was nothing more than a contract of affreightment, still, the Government having afterward, by force, against the protest of the master, put the vessel into a different service, in which it was destroyed by fire, if this were an impressment the Government would be liable. But it is not necessary for the claimants now to establish the liability of the Government for the loss of the vessel. The question of liability has already been adjudicated. The Acting Secretary of the Treasury, on the 28th day of April, 1871, passed upon this question, and his decision, as the case now stands, is final and conclusive. He said:

"The steamer Jackson was 'lost' by 'unavoidable accident' while in the military service of the United States by contract, and the owner is entitled to payment of the value thereof, under the acts of March 3, 1849, and March 3, 1863."

In the case of Adams vs. The United States, (7 Wall., 463,) where it is held that an action for the expressed consideration of a valid contract is barred by the voluntary submission of a claim to an ex parte commission, appointed by the head of an Executive Department, to examine and report upon similar claims; the hearing and final decision thereon; the receipt of the vouchers containing the amount found due; and the acceptance of the payment of the amount under an act of Congress providing therefor; and it is thus barred, notwithstanding the party was coerced into the receipt of the vouchers by the commission withholding from him his papers and original evidences of indebtedness; that he protested at the time against the action of the commission, at which time he had no means of legal redress, the court say:

"Indeed, unless the claimant is barred under the circumstances stated, it would be difficult for the Government to determine when there would be an end to claims put forth against it, as there is no statute of limitations of which we are aware applicable to them before this court."

If a final decision of the executive department is binding upon the claimant so as to bar him from making further demands upon the Government, it must also be held to be binding upon the Government to prevent it from shirking the liability established by such decision.

Judge Nott, in delivering the opinion of the Court of Claims in the case of McKee vs. United States, (12 C. of Cls. R., p. 533,) says:

"That settlements made by the accounting officers of the Government with its creditors, untainted by fraud and free from mistake of fact, possess the element of finality, I think is clear for many reasons.

"Second. If the Comptrollers' settlements have not the ordinary element of finality; if those officers are not the agents of the Government to make final settlements with its creditors, the Government has had the power and the means to take advantage of their errors of law for the last eighty years by going into any court as plaintiff and suing the party to whom money was paid in mistake of law. Yet from the first day that the Treasury did business until this counter claim was set up it is safe to say that no such suit was ever brought, and that no man ever supposed that such an action would lie. A practical construction, going back to the very beginning of the Government, is overwhelming, and cannot be overturned at this late day with safety by anything short of statutory amendment.

"Third. As no statute of limitations closes inquiry into the past transactions of the Government, all of the settlements which present and past Comptrollers have ever made will be liable to be reopened. It is well known that the Comptrollers have sometimes construed statutes in one way and the courts subsequently in another. Such diversity of judgment is inevitable in the administration of human affairs, and the wonder is that there has been so little of it on the part of these officers. The act 3d March, 1849, (9 Statutes at Large, 415, section 2,) will furnish one of many illustrations. The Treasury always held that this act extended to vessels in the military service, though navigated by their owners. (Reed's case, 4 Court of Claims Reports, 132.) The Supreme Court has recently held the contrary. (Shaw's case, ante, page 1.) Can it be possible that all such past transactions are now liable to be reopened; that nothing has ever been settled; that no payment ever made is to be considered final? Such a ruling cannot promote the public welfare, and, in my judgment, would be prolific in public mischief."

The applicability of this opinion to the case in hand is conspicuously noticeable from the fact that the illustration given by the learned judge embraces the very law under consideration, as well as the very case cited by the Attorney-General (Shaw's case) as an authority upon which that officer rested his opinion given to the Secretary of the Treasury herein.

The claimants, in the opinion of your committee, are entitled to interest from the date of the adjustment of their claim. The Government, recognizing this fact, provided for the payment of interest in the bond of indemnity in the event Barnett & Fry should ever be called upon to refund the money paid them belonging to the claimants.

The latest decision upon the liability of Government to pay interest, rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States, will be found reported in 1 Otto, page 442, in the case of the United States vs. McKee et al. The court in that case says:

"It has been the general rule of the officers of governments, in adjusting unliquidated and disputed claims against the United States, to refuse interest. That this rule is sometimes at variance with that which governs the act of private citizens in a court of justice would not authorize us to depart from it in this case. The rule, however, is not uniform; and it is not so in regard to claims allowed by special acts of Congress, or referred by such acts to some department or officer for settlement. * * * There has never been any dispute about the amount due if the claim was legal. * * * It is found that the claim is due which the Government has, by law, agreed to pay, and we see no reason why it should not be paid in full, with all its legal incidents.

In the case of Todd vs. United States (Dec. C. C., 183) the Court of Claims say:

"Our object has been simply to show that authorities are conflicting, and that an approximation to a rule is to be found in those decisions which hold that, in the absence of a contract to pay interest, it may, in some cases, be allowed by a jury, upon a review of all the circumstances in the case."

The reason why the rule that governments are not chargeable with interest has become established is, that governments are presumed always to be ready to pay whatever sum they are liable for upon presentation of the claim, and, therefore, when there is delay in the payment it is attributed to the negligence of the claimant. Where, however, there is an adjusted claim against a government and there is delay in its payment without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant, the government, like any other delinquent debtor, is liable for interest for the time payment is delayed by it.

In this case the claim was adjusted; the amount due was ascertained; the parties to whom it was due were ascertained. But the money was paid to other parties, upon the condition that they would pay it to the parties to whom it was ascertained to be due, and, if not, that they would return it, with interest, to the Government, so as to reimburse it for payment made in the mean time to the rightful parties upon their demand of the amount due them, with interest.

It appears that the reason why the claimants have appealed to Congress, without asking a rehearing before the Attorney-General, is that the legislative branch of the Government, as they are advised, alone has the power to give full relief in the premises. In the event of success before the Treasury Department in having their claim allowed, it was suggested to the claimants that an application for an appropriation out of which to pay it would still have to be made to Congress; they therefore have submitted their claim to Congress for relief, without pressing it further before the Treasury Department.

Your committee, believing that the wholesome doctrine of res adjudicata should be applied to this claim, report the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the case presented here is one of unusual interest in view of the state of facts shown by this report. I wish to state, in brief, what seems to be the prominent feature set out in the report.

This vessel, according to the decision of the Attorney-General, was simply engaged in the service of the United States on a contract of affreightment, and nothing more, and was not in a general sense ever impressed into the service of the United States or engaged by contract, but simply under a contract of affreightment. It was in no sense in the military service of the United States. The vessel was lost, and the Government finally agreed to pay the owners $36,125 for this vessel, which was owned by a number of persons. Of this sum $12,901.78 was paid to Barnett and Fry, who I believe were citizens of New York, and they gave a bond of indemnity in the sum of $26,000. The money was paid over to them. The bond of these parties to the Government is set forth in the report. The owners of this $12,901.78 named claimed this money, which has been paid over to Barnett and Fry, and when the subject came to be officially examined the Attorney-General, in view of the facts submitted, and although the money had already been paid over, thought the Government was not liable at all in the first instance, and was not therefore liable to pay this $12,901.78 to these parties.

The question is this: If the Government paid the money to the wrong parties, and the rightful parties now come forward and claim the money, and the law officer of the Government decides upon a state of facts that appears to render his decision absolutely correct and certain that the Government was never liable for any of the money, ought it to be paid? The main argument for paying the second time is simply because the Government has once recognized the principle that it was liable for the loss of the vessel. So the question presented to this committee now is shall the money be paid a second time, and paid also in the face of the opinion of the Attorney-General, who says that the Government was not liable to make the original payment upon the indemnifying bond, or to make the payment which is now claimed. How far the House may deem it proper to be guided by the opinion of the Attorney-General is of course a question for the House.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, it is true that when the application was made to the Department by the present claimants for the payment to them of between twelve and thirteen thousand dollars, which was the aggregate amount of their interest in this vessel, Attorney-General Taft, to whom the question was referred, decided that under the acts of Congress the Department should not have paid for the vessel in the first instance. But in response to that objection I call the attention of gentlemen to the authorities cited in the report, which are conclusive, that inasmuch as there had been an adjudication of this claim by an officer of the Government, competent to adjudicate it, the Government was thereby estopped from going back of that decision.

It will be seen on page 3 of this report that when Barnett and Fry had made their application and were urging an adjustment and payment for this vessel, William A. Richardson, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, with all the facts before him, rendered a decision in favor of the regularity of the claim; and upon that decision it was adjusted. The report shows further that it was known and well understood by the Government at that time that Barnett and Fry had no title to the interests of these claimants.

There had been an attempted transfer by Davis and Wilson, two of the owners. That was made for the purpose of enabling Barnett and Fry to obtain a settlement with the Government, and when they obtained that settlement they were required to give this bond of indemnity as to the interests of these claimants. They received the money. It seems that this information, however, was withheld from these claimants by Barnett and Fry. When they learned of the payment of the money they made their claim on the Government. Then it was that Attorney-General Taft decided that in the first instance the Government should not have recognized the claim, but I insist it was too late, because the head of the Department, the acting head of the Treasury Department, was competent to decide the question, and did decide it. The Government acted upon it and placed this money in the hands of Barnett and Fry, and took from them a good bond.

Now, suppose Congress refuses to give the relief these parties ask. Suppose Congress acts upon the idea urged by the gentleman from Indiana, that it was an illegal claim as decided by Attorney-General Taft. The consequence is that Barnett and Fry have received this amount of twelve or thirteen thousand dollars which they were not entitled to, and are permitted to retain it. Now the Government loses nothing. It has already paid the money. What these claimants ask is that it shall pay it to them, the rightful owners, and have recourse to the bond to obtain the repayment of it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Is it a good bond?

Mr. OATES. Yes; the bond is good to my certain knowledge. I know that of my own knowledge.

Mr. DAWES. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama a question?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. Could not the Government assign that bond to the claimants?

Mr. OATES. Possibly it could; but I submit it would not be just to the claimants to do it. It was the Government and not these claimants that put the money into the hands of the wrong parties, and the Government ought to repair that injury. It has been decided that this money belongs to these claimants, and the Government put it into the hands of parties into whose hands it ought not to have gone. Therefore it ought to pay these claimants and recover from those to whom the money was wrongfully paid.

The facts, as I stated, were before the Department. The Government knew that Barnett and Fry did not have a good title to this money, and hence took this bond.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be a vote on this.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session and proceeded with the consideration of the Private Calendar.

CHARLES P. CHOUTEAU.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 911) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Court of Claims be authorized to grant a rehearing in the case of Charles P. Chouteau, surviving partner of Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, and William A. Steele, against the United States, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the amount, if any, incurred under the contract for the construction of the iron-clad vessel Etlah by reason of the delays occasioned in such construction by the acts of the Government beyond the period specified in the contract, and for extras beyond what was provided therein. If upon such rehearing a receipt dated April 24, 1866, shall be given in evidence, the court may give judgment for such sum as shall be justly and equitably due, notwithstanding such receipt.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. There are some amendments which have not been read.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims, with the following amendments:

In line 7 strike out the word "incurred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "due."

In lines 14 and 15 strike out the words "notwithstanding such receipt" and insert in lieu thereof "upon the whole evidence, including said receipt and any explanation thereof."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have called for the reading of the report, but I presume that most gentlemen in the committee are acquainted with this case, and I therefore shall not insist on the reading of the report.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I do not think this bill ought to be passed, and propose to give a few reasons why it should not.

It will be seen from the report that it is a copy, verbatim et literatim, of another report, made by Senator HOAR; and the fact is that his report is a copy, verbatim et literatim, of a report made by Mr. Barber from the Committee on Claims during the Forty-sixth Congress. I mention this fact simply to take from this report the usual weight that would attach to the report of a committee deliberately made and seemingly unanimous. As this case does not stand alone, but is the forerunner of quite a large number of very large claims, it will not be time wasted, but time profitably employed, to look minutely into it before we act upon this bill.

During the war the United States by a bill appropriated $10,000,000 to build certain war vessels. They were built under contracts in different States—Maine, Massachusetts, Ohio, and elsewhere. The original price paid for those vessels was about fourteen million dollars, 50 per cent. more than the law contemplated when the bill was passed. Immediately after the war these different contractors came to Congress claiming that they ought to be paid extra compensation; and the Senate, without asking concurrence of the House, passed a resolution of inquiry into the amount which ought to be so paid. Under that resolution what was known as the Selfridge board made a report. That report stated as the proper extra pay of all other of these parties, forty-two in all, a large sum of money. Thereupon an omnibus bill for the relief of all those contractors was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Commerce. It was reported on favorably by Mr. Nye on the 22d of March, 1866. Mr. Grimes made a minority report. In his remarks he said this bill covered two and a half millions of dollars on contracts made in 1862 and 1863, when on his desk there were abstracts of claims amounting to $60,000,000 on which there was a loss of $12,000,000, on the basis of calculation used by that board, on contracts not made in 1862 and 1863.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK. Does the gentleman mean to say this claim was ever submitted to that board?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman will know what I mean to say about this claim before I get through; I will come to that very soon.

Mr. CLARK. I supposed the gentleman intended to make the impression on the House that this claim had been submitted to that board and they had passed on it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I will make no improper impression, nor will I utter a word for which I cannot present the printed proof.

Mr. CLARK. I simply want the House to understand it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I do, too. Senator Grimes said the findings were upon a false basis and upon the ex parte statement of the contractors. In confirmation of this last remark Senator SHERMAN called attention to the fact that the claims were only for $2,383,520.20, and the findings were for $2,267,627, a difference of only 3 or 4 per cent. He also said he understood all extras had been paid for; and with others he fought the bill. It passed the Senate. In the House it was practically defeated; the result being that by amendment Congress passed a resolution of inquiry. (Resolution of 2d of March, 1867, 14 Statutes at Large, page 424.) That resolution embraced all contracts made for vessels between the 1st of May, 1861, and the 1st of January, 1864, and sought to learn the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by such contractors. Under it a new board was appointed called the Marchand board. That board found for all the forty-two contractors but $187,475.56, and that nothing was due to Charles Chouteau, this claimant. That is seen in 93 Globe, page 1273.

Then all the claimants obtained the passage of a joint resolution remitting them to the Court of Claims and repealing the joint resolution of the 2d of March, 1867, which was in their way. That did not become a law for want of Executive approval. In his veto message, dated February 7, 1871, President Grant said:

It seems to me that the provision thus repealed is a very reasonable one. It prevents a contractor from receiving any allowance for an advance in the price of labor and material where he could avoid that advance by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence, and the effect of the repeal will be to relieve contractors from the consequences of their own imprudence and negligence.

Foiled thus as a body, they sought Congressional aid singly. At a night session of the House a bill was passed for the relief of Miles Greenwood, and it became a law, (17 Statutes at Large, page 764,) and is cited in this report as one of the precedents for the action here asked. The same night, Mr. Foster, of Ohio, reported a bill for the relief of Alexander Swift & Co., of Ohio, but it did not pass.

The matter came again into Congress for additional action. In the first session of the Forty-third Congress there was a report on a bill for the relief of certain naval contractors, which included this one, made by Mr. Hazelton, from the Committee on War Claims. I ask the Clerk to read from that report the sentences which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is claimed that the allowance made by the Department for additional iron and labor was limited to the scale of prices first mentioned, and that no allowance was made for increase in cost of materials and labor, or for the use of yards, shops, machinery, &c., while idle and unemployed.

If so, then it would seem clear that the parties have a just and meritorious claim upon the Government for relief, but it is not necessary to decide that.

The bill under consideration does not decide that. It only provides that these parties may go into the Court of Claims, a court eminently qualified to make the investigation, and to see that no wrong is practiced upon the Government, and have these matters judicially and fairly investigated and determined, subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. There the evidence, pro and con, can be submitted, and the several claims left to abide the result. It seems to us the Government can do no less. If the parties have an honest and meritorious demand, they should have the right to show it; if not, let it be so adjudged, and the controversy ended.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It will be observed from this report that all that was contended for at that time was that the parties should have the right to sue. And I repeat for emphasis the last of the sentences which I caused to be read by the Clerk:

If the parties have an honest, meritorious demand, they should have the right to show it; if not, let it be so adjudged, and the controversy ended.

Mr. CLARDY. What report is that? I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It is a report made from the Committee on War Claims, No. 269, of the first session of the Forty-third Congress, by Mr. G. W. Hazelton.

Mr. CLARDY. Does it refer to this claim of Charles P. Chouteau?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It covers the claims of every one of these naval contractors. It was a report upon a joint bill, covering Mr. Chouteau as well as the others. The object of the bill was to allow all of them to go to the Court of Claims.

That report was met with a minority report of great strength made by Messrs. Lawrence, HOLMAN, James Wilson, and A. HERR SMITH. The minority report is very long. Among other things it contains the finding of the board under the act of 1867, in which this claim of C. W. McCord (for he was the contractor under whom Chouteau claims) is stated as follows:

For the light-draft monitor Etlah: Contract price $386,000; whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, as claimed by the contractors, $364,073.55; amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government, as determined by the board to be due, none; amount already paid the contractors over and above the contract price, (obtained from the bureaus,) $207,311.

The minority report covered the whole matter and gave all the facts in strong detail and concluded that there ought to be no appeal even to a court in behalf of any one of these parties.

But the bill passed and these parties went to the Court of Claims. In the court the suit was brought in favor of McCord, who was the contractor, because he was the contractor. But he had transferred his claim to Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, to secure them for $40,000 he owed them for gun-boat material, and had himself become insolvent. Afterwards McCord was adjudged a voluntary bankrupt in 1868, and Chouteau had bought this claim against the United States at his bankrupt sale. When the case came on for trial in the Court of Claims all these facts appeared.

Now, I call attention to a statement by the committee as to that matter. Coming to the finding of the Court of Claims that these parties could not recover because of the final receipts given by them, the committee make this statement:

But the petitioners encountered an unexpected difficulty in the Court of Claims. On the hearing the Government produced a receipt from McCord, signed by his attorneys in fact, Messrs. Gilman, Sons & Co., bankers, of New York, purporting to be in full of all extras for this vessel. It is alleged by the petitioners that this receipt was unknown to them before the day of the trial, and that they had no opportunity to rebut or explain it, and Messrs. Gilman, in their evidence, state that if such a receipt was signed by them it was done without knowing the purport thereof; that they were only authorized as bankers to receive whatever moneys might be paid on account of such vessel, the contract requiring the payments to be made in New York; that they had no knowledge whatever of the state of accounts between the Government and their principals; that they had no authority to bind their principals further than the receipt of such moneys as were paid to them, and had no intention of binding the principals to any settlement.

The receipt was executed prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.

The Court of Claims held this receipt to be a bar to all claims for extras in the construction of the battery.

The decision of the Court of Claims was affirmed on appeal by the Supreme Court.

The report proceeds:

It is thus seen that it is possible that McCord never saw this voucher prior to its payment. In fact, from the circumstances of the case and the situation of the parties, your committee is of the opinion that it is altogether probable that such was the fact.

The Supreme Court of the United States differed with the committee as to what was "probable" from the evidence. I read from Chouteau vs. the United States, 95 United States Reports, 67:

It is certainly fair to suppose that McCord presented his own statement of the account to the Navy officers; and the final approval of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction at Washington is dated April 26, 1866. The payment, as indorsed on that same voucher by the paymaster at New York to Gilman, Son & Co., is dated May 11, 1866—

The voucher was made April 26, 1866, so that about half a month transpired between the making of the voucher to the signing of the receipt—which is just about a reasonable time for the voucher to have been received from Washington by McCord at Saint Louis, and by him forwarded to Gilman, Son & Co., at New York, for collection. If this be the true history of the voucher, McCord is bound by his own actions; for the voucher, while in his hands, had on its face the clearest statement that the sum herein allowed was "the full and final payment on all extras and in full for all claims and demands for that work;" and if he forwarded it in this shape to his bankers to get the money on it, without protest, he must be bound by that statement in the voucher.

But I wish to call attention to another matter, This report evidently intends to impress upon the House as a fact that these parties were surprised by the production of this receipt; that they had not and could not have had any knowledge of it until the time of the trial. In the first place, it would be a very unsafe proposition to say that a man who is suing the Government must not take notice of the receipts which he has given. But apart from all that, the fact is these parties had every opportunity given to them to explain the receipt, and they could not explain. I have before me the report made by Mr. Hanna, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress, on the case of William A. Steel and Charles P. Chouteau. This report was adverse to the claim—a unanimously adverse report against this identical claim. There is here a long recitation of the facts, and then comes an affidavit from Gilman & Gilman, which I suppose is what the committee here calls the evidence of those gentlemen; for their evidence never was taken before, so far as I can discover. I wish to call attention to the fact that in this affidavit they do not pretend that they were the only members of the firm of Gilman, Sons & Co.; they simply say that they were members of the firm, and that in accepting this money this firm had nothing to do with the settlement. They do not contradict the fact that McCord may have made the settlement and forwarded it to them. Although the opinion of the Supreme Court was pronounced at the October term, 1877, and this affidavit not made until December, 1877, and with the express view to get rid of that decision of the Supreme Court, they pretermitted any expression of opinion or any allusion to the question whether they received the voucher from the Department or whether it was transmitted to them from McCord. Their silence is condemnatory of this case.

But this report contains the case, every word of it, as it was presented in the Court of Claims; and I will show now by quotations from it how utterly wanting these parties were in any care about this matter, if any thing could have been proved. But I do not read it with a view to show carelessness; I read it to show that they could not prove any thing, upon the legal presumption we all act upon, that every man will prove what is for his benefit if he has an opportunity.

This record of the Court of Claims shows that this case remained in that court four years before it was called for trial. During those four years testimony was being prepared. In the language of the counsel for the United States, these receipts, which were made out in duplicate and filed in the Departments of the Government, were as accessible to these claimants as to him. There could have been no concealment. Besides, they were filed on the day before the trial, and notice served upon Mr. Merriman and Mr. Doolittle, the counsel for the claimants, that this receipt would be insisted upon. When the case came before the Court of Claims the following proceedings took place:

Mr. Merriman said: We are ready for the trial, may it please your honor, and I would ask if Judge Nott would be present.

Drake, C. J. No, sir; he will not.

Mr. Merriman. I believe the rules of court require that there should be three judges present who assent to the judgment.

Drake, C. J. No, sir; not at all. There is no rule upon that subject. A quorum is present, and if you choose to submit your case you can do so; and if not, it will have to be continued.

Thus the choice was given to them. It was said to them, in effect, "You now have notice of this receipt; you know it is to be insisted upon; grant that you were not bound to hunt it up before; you now know it. If you desire to have a full bench you can continue this case until the next term. Will you go on?"

Mr. Merriman. We will proceed with the case.

And they proceeded.

The first point in the case was that Chouteau was not a party, and that there could be no recovery in the name of anybody else, because the record showed that McCord, the contractor, was dead, his administrator was a party, and that before he died Chouteau had bought this at McCord's bankrupt sale, and therefore the right was in Chouteau. Mr. Merriman asked if the Government proposed on a technicality to dismiss the cause out of court. The reply was substantially: "No; we consent that you may make Mr. Chouteau a party." Upon a suggestion that it would take time to make the proper pleadings to show the transfer in the court of bankruptcy and all that, it was agreed to go on and let plaintiff's counsel file amended pleadings thereafter. They went on, assuming that the proper pleadings were, or would be, filed. Here was a second chance for a postponement tendered and refused.

After that was adjusted they presented their case. Treating of the receipt, this language occurs:

Mr. Merriman. This receipt perhaps he (may be) used as a defense to this action, provided that Charles W. McCord ever made a settlement or had ever signed this receipt. But there is nothing here to show that Mr. McCord ever made this settlement, or ever authorized Gilman, Son & Co. to sign for him. These papers have been put in just before the trial commenced.

Drake, C. J. Do you suppose that the Government or its officers would have paid $26,653.17 to Gilman, Son & Co., as attorneys of McCord, unless they had evidence conclusive that these men were McCord's attorneys.

Mr. Johnson pointed to the power of attorney, which was then read.

Drake, C. J. Gilman, Son & Co. are still in existence, are they not?

Mr. Merriman. I suppose so.

Then comes a colloquy, which I will ask the Clerk to read, between the judge and Mr. Merriman, as to explaining that receipt.

The Clerk read as follows:

Drake, C. J. If they had signed without his knowledge at all, and without his ever having anything to do with the settlement of this account, I think it would have taken you about one week to have taken the testimony of either of those gentlemen to prove it.

Mr. Merriman. This evidence was only put in yesterday. We have not had time to take their testimony.

Drake, C. J. But you could have had the case laid over if you wished. Your position is this: that McCord knows nothing about this settlement.

Mr. Merriman. I take this position: that this is not the act of Mr. McCord in settling or compromising a claim which he had against the United States, and that the party setting up such settlement, such a release of the claims of McCord against the United States, must show full authority in so doing. An attorney at law has no right to settle and compromise a claim of his client without the client's consent, and if he does it, it is not binding upon his client. Here was a claim of McCord against the United States, at this time, of nearly $100,000. Messrs. Gilman, Son & Co. received from the United States the sum of $26,653.17, which is credited by McCord to the United States. At the same time that Gilman, Son & Co. received this sum they signed a receipt apparently binding McCord to a settlement of the entire claim. The court may, under the circumstances, desire further evidence in relation to this, but the position I take is that the defendant has not shown yet that this claim was settled by that receipt; that he has not shown the authority from Mr. McCord to compromise and discharge this debt.

Milligan, J. After the receipt is given, would not the presumption be that Mr. McCord had notice of it, and his lying quiet throw the burden upon you to show that he was not aware of it?

Mr. Merriman. This is the first time that this receipt has ever come to our knowledge. We have been suing the Government for a great many years, trying to collect this money.

Milligan, J. I merely suggest that for your consideration.

Mr. Merriman. We are met at this time with this receipt. It is a paper which has been kept by the defendant from us and from the court until the moment of trial, this case having been pending here for several years, and I cannot think that the presumption is against us.

Drake, C. J. It is exactly four years and one day since this case was brought. The petition was filed October 30, 1869, and you say that this paper about which the conversation is now has only just come to your knowledge.

Mr. Merriman. It was filed yesterday.

Mr. Johnson. It has been as open to you as it has to us. It has been in the Department all the time.

Loring, J. I think, as the case stands now, the burden of proof of the receipt is on the Government.

Mr. Doolittle. All the authority which Gilman, Son & Co. had is expressed in that written power of attorney.

Drake, C. J. It is expressed there that they have power to collect all these moneys, "to ask, demand, sue for, recover, and receive."

Mr. Doolittle. But there is no power to compromise or release.

Drake, C. J. "And upon the receipt of any such debts, dues, &c., acquittances or other sufficient discharges for me and in my name to make and give."

Mr. Doolittle. We do not deny but we are bound by the payment made to us. We admit that so far as the payment is made we are bound.

Drake, C. J. You admit that they were the legally constituted authorities of McCord, and had a right to receive his money. That is all their receipt specifies. The legal effect of that is another thing—a question of law altogether. The fact there is no difference about here, as I understand.

Mr. Doolittle. We admit that the payment is binding, but we say they had no power to make that pretended release of our claims.

Drake, C. J. There is no release here at all. It is their receipt at the bottom of this document. What the effect is is a question of law.

Mr. Doolittle. We do not admit that they had the power to put into that "in full of all demands" for extra work. That we deny.

Drake, C. J. They do not put that in their receipt. That is in the body of the bill. The receipt of Gilman, Son & Co. is:

"Received of J. C. Eldredge, paymaster, twenty-six thousand six hundred and fifty-three and seventeen one-hundredths dollars, in full of the within bill, and have signed duplicate receipts."

Now, I understand you, on the part of the claimants here, not to question at all the right of Gilman, Son & Co. to receive that money under that power of attorney, and that this is their receipt.

Mr. Doolittle. That is true.

Drake, C. J. You do not dispute that?

Mr. Doolittle. If the words "in full of the within bill" are to be carried back to cover the words "in full for all claims and demands" for that work—if there is any effect to be given to them to release or discharge any further claims, we deny that they had any such power.

Drake, C. J. That is simply a question of law, which will be considered when the case is submitted to us on the argument; but I understand there is no dispute about the fact at all.

Mr. Merriman. There is a question whether this power of attorney extends any further than to receive the installments upon the original contract for $386,000.

Drake, C. J. That, too, is a question of law.

Mr. Merriman. There is a question, I say, as to the extent of this power of attorney.

Drake, C. J. We will consider all that.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that here again the judge asked them the question, "Are not Gilman, Son & Co. still in existence?" They said, "Oh yes." The idea was, cannot you explain this receipt?

Here is a plain power of attorney which the Court of Claims, and the Supreme Court afterward, decided was ample authority for the purpose of allowing them to make settlement. Here was their absolute final receipt in so many words, and the court said, "Where is the man who signed this receipt; cannot you get him?" "Oh yes, we suppose we could, but we desire to stake the case on the law point that the power of attorney is not broad enough, and that the receipt ought not to bind." Beyond all question that was an admission that they could not explain away that receipt.

Mr. Johnson took issue as to the law, and contended that the receipt did cover the case. I will read a word or two of what he said. He was for the United States.

Mr. Johnson. I will say here in regard to this settlement for extras, that there was no complaint made at any time. The accounts should be certified by the local inspector at Saint Louis, but his certificate does not appear. He swears, however, that it could not be paid without his certificate, I believe. They were evidently agreed upon in Saint Louis. Then the vouchers were made out in New York at the office of Admiral Gregory. Then they came to the Department here, and were approved by the Chief of the Bureau of Construction; then sent to New York again and paid. But they were undoubtedly agreed upon before leaving New York, or probably before reaching New York.

I do not pretend that these bankers, Gilman, Son & Co., knew anything about compromising or settling any claim. They had full power to receive and receipt for, and give proper acquittances for everything they received. This is all the claimants claim and ask for this money. They did not ask for anything more. They were to give proper acquittances, for which purpose they were given that power. They had full authority to do that, and they gave it. There was no dispute about that. All this claim for extras is an after-thought. I do not know when it came into the minds of these claimants to set up such a claim, but certainly it was long after the vessel was received, taken from them, and everything they asked for was paid, contract price and all.

That is the unchallenged language of the counsel of the United States.

He was followed by Mr. Doolittle, who again contended that the receipt was not final and the power of attorney was not broad enough to bind conclusively, and that the receipt was open to explanation.

The Court of Claims afterward decided that the receipt did bind, that the power of attorney was ample, and the Supreme Court, as I have shown, affirmed that judgment upon both points.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman give way for a motion that the committee now rise?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I am asked by the gentleman from Ohio to give way for a motion that the committee rise. Still retaining the floor, I yield for that motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CLARK. How much time has the gentleman from Georgia remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. CONVERSE. Before the committee rises, I ask unanimous consent, and I hope my colleague will withhold his motion for that purpose, to take up from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 3398) granting a pension to Anna A. Probert. I will say that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have allowed the small sum of $20 as pension to this widow. She has two small children, and the reason the claim comes here is this: her husband lost his health in the Army and was allowed a pension, which he drew up to the time of his death; but the reason his widow cannot now draw the pension is this, that when the fever broke out in Memphis, with that generosity and courage for which he was characterized, he volunteered as a nurse and went down there into that stricken district and lost his life by the fever. The Department, therefore, rules that inasmuch as his death did not arise from wounds or disease contracted in the Army, that his widow cannot continue to draw the pension. This gives her a small pension of $20 a month.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Does the gentleman ask to take this up out of the regular order of bills on the Private Calendar?

Mr. CONVERSE. Yes. It can be done by unanimous consent, which, under the circumstances, I hope will be granted.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I shall certainly object to it.

Mr. CONVERSE. I hope my friend will not object in this case. This is the case of a poor widow who needs it now badly.

Mr. PRESCOTT. There are two hundred similar cases, I am sure, on the Calendar; and I do not think it is proper to make an exception. They should all be acted upon in their proper order.

Mr. CONVERSE. But only a few minutes will be required for this case.

Mr. PRESCOTT. If it does take but a minute, the same rule should apply to the other cases, and I will feel obliged to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. PRESCOTT. I do.

Mr. TAYLOR. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BELFORD reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration various bills, had instructed him to report them to the House with sundry recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with favorable recommendation were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, were read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2141) granting a pension to Martha A. Lewis;

A bill (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of John. B. Trainer; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1136) for the relief of John H. Morris.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia, and the bill (H. R. No. 2192) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Alonzo Gesner;

A bill (S. No. 383) to amend section 4458 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to license fees of officers of steam-vessels;

A bill (S. No. 412) for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead;

A bill (S. No. 578) to authorize the erection of a statue of Chief-Justice Marshall;

A bill (S. No. 619) for the relief of Marcos Radich;

A bill (S. No. 643) for the relief of Ellen Moore, widow of Allen Moore, deceased; and

A bill (S. No. 885) to authorize the compilation and printing of the naval documentary history of the war.

STEPHEN H. LONG.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar with favorable recommendation was the bill (H. R. No. 2756) to settle the claim of the heirs of the late Colonel Stephen H. Long, of the United States Topographical Engineers; which was engrossed, and ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. BRAGG. On the passage of the bill I ask the yeas and nays, so as to test the sense of the House upon the action of the committee. This is the bill which in the committee I had the honor to oppose, upon the ground that it provides for the payment for an invention said to have been made by an officer of the United States Army while in the discharge of his duty as such officer, and an invention which pertained to his duty in the department to which he was assigned. I desire therefore to obtain the sense of the House on the passage of the bill, and for that reason I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 50, not voting 144; as follows:

Mr. LEEDOM with Mr. SHULTZ.

Mr. HEILMAN with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. PAYSON with Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois.

Mr. MARTIN with Mr. JADWIN.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. CRAPO with Mr. ROBINSON of New York.

Mr. SCRANTON with Mr. FROST.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. MILLS.

Mr. SHELLEY with Mr. FARWELL of Illinois.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. COLERICK with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. BARR with Mr. CASSIDY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, with Mr. HARRIS, of New Jersey.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. MUTCHLER.

Mr. DEZENDORF with Mr. GARRISON.

Mr. MCLANE with Mr. PAGE.

Mr. CARLISLE with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. O'NEILL.

Mr. HUBBELL with Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. RYAN with Mr. MANNING.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. RICE of Ohio.

Mr. HILL, of New Jersey, with Mr. ROSS.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. WARD.

Mr. NOLAN with Mr. HAMMOND of New York.

Mr. KING with Mr. BUCK.

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. SPARKS.

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. CARPENTER with Mr. THOMPSON of Kentucky.

Mr. FORD with Mr. VANCE.

Mr. PHISTER with Mr. POUND.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to make a report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the gentleman withhold the conference report till the House disposes of the further reports from the Committee of the Whole House. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOSEPH L. STEVENS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House with a recommendation that it do pass was the bill (H. R. No. 1014) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 15, noes 95, the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays. In Committee of the Whole it was agreed we should have a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That was the understanding in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that no agreement made in Committee of the Whole binds the House unless gentlemen choose to carry out such an agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. We will all vote to carry it out. That was the understanding.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will again submit the question to the House by a rising vote.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] in Committee of the Whole, said he would not raise the question of a quorum, upon the understanding that the yeas and nays should be called in the House. That being the case I think they ought to be called.

Mr. HISCOCK. In view of the shape this question is in I hope I may be permitted to present a conference report on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the question on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to, upon a division, ayes 44, noes 56.

Mr. KLOTZ. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WILSON. That is right.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. KLOTZ, and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 57.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. BRAGG called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered; there being but 28 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the result of the vote on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLOTZ]—ayes 51, noes 57. The motion is not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe I have the right to make a report at this time from a committee of conference.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum voted on the last motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to make the point that no quorum voted. The Chair announced the result of the vote, and business has intervened.

Mr. BRAGG. What business?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] made the motion that the House adjourn, and afterward withdrew the motion.

Mr. BRAGG. Then I renew the motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. That motion has just been voted down.

Mr. HOOKER. But new business has intervened.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the motion to the House.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. BRAGG; and upon a division there were—ayes 47, noes 52.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BRAGG called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered; there being but 16 in the affirmative not one-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. BRAGG. I now move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn, and upon a division there were—ayes 59, noes 30.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GODSHALK, until the 20th instant, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BEACH, for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday next, on account of important business.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL AND LYING-IN ASYLUM.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. VAN AERNAM, of New York, and Mr. LADD, of Maine, as directors of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, to hold their offices for the term of this Congress as provided for by law.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. BRAGG was then announced; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWNE: Papers relating to the pension claim of Mary Wade—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. H. BURROWS: The petitions of Henry Restine and others, citizens of Cainesville, and of Evermont Booth and others, citizens of Harrison County, in the State of Missouri, praying for the restoration of fractional currency—severally to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CARPENTER: The petition of citizens of Boone County, Iowa, asking that the same privileges and encouragement be given to building railroad bridges across the Missouri River above Omaha as have heretofore been given below that city—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DWIGHT: The petition of J. M. Stone and 38 others, citizens of Binghamton, New York, relative to the duty on manufactured glass—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HEPBURN: The petition of Samuel Johnson and 50 others, citizens of Iowa, praying for aid in the construction of bridges across the Missouri River in Iowa and Nebraska north of Omaha—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HOGE: Papers relating to the claim of William M. Morrison—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, the petition of Robert F. Tapp, for compensation for damages done his mills and lands by the erection of dam No. 7 on the Monongahela River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JOYCE: The petition of C. Benjamin and others, citizens of Pittsfield, Rutland County, Vermont, praying for the passage of the Edmunds bill for the suppression of polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of P. T. Griffith, praying that he be granted an honorable discharge from the military service—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEAL: The petition of Dr. Jonathan Morris and 10 others, physicians of the city of Ironton, in the State of Ohio, in favor of the establishment of a marine hospital at that place—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The resolution of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Philadelphia, requesting Congress either to abolish promptly the tax on tobacco and cigars or to pass resolutions to the effect that it is unwise and impolitic to tamper during the present Congress with the said tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. S. ROBINSON: The petition of John Bonner and others, for the establishment of a daily mail route from Magnetic Springs to Delaware, in the State of Ohio—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, papers relating to the pension claims of Charles B. and Elizabeth Smith and of Sarah I. Cameron—severally to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEELE: The petition of R. Strops and 60 others, praying for the establishment of a post-route from North Manchester to Seagro, in the State of Indiana—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. VANCE: The letter of W. O. Harrelson, of North Carolina, relative to legislation on the subject of temperance—to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 4, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT IN KANSAS.

Mr. RYAN. I desire this morning to renew the request I made day before yesterday, that House bill No. 429, to provide for holding a term of the district court of the United States at Wichita, Kansas, and for other purposes, be taken from the House Calendar and considered at this time. The objection which was then made has since been withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. RYAN. I will state to my friend that this bill was read fully last Thursday morning; but if he desires it read again, I have no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was not aware that this bill had been read.

Mr. RYAN. Yes; you called for the reading of it yourself, and it was read in response to your own request.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a bill which involves the jurisdiction of certain portions of the Indian Territory?

Mr. RYAN. It is that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as the subject has been somewhat considered by members since the bill was read, I have no objection to its being considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the House Calendar for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be one term of the United States district court for the district of Kansas held at Wichita in each year, on the first Monday of September, from and after the passage of this act; but no cause, action, or proceeding shall be tried or considered in the court herein provided for unless by consent of all the parties thereto or order of the court, except as otherwise hereinafter provided. The clerk, marshal, and district attorney for said district of Kansas shall perform the duties pertaining to their offices respectively for said court, and the clerk and marshal shall appoint a deputy to reside and keep their offices at Wichita, who, in the absence of the principals, shall do and perform all the duties appertaining to their said offices respectively. But the city or county authorities shall provide a suitable building, without expense to the United States, in which to hold said court, otherwise no court shall be held at said place.

SEC. 2. That all that part of the Indian Territory lying north of the Canadian River and east of Texas and the one hundredth meridian not set apart and occupied by the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indian tribes, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be annexed to and constitute a part of the United States judicial district of Kansas; and the United States district courts at Wichita and Fort Scott, in the district of Kansas, shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all offenses committed within the limits of the territory hereby annexed to said district of Kansas against any of the laws of the United States now or that may hereafter be operative therein.

SEC. 3. That all that portion of the Indian Territory not annexed to the district of Kansas by this act, and not set apart and occupied by the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Indian tribes, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be annexed to and constitute a part of the United States judicial district known as the northern district of Texas; and the United States district court at Graham, in said northern district of Texas, shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all offenses committed within the limits of the territory hereby annexed to said northern district of Texas against any of the laws of the United States now or that may hereafter be operative therein.

SEC. 4. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect in any manner any action or proceeding now pending in the circuit or district court for the western district of Arkansas, nor the execution of any process relating thereto; nor shall anything in this act be construed to give to said district courts of Kansas or Texas, respectively, any greater jurisdiction in that part of said Indian Territory so as aforesaid annexed, respectively, to said district of Kansas and said northern district of Texas than might heretofore have been lawfully exercised therein by the western district of Arkansas; nor shall anything in this act contained be construed to violate or impair in any respect any treaty provision whatever.

Mr. RYAN. The Committee on the Judiciary recommend an amendment to the first section of the bill, to strike out the words at the end of the section, "otherwise no court shall be held at said place."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. Does this bill provide for a new judge?

Mr. RYAN. It provides for no new officer whatever.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. RYAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY C. MURRAY.

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, I claim the indulgence of the House for a moment. In the hour of our country's peril, when the old flag was trampled in the dust and the Union was, we feared, about to be dissevered, this Government called for men, and thousands of them, including Edward Murray, went to the field of battle. He fought bravely through the war, was twice wounded at Snicker's Gap, once in the wrist—when, from loss of blood, he was taken from the field—and then shot through the belt, the ball penetrating the kidneys. He can no longer remind the country of its promise to make his wife and children the wards of the Government. His voice is hushed in death. His widow bids me ask you not for back pay but for a pension to support her. She is in want, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3549) granting a pension to Mary C. Murray, and that the bill be now considered and passed.

Mr. SPARKS. Why does not this applicant go to the Pension Office, like anybody else?

Mr. FLOWER. The claim has been presented there. I have read the evidence thoroughly. The bill has twice been reported favorably in this House.

Mr. SPARKS. It may be that the bill is right, but I do not know that the patriotic speech of the gentleman calls upon us for precipitate action. There is a Pension Bureau where all these claims ought to go under the liberal provisions of our pension laws. Why not go there with this case, where the soldiers of my district equally meritorious go with theirs?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object? If there be no objection, the bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll from the date of November 13, 1876, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary C. Murray, widow of Lieutenant-Colonel Edward Murray, late of the Fifth New York Heavy Artillery.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to strike out the words "from the date of November 13, 1876," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLOWER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBOR OF REFUGE, SAND BEACH, LAKE HURON.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 797) for the government and control of the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Lake Huron, Michigan, and that the bill be now considered. This bill has received the careful consideration of the Committee on Commerce, who unanimously recommend its passage. A similar bill was passed by this House in the last Congress, but failed to receive action in the Senate. The Secretary of War and General Wright, as well as the Secretary of the Treasury, are very anxious for the passage of this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, and until the completion of the work of construction, the Secretary of War is directed to assume full control over the harbor of refuge on Lake Huron at Sand Beach, Michigan, now in course of construction by the United States Government, and of the piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, buildings, and other improvements made by the United States appertaining to said harbor of refuge, and to facilitate the use thereof, including the channels of and approaches to said harbor of refuge, so far as may be necessary to the protection and use of said harbor and the improvements aforesaid; and said Secretary of War, for the purpose aforesaid, and for the preservation of said harbor in the interests of commerce, shall prescribe such regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States respecting the use of said harbor and its channels, and the approaches thereto, and respecting the use of the piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, buildings, and other improvements of said harbor, made by the United States, as he shall deem needful to fully protect and preserve the said harbor and its several channels and approaches, and the said piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, buildings, and other improvements. Such regulations shall be promulgated by publication thereof for ten days consecutively in one daily newspaper published in each of the cities of Detroit, Port Huron, Buffalo, Cleveland, and Chicago, and said regulations may be changed in like manner from time to time. He shall also cause four copies of such regulations to be kept posted in conspicuous places on said piers and breakwaters.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall appoint, upon the recommendation of the engineer officer in charge of the work, a custodian of said harbor and the improvements aforesaid, whose duty it shall be to preserve and protect the same under the regulations made as aforesaid by the Secretary of War, and to enforce the observance of said regulations, and to guard and preserve the property of the United States at said harbor of refuge. Said custodian shall also have power to direct and regulate the stationing and anchoring of steam-vessels and water-craft in said harbor, and the mooring thereof at the piers, breakwaters, docks, and wharves of said harbor, and the laying out and discharging of cargoes and ballast in said harbor, piers, breakwaters, and docks; and it shall be the duty of said custodian to report to the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Michigan all violations of this act and of the said regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War; and said custodian shall receive such compensation, not exceeding $150 per month, as the Secretary of War may allow.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of all persons using or navigating said harbor, its channels and approaches, or using any of the piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, or other improvements made by the United States, to observe the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War as aforesaid; and any person who shall willfully or negligently strand or sink any steam-vessel, boat, or craft in said harbor, or in the channels or approaches, or who shall willfully obstruct or oppose the custodian of said harbor in the enforcement of the regulations aforesaid, or who shall willfully or negligently, or by failure or neglect to observe the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War for the use thereof, obstruct or impair said harbor, or cause any impediment, injury, filling up, or shoaling therein, or shall deposit any earth, ashes, stone, ballast, or other substances in said harbor, channels, or approaches tending to obstruct or impair the navigation thereof, or who shall willfully damage or injure the piers, breakwaters, wharves, docks, or other improvements of said harbor made by the United States, or who shall fail to obey and observe any of said prescribed regulations, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $50 nor more than $500, to be recovered by information or by action of debt in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan, with costs of suit, and shall, in addition thereto, be liable to the United States, or to any person aggrieved by such obstructions, or injuries, or unlawful acts or omission, in a civil action for all damages occasioned thereby, or by any of said unlawful acts, to said United States or such aggrieved person. And if such damage or injury to said harbor, channels, approaches, piers, breakwaters, docks, wharves, and other property of the United States in said harbor of refuge be committed by any steamer, vessel, or water-craft, or by the master or person in charge thereof, or if such master or other person in charge of such vessel shall willfully violate the regulations aforesaid, the aforesaid penalty of not less than $50 nor more than $500 shall be incurred, and such vessel shall be liable for the penalty aforesaid, and may be proceeded against by way of libel for the recovery thereof in any court of the United States within whose jurisdiction such vessel may be found.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, purchase or hire a steam launch or tug, to be stationed at and used about said harbor, under the direction of said custodian, for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act; and such a sum as may be necessary, not exceeding $10,000, is hereby appropriated for the purchase or hire of said steam-launch; and the expense of removing and maintaining said launch or tug shall be paid out of the appropriation made for said harbor of refuge.

SEC. 5. That after the completion of said harbor by the United States Government the control shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TOBACCO TAX.

Mr. SCALES. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time for reference to the Committee on Ways and Means, and to be printed in the RECORD without reading, a petition from the citizens of Milton, North Carolina, and its vicinity, in regard to the tobacco tax. This is a matter of great importance to my constituents; and I hope there will be no objection.

There being no objection, the following petition was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Petition from citizens of Milton, North Carolina, and its vicinity, in regard to the tobacco tax.

To the honorable the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the members of the tobacco trade of the town of Milton, State of North Carolina, do respectfully submit this our memorial to you, praying for a speedy settlement of the question now agitating the country relative to the tax on manufactured tobacco.

Internal taxation has always been repellent to our free institutions and has been ever regarded as a burden to be borne only so long as an extraordinary and pressing emergency demands it.

This tax on tobacco was inaugurated September 30, 1862, in the midst of a great and prolonged conflict. It was then simply a war measure. Twenty years have almost passed since its passage. During this time the tobacco industry has cheerfully poured into our national Treasury $542,358,303.09. By this vast sum our national debt has been greatly reduced, and what is left of that debt has been or can be readily funded at a very low rate of interest, and thus furnish the best basis for our national currency. Our Treasury vaults are redundant with accumulated wealth and peace is everywhere undisturbed. Such being the case, we respectfully ask, is it not time this great industry, which is relied on by rich and poor alike as a means of subsistence, were relieved of this tax burden, a burden that weighs heavily upon producers, manufacturers, dealers, and consumers. To this end, since the necessity for its continuance no longer exists, we unqualifiedly pray its total abolition. Connected with this tax incubus is the question of manufacturers' bonds, to which we respectfully solicit your attention. In interior towns, especially in the South where very little accumulated wealth exists, it is often next to impossible for men of tried integrity to give the bond required by the Government simply because so few of their neighbors can justify to the requisite amount. Should you in your wisdom determine to reduce instead of abolishing the tax, we respectfully entreat that the bonds required be reduced in like proportion. Your memorialists, however, heartily trust that you will abolish the tax in its entirety. And to this end they most humbly pray, &c.

We would further pray that the license tax on leaf dealers be reduced to $5 if it be not abolished.

RETIREMENT OF TRADE-DOLLARS.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4671) for the retirement of trade-dollars from circulation. I think when the bill is read there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, but before the reading was concluded

Mr. RANDALL said: While I favor a part of this bill, perhaps all of it, I feel it necessary to make objection to the consideration of so important a bill at this time and in this way.

AMENDMENT OF LAND LAWS.

Mr. BRENTS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill which I send to the desk. It is very short and its purpose is simply to correct a verbal inaccuracy in a law passed a year or two ago.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1934) amendatory of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase-money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880.

Be it enacted, &c., That the words "heirs or assigns," at the end of the second section of the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase-money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880, are hereby stricken out and the words "personal representatives" inserted in their stead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not think we ought to pass a measure of this character unless we know all about it. This may be a very important bill.

Mr. BRENTS. This bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands, having been introduced at the request of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It simply seeks to carry out the original purpose of the act of June 16, 1880.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which is equivalent to an objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to present a conference report on the urgent deficiency bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, and 16.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 21, 29, 30, 31, 34, 36, 38, 41, and 42, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 28, 32, 35, and 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Transfer amendments numbered 32, 35, and 37, and insert the same in the order named as new paragraphs after amendment numbered 27, and insert as a new paragraph after amendment numbered 28 the following: "For contingent expenses of the Senate: 'Miscellaneous items,' the sum of $14,331.20, as follows;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of "six" in line 1 of the amendment insert "seven," and in lieu of the sum named in line 5 of the amendment insert "$3,780;" and the Senate agree to the same.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
P. B. PLUMB,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any increase in the items?

Mr. HISCOCK. The Senate increased it $478,297.10. They recede from that to the amount $220,000. The House recede as to $100,000 and as to $56,000. Is there any other explanation the gentleman wants?

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to know what is the increase of amount as the bill left the House?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have not the precise figures, but I think about $156,207.

The following is the statement accompanying the report of the committee of conference, under the rule:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the urgent deficiency bill respectfully submit the required detailed statement of the effect of the foregoing report as to action on the several amendments; which will be, if the report is adopted, as follows:

On the first amendment: To fix the sum to be appropriated for public printing at $400,000, as originally provided in the bill.

On the third amendment: To fix the sum "for freight on bullion and coin" at $50,000, as originally provided.

On the fourth, fifth, and sixth amendments: To fix the sum to be expended for "vaults and safes" at $20,000, to be expended equally at the Mint and at the subtreasury at San Francisco, California.

On the eighth amendment: To include the sum of $10,000 for repair and purchase of instruments to be used in the observation of the transit of Venus, December, 1882, and to create the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac a member of the Transit of Venus Commission.

On the ninth amendment: To exclude the sum of $100,000 for the Navy Department, for purchase of plates and materials for boilers, from the bill.

On the tenth amendment: To include the sum of $20,000 for mileage of officers of the Army when traveling under orders.

On the twelfth amendment: To appropriate $20,000 for subsistence, &c., of Apaches and other Indians of Arizona and New Mexico.

On the thirteenth amendment: To appropriate $50,000 for support and civilization of Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches, and Wichita Indians.

On the fourteenth amendment: To exclude $3,000 for Indians in central superintendency.

On the fifteenth amendment: To fix the amount for Indians in the late central superintendency at $3,000.

On the sixteenth amendment: To exclude $5,000 for Navajo Indians.

On the seventeenth amendment: To include "schools for freedmen in the Indian Territory," in the clause providing $50,000 for support of schools.

On the eighteenth amendment: To include pay of expert architects for work on additional accommodations for Library of Congress, $5,000.

On the twentieth amendment: To authorize the use of an unexpended balance of the appropriations for the improvement of the Susquehanna River above and below Havre de Grace, in the construction of the channel and breakwaters of the fishing battery below Havre de Grace.

On the twenty-first amendment: To include the sum of $30,000 to expedite the work on the exhibition cases in the new building for the National Museum during the present fiscal year.

On the twenty-second amendment: To fix the amount for additional clerk hire in post-offices at $100,000.

On the twenty-eighth amendment: To include $7,000 for miscellaneous items for the Senate.

On the twenty-ninth amendment: To include pay to D. F. Murphy for reporting debates of the special session of the Senate, $2,500.

On the thirtieth amendment: To include pay to the clerk of the superintendent of the Senate document-room, $720.

On the thirty-first amendment: To include pay of assistant clerk to the Senate Committee on Pensions, $520.

On the thirty-second amendment: To include pay to the telephone operator of the Senate, $720.

On the thirty-third amendment: To pay messengers of the Senate, $3,780.

On the thirty-fourth amendment: To include payment to heirs of recently deceased officers and employés of the Senate, $4,459.20.

On the thirty-fifth amendment: To include payment of the expenses attending the funeral arrangements by the Senate of the late President and of the late Senator Burnside, $6,000.

On the thirty-sixth amendment: To include payment of certain clerks to committees of the Senate during the period from the 5th to the 18th of March last, $2,268.

On the thirty-seventh amendment: To include pay for folding speeches in the Senate, $500; and fix the rate of pay for folding speeches.

On the thirty-eighth amendment: To include pay to Richard S. Murphy for services as clerk to the Committee on Foreign Relations, $84.

On the forty-first amendment: To include $2,000 for contingent expenses of the executive office.

On the forty-second amendment: To authorize the Secretary of War to pay out of the contingent fund for the office of the Surgeon-General rent for the portion of the building on the corner of F and Tenth streets occupied by a part of the force of said office.

FRANK HISCOCK.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I object to any more grants of unanimous consent, as we have not had a morning hour for some time.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will lay before the House at this time some executive communications.

There was no objection.

EASTERN CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 2d instant, with accompanying papers, submitting an estimate of appropriations for the payment of expenses of removal of certain Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory.

The subject is presented for the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 3, 1882.

FORT SELDEN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting plans and estimates for the large military post proposed to be constructed at Fort Selden, New Mexico.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 3, 1882.

ENCROACHMENT ON CHICAGO HARBOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House of February 13, a report from the Chief of Engineers relative to the matter of encroachment upon the harbor of Chicago, Illinois; which, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT AT MENASHA, WISCONSIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to House resolution of February 10, 1882, in relation to the dam maintained as a part of the Government works on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, made at Menasha, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

STEAMERS SAILING UNDER ENGLISH FLAG.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to House resolution of February 23, in relation to certain vessels, said to be steamers, sailing under the English flag with American certificates, among them the steamer Bahama, lately lost; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH L. STEVENS.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being demanded, the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1014) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with the recommendation that it do pass, and on the passage of which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 66, not voting 126; as follows:

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. WARD.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. RAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, with a view to proceeding with the further consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees, as the committees were called on yesterday.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Before moving to go into Committee of the Whole, I yield to the gentlemen who desire to submit reports from committees.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—SMITH VS. ROBERTSON.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Elections, submitted the following report in the case of Alexander Smith vs. E. W. Robertson, contestee, in the sixth Louisiana district:

Resolved, That the contest of Alexander Smith vs. E. W. Robertson, sixth Louisiana district, be dismissed without prejudice.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HUMPHREY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 14) to amend section No. 688, Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY BEASLEY.

Mr. KELLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the petition of Mary Beasley (by James E. Beasley) with the recommendation that said committee be discharged from the further consideration of this petition, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The recommendation was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL INSPECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. NEAL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 3831) to create a district for the inspection of hulls and boilers of steam-vessels, and put it upon its passage.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I must object to yielding the floor for such purpose.

Mr. NEAL. This is merely a local bill, and will take but a few moments to dispose of.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I have no objection to yielding the floor for the introduction of reports, but I must object to yielding for the purpose of taking up bills by unanimous consent.

CLAIMS FOR HORSES AND EQUIPMENTS.

Mr. SPOONER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 419) to extend the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men, and for other purposes, with the recommendation that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that said bill be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The recommendation was agreed to.

WILLIAM F. GROUNDS.

Mr. MASON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2824) for the relief of William F. Grounds, with amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BREVET COMMISSIONS.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4788) authorizing brevet commissions to commissioned officers for distinguished conduct in engagements with or in campaigns against hostile Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADULTERATED FOOD AND DRUGS.

Mr. HORR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1080, a bill (H. R. No. 4789) to prevent the adulteration of food or drugs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORT SMITH MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CRAVENS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 44) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation of Fort Smith, Arkansas, to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of free public schools therein, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SHERWIN, to include the 14th instant, on account of important business.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If there be no other gentleman present who desires to submit a report, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he would not be willing to extend the time for discussion one hour longer?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I cannot do that. The debate has been limited, and one hour remains.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the debate was limited, with a view to increase the time one hour longer.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, that the House resolve itself in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate on the pending bill has been limited to one hour.

Mr. ROBESON rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield to me that I may have an amendment read which I desire to offer at the proper time?

Mr. ROBESON. I have no objection if it does not come out of my time. I yield twenty-five minutes of my time to my colleague on the committee from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

Mr. ATKINS. I think the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from New Jersey might consent to have the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois read.

Mr. ROBESON. I do not object if it does not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment may be read now by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand it is not formally offered, but is simply read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. It is merely sent up to be read for information.

Mr. SPRINGER. I give notice that at the proper time I will offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all the bill printed on page 2 and by inserting in lieu thereof the following substitute for the various paragraphs on said page:

"For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Brazil, Mexico, Chili, Japan, China, Turkey, and the Netherlands, at $12,000 each, $84,000. And hereafter the minister accredited to Germany shall also be accredited to Austria; the minister accredited to Russia shall also be accredited to Roumania, Servia, and Greece; the minister accredited to France shall also be accredited to Spain, Italy, Switzerland, and Portugal; the minister accredited to Brazil shall also be accredited to the Argentine Republic, Uruguay, and Paraguay; the minister accredited to Mexico shall also be accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua; the minister accredited to Chili shall also be accredited to Peru, Bolivia, Venezuela, and the United States of Colombia; the minister accredited to Turkey shall also be accredited to Persia, and the minister accredited to the Netherlands shall also be accredited to Belgium, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark. The President may designate the consul or consul-general residing in any of the countries mentioned in this paragraph to act as the chargés d'affaires where their respective consulates are located, but no additional compensation shall be allowed for this service, except as herein specially provided.

"For ministers resident and consula-general to the Hawaiian Islands, Liberia, and Hayti, at $5,000 each, $15,000."

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] in the remarks which he submitted to the committee when this bill was last under consideration, might leave it to be supposed that in two important particulars the Committee on Appropriations had been remiss in its duty, and that this House would be remiss in its duty if certain amendments to the pending bill were not adopted. He chose, Mr. Chairman, to address remarks to the committee which would indicate that it was proper we should incorporate into this bill certain provisions which would more amply protect the naturalized citizens of the United States. I, sir, for one favor extending to the naturalized citizen, both at home and abroad, all of the protection that the native-born citizen is entitled to, and cannot permit his remarks to go unchallenged.

I have remarked before now that whenever the Democratic party is in danger, or whenever any particular member of the Democratic party is in danger, the echoes are awakened with the cry the Republican party is remiss in protecting its naturalized citizens. And I suppose, sir, in that line the gentleman from New York has revived in this House the history of the legislation referred to by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.] Because there is some such danger impending either to his party or to himself, he has chosen to revive history, and to give "his genial friend, Mr. ROBINSON," the credit of the legislation which has been had upon this subject, and which I maintain should all pass to the credit of the Republican party.

The gentleman has described the scenes in the Fortieth Congress, by which the country might be led to believe that it was through scenes of disorder and tumult my colleague from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] was enabled to offer the resolution which he did, and the legislation which was had in that Congress was passed. Mr. Chairman, a careful examination of the record will dissipate all of the illusions which the gentleman from New York has created, and will give the credit and the responsibility of that legislation to the Republican party, and to the Republican party alone; and it will strip from my colleague from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] whatever plumage he has chosen to decorate himself with on account of it.

The first resolution which was introduced by him was passed without division; was passed without objection. As to the second resolution which was introduced by him, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] tells us that the usual disorderly scenes followed; and we might suppose from his remarks that the disorder which occurred here recently when our colleague was before the House was but a re-enactment of what transpired in the Fortieth Congress. We are told by the gentleman from New York that the great leader of the Republican party at that time, Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, objected, and that he was one of the men that pitted themselves against the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] on the passage of that resolution. Not so; I have before me the record upon that question, and I find Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, said:

I have no objection to the inquiry. I am very much at a loss to know whether we can legitimately inquire into Irish trials taking place in another country. I understood the gentleman from New York to speak of one and to say that the party was convicted without evidence. I do not understand how far this resolution goes.

Further on he says:

It does not go quite as far as I thought it did.

And the resolution was agreed to. Mr. Chairman, in that Congress there were thirty representatives of the Democratic party. There may have been one or two more than that. They were in a weak minority, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs, headed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Banks, and ably supported by his Republican associates in the House, formulated the law which was passed. And it was not passed amid scenes of disorder. It was recognized as just and proper legislation. It was the only legislation of the kind, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that was ever attempted by any political party. It established the same rights for naturalized citizens which were enjoyed by native-born citizens when abroad. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] had a perfect right to maintain for himself and for his party the full credit for that legislation.

I have believed for many years that this question of the rights of naturalized citizens was substantially settled by the war of 1812. The doctrine of the right of expatriation has been maintained in the same line by all of the Executives of the United States since then, so far as I know, and it was but an assertion of a principle when this legislation was had, except that it authorized the President of the United States to go to the very verge of war in protecting the rights of naturalized citizens when abroad. Yet this statement of the history of the legislation of the Fortieth Congress and of the principles that were established by its being placed on the statute-books of this Government and of England called from the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] the declaration that my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] is a statesman who ranks with Marcy. I suppose that that remark was made in all seriousness by the gentleman from Maryland. He certainly would not be facetious upon such a subject.

Mr. MCLANE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has certainly misapprehended me. I made no comparison of anybody with Governor Marcy.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understood the gentleman to make the comparison, and I think he will find a comparison of that sort made by him in referring to the speech of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. MCLANE. Pardon me; I made but one reference to Governor Marcy, and that was not to compare him with anybody else, but to speak of him as one of the ablest statesmen of our day and generation. I made no comparison of him with anybody else. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] and I would not have done so now had he not been mistaken in his reference to what I said.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I am right in what I have said, and that the RECORD will fortify my statement. But I will not consume my time in hunting up the record now to see whether I was correct or not, as it is of no great consequence.

I desire to call the attention of my colleague from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to another part of his speech which I think is of more interest to the foreign vote which he represents in his Congressional district than his attempt to hold up the Republican party as remiss in its protection of our foreign-born citizens. I understand he makes an attack upon the consular system of the United States, and it is to that branch of his argument I now propose to address myself for a few moments. I think that he must have forgotten, when he attacked the consular system of the United States and asserted that it should not be self-supporting, that he is branching out in the direction of absolute free trade and against any protection of our industries, in which the city of New York and his Congressional district are to-day largely interested. He forgets the fact that the city of New York to-day has one hundred thousand voters who are interested in different mechanical and manufacturing industries.

There are in his district 23,433 Germans, or people from the different states of Germany. And my purpose in calling attention to his remarks upon this question is to point to the fact that he seeks to commend himself to the Democracy of the city of New York by the fallacious assertion that the Republican party is non-protective of the foreign element, and that he would strike down all of the legislation that the Republican party is responsible for in the direction of protecting the industries of the country.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I have made no such assertion.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman says he has made no such assertion. I admit that he has made no such assertion. But I ask my colleague whether all the burdens that are imposed upon the importations to this country are not in the direction of protecting the industries of the United States?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Do you want an answer?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I answer that they are not; they are obstructive of the industries of the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. And I say most emphatically that they are not obstructive of the industries of the United States. With great care we have built up a consular system, and we have in the collection of our revenues the principle of collecting ad valorem duties upon imported goods. The system must be complex, and to some extent it must be cumbersome. And whenever we impose the cost of that system upon the goods which we import it is precisely of the same character of protection with the imposts that in the first instance we lay upon those goods.

I will go further than that and say that in so far as this system is an obstruction to the importation of foreign commodities into our markets it is a protection to home industries. It is a protection to the one hundred thousand voters and to the two hundred and seventy-five thousand operatives and mechanics engaged in manufacturing industries in the city of New York.

The remarks of my colleague were addressed to a certain extent to the cumbersome method which has been established for the collection of those duties in the city of New York and in the United States. I would go with him hand in hand in any direction to make the system less cumbersome, only that it should not be made less accurate. And when the gentleman from New York will formulate here a system which, after the establishing of the value of the goods that are imported and upon which an ad valorem tax is to be levied, shall be more accurate and less expensive and less restrictive, I will unite with him in the passage of such a measure through this House. Whenever he will formulate a plan here for the collection of duties in our ports of entry which will be less expensive and less cumbersome, while still as exact as the present system, and which will prevent evasiens of the law, I will unite with him in support of that measure. But, Mr. Chairman, until the gentleman comes here with proof that the Democratic party in the past has been more ready and more active in guaranteeing to the citizens of foreign birth the rights of native-born citizens, he should not assail the Republican party upon its record in that respect, or seek to arouse race prejudices and passions.

As to the other point, (and I do not propose to read him a lecture or give him any advice, for he is my senior,) while representing a great manufacturing city, concealing the real purpose he has in view, he should not seek to strike down the consular system of the United States or arouse antagonisms against it until he is able to present a better one; one which in the protection of the industries of the nation will have a better effect and be more economical.

Mr. Chairman, certain gentleman upon the other side upon this question of the protection of our industries, are evasive in their speeches, in their policy, in their votes. Those who come here from certain districts of the South and from the West meet this question squarely and manfully—meet it in favor of free trade, and they discuss it upon principle. Those whose districts are to the north or east give a nominal support to protection, but are insidious in their attacks upon the system. I do not know that this remark applies to the gentleman from Maryland. I, sir, am unable to see how, when you relieve the commerce of the country of the weight and burden of the consular system, you are not to that extent abating the protection which is given to our industries. So much, sir, upon the two points made against this bill by the gentleman from New York, and incidentally upon the point made by the gentleman from Maryland.

One word in reply to the suggestions made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.] I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I have some sympathy with the attacks which are made upon the diplomatic service of the United States. I believe in building up the consular system. I would not strike it down; I would not starve it; but I would strengthen it. The gentleman from Iowa has said, in defining the duties of these two services, that one is political and the other commercial. So far as I have been able to observe, I incline to regard the one as social rather than political.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the amendment which I caused to be read and which I desire to propose as an amendment to the paragraphs printed on the second page of the bill. The proposition in brief provides for consolidating certain missions. It will, if adopted, require that the minister accredited to France shall also be accredited to Italy, Switzerland, Spain, and Portugal; that the consul or consul-general resident at each of these capitals shall be a chargé d'affaires. You will then have the minister residing at Paris and a chargé d'affaires at each of the other capitals, with whom the minister can communicate upon all diplomatic matters.

The mission to Germany will be consolidated with the mission to Austria, the minister residing at Berlin and the chargé d'affaires at Vienna. This chargé d'affaires at Vienna would communicate directly with the minister at Berlin in regard to the diplomatic business of the United States in Austria-Hungary. In Russia the duties of the minister would be enlarged to embrace Roumania, Servia, and Greece. The amendment proposes to abolish the second-class mission at Belgium, the Netherlands, and Copenhagen and to make a first-class mission at the Netherlands, which would have jurisdiction of the diplomatic business at Belgium, the Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, and Denmark, the consuls residing at the capitals of these governments being chargés d'affaires, as in the other cases.

In regard to the South American governments, the minister accredited to Brazil would be accredited also to the Argentine Republic and to Uruguay and Paraguay; the minister accredited to Chili would be accredited to Peru, Venezuela, Bolivia, and the United States of Colombia; and the minister accredited to Mexico would also be accredited to the states of Central America.

The amendment also abolishes as separate offices the positions of resident minister and consul-general at the Hawaiian Islands, and creates the single position of consul-general and resident minister at $5,000 a year. I see no necessity in this case of having a resident minister at $7,500 a year and a consul-general at $4,000 a year to reside in the little kingdom of the Hawaiian Islands, with a territory no larger than the State of Massachusetts, and having a population less than the population of Sangamon County, Illinois, the county in which I have the honor to reside.

One consul-general, being also resident minister to the Hawaiian Islands, is all our trade there requires. It is true we have a treaty with that little government which relates principally to the importation of sugars free of duty, giving a large monopoly to the persons engaged in its production, and which I hope will be abrogated as soon as we can do so under the provisions of that treaty. If these amendments are adopted it will reduce the expenditure on this bill a little over $100,000. There are some additional amendments, which will follow as a matter of course if these be adopted, which need not be mentioned, as they dispense with some supernumeraries who would be dropped by the adoption of preceding amendments.

While I am in favor of consolidating the diplomatic missions, I am willing to go with the gentlemen on both sides of the House to the furthest extent in encouraging and establishing proper remuneration for consuls and consuls-general. The amendment which I have proposed in regard to the missions was advocated by the honorable gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE,] in the remarks he submitted on this bill when it was last under consideration. It does not and cannot affect our business relations with any of the governments of the world. As the honorable gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. HISCOCK,] has said, the business of the diplomate is principally social, while that of the consul is commercial. I desire to encourage all commercial relations in every respect, and we can be as friendly with these governments through a chargé d'affaires as an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary or minister resident.

In the remarks of my honorable friend from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] a few days ago I think he gave undue importance to the relations of this Government with the South American states so far as trade is concerned, and did not give sufficient importance to the relations of this Government with Europe. The exports of the United States must be in the very nature of the case agricultural, or, in other words, breadstuffs. We export breadstuffs to feed the people of Europe. In this respect the people of South America are our rivals. We have no manufactured articles to export, to speak of, to foreign governments. Under our protective system we go upon the hypothesis that we are to manufacture enough only for ourselves and let the other governments of the world take care of their own interest in that respect. We look simply to the products of the soil, cotton, pork, corn, and wheat for the purpose of swelling our exports to European governments, and with these exports we get from them their manufactured articles and balances in gold and silver.

I am, therefore, in favor of encouraging our consular relations with those governments, and in favor of reducing annoying and harassing fees which are imposed on American ship-masters in every port by United States consuls, frequently in the shape of blackmail, always in the shape of extravagant fees and other exactions every time an American ship touches a foreign port. I would have these removed as far as possible. I do not take credit to ourselves that we get enough of these fees levied on American ships in foreign ports to pay the expense of our consuls to these places. I am willing to pay their expense out of the Treasury of the United States to encourage, as far as we may, free communication with all the people of the world.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Only one word.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I only wish to say this: that the fees now charged by us for consular services are exactly the rate of fees charged by Great Britain for consular service. That change has been made by virtue of a request attached to the appropriation bill in 1880 to reduce the fees to the same standard adopted by Great Britain, which has been done, but nobody seems to know it, not even the ship-owners themselves.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am glad to hear this announcement made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It was in the consular regulations some twelve months ago, and is now in operation. There is no grievance of that sort left.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am glad to hear that, but I know there have been great complaints made on that subject, as the gentleman is aware.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly; that request the President has complied with.

Mr. SPRINGER. So much has been accomplished, then, and we need not legislate further on that subject. I was led into this reflection by remarks made on this bill, and not having been abroad recently, and therefore not having seen the operation of the system, I may have been led into error.

Mr. McLANE. It has not been done to the extent the gentleman from New York states.

Mr. SPRINGER. There have been petitions sent to this Congress on this subject, if I am not mistaken, which petitions complain in reference to these oppressive fees. And I am quite certain that there has been no repeal of the three months' extra wages exacted for discharged seamen.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I repeat what I have already said.

Mr. McLANE. But not to the extent the gentleman has stated.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The consular fees have been reduced to the standard of Great Britain.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield for five minutes to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. COX, of New York.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, any party complexion should be given to a debate upon a mere diplomatic appropriation bill. I regret also that any measure calculated as a general law to ameliorate our consular system in the interest of commercial interchange should be discussed on this bill when we shall have opportunities as well as members competent to give us a general system looking to that end. I welcome, however, any thought which may come from my colleague. We have had those suggestions before. Some of them have been turned into regulations. Some have been fixed in legislation, but there is, to my knowledge, great necessity for some general plan, reinvigorating and reorganizing our consular system.

I am assured by gentlemen that there are plans for that purpose which have been sent to the State Department by experts. I tried by communication with the Department to inform myself with respect to them, but failed, for reasons not now necessary to submit.

I regret that the gentleman from Indiana, or any gentleman in this debate, should have thought it necessary to interject partisan matters into a discussion of this kind.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the act of 1868, passed in the Thirty-ninth Congress, was the product of the energy of both parties. I am frank to say this. I give General Banks full credit for introducing that measure from his committee, whoever instigated it. I do not pluck one leaf from the laurel which should crown the brow of my absent colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] in saying this. Where is the necessity in any discussion like this for recrimination or partisanism? Why assert that in this regard one party has been more patriotic than the other? Why quarrel as to the credit to be given to one side of the House rather than the other? Only justice compels me to say that the gentleman from Indiana, whom I do not now see in his seat, a member, perhaps, of the old American party—and I would like to know whether he was or not—I do not say the Know-nothing party, because that would not perhaps be acknowledged, but whether or not he was a member of the old American party——

Mr. ORTH. How much time will the gentleman give me to answer his question?

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes, or no, will answer.

Mr. ORTH. How much time will the gentleman give me?

Mr. COX, of New York. Just as much time as you gave us the other day—none at all.

Mr. ORTH. I gave you all the time you asked for.

Mr. COX, of New York. Not in this debate. I have given away all the time that I had. Now, although a member of the committee, I have only five minutes, and I want to use that little time myself.

But, Mr. Chairman, whether the gentleman from Indiana was a member of the American party or not, I do not know, and I do not care. I know that the naturalization laws of this country were sustained on the statute-books by the Democratic party. I know that the attempts to strike them down, to limit naturalization came from our opponents. I know that party was indoctrinated with that Federalism that Jefferson fought successfully. I know that there is no power given under heaven among men, in this Congress, to make a naturalized citizen believe otherwise. And whenever that matter comes up in Congress they will always find their first and foremost champions upon this side; and after some time, and after hearing from their constituents, we always have a very respectable following from the other side.

But I will say to gentlemen that they did not go far enough in their researches and debate. My colleague from New York [Mr. HEWITT] got on the right track, but did not pursue it. I did not mean to drop into poetry. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Chairman, if he had pursued it further he would have found that General Grant's recommendations as to expatriation were attempted to be carried out in that Republican Congress. They were sent in the form of a long and elaborate bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They undertook, if possible, to regulate matters as to expatriation.

Judge Ebenezer R. Hoar took charge of the bill, as the organ of the Administration. Its effect was in terms at least to perpetuate the mischiefs of the Bancroft treaty. The treaty was made by Republicans under Republican auspices, and confirmed by a Republican Senate. When that bill went to the Committee on Foreign Affairs I opposed it there, and successfully opposed it in this House in an elaborate speech to which I will simply refer, for I have not time to quote much of it. On April 22, 1874——

Mr. ROBESON. I will be glad to yield three minutes more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York may be extended five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will make some extracts to show that the doctrine maintained by the Democratic party in this House was the doctrine laid down, if you please, by Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, William L. Marcy, Caleb Cushing, Jeremiah S. Black, and other publicists; and that doctrine was that expatriation includes not only emigration out of one's country but naturalization in the country adopted as a future residence.

The bill of Judge Hoar undertook to expatriate men against their will. It did not limit expatriation to naturalization abroad.

Why, sir, it would have made a native of Germany or Ireland naturalized here—after two years' residence in his native land—without any sign of giving up their naturalization or adoption in this country, an alien with all the penalties of a citizen abroad. That bill, by the good sense of both sides of the House, was defeated. The measure proposed by General Grant's representative on this floor, and indorsed by his Cabinet, failed, although it was nearly a party vote.

When the gentleman talks about the Irishman or the German he will find a record here consonant with the record of the Democratic party from the beginning of the Government in favor of the largest interpretation of citizenship to those who have been adopted and naturalized here. I ask the privilege of printing some extracts showing this fact, with a view hereafter to pursue what I then undertook to pursue, namely, the abrogation of the Bancroft treaty which so discriminated against our German fellow-citizens that they were, though born here, one of them notably born in Saint Louis, placed in the German army, in the "landwehr," and held firmly. No power sought to abrogate the treaty. The only exertion was the power of diplomacy, to which the complaisant Bismarck yielded without yielding the principle. I pay my tribute to Bayard Taylor for his urgency on the German Government, whereby some of these citizens were released, notwithstanding the Bancroft treaty and the adherence of the German diplomates to the obsolete rules as to expatriation.

After all, Mr. Chairman, your act of 1868 was not very much. Congress does not reclaim its citizens. Their rights abroad are by treaty. It is not one-sided municipal law, but international law, which is their ægis. Some moral influence there may be in a statute, for which let due credit be given; but the power to rescue and enlarge our citizens, wrongfully imprisoned, or placed in the armies abroad, is a power which is diplomatic. It is the power of the Executive. Congress in placing the law of 1868 on the statute often encouraged and sought to strengthen, if they could, or to give their moral suasion or moral force to the act of the Executive. It was an urgent incentive to duty. This and this only. A Democratic President, or a Secretary like Marcy or Seward, did not require this force or suasion. Trace the action in this matter in the history of our Government and you will see, as in the Koszta case and other cases I could name, that without an act of Congress the Executive rescued our citizens. It made their citizenship respected. It lifted our banner above them. It held them honored and respected. What occurred in the Koszta case, and in other cases, did not depend at all on an act of Congress. Its vindication is in the law of nations. It was what Rufus Choate called the Democratic "gay and festive defiance of foreign dictation."

[Extracts of speech of S. S. Cox.]

There has been no more interesting collation of facts or array of principles on this subject than is found in that document. Whether they are colored by peculiar events or traditional hate of foreigners; whether they mean party bias or individual interest, it is not for me to determine. But I would suggest to gentlemen who are disposed to put questions that they can, perhaps, answer them more intelligently when we reach the minor debate arising on the different sections of the bill, and more especially after reading that document. The questions which the President propounded in the document referred to were directed from the Executive Mansion, under date of August 6, 1873, and are as follows:

"1. The law-making power having declared that 'the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensable to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness,' (15 Statutes at Large, 223,) should the Executive refuse to give effect to an act of expatriation of a citizen of the United States?

"2. May a formal renunciation of United States citizenship and a voluntary submission to the sovereignty of another power be regarded otherwise than as an act of expatriation?

"3. Can an election of expatriation be shown or presumed by an acquisition of domicile in another country, with an avowed purpose not to return?

"4. Ought the Government to hold itself bound to extend its protection, and consequently exert its military and naval power for such protection, in favor of persons who have left its territories and who reside abroad, without an apparent intent to return to them, and who do not contribute to its support?

"5. What should constitute evidence of the absence of an intent to return in such cases?

"6. When a naturalized citizen of the United States returns to his native country and resides there for a series of years, with no apparent purpose of returning, shall he be deemed to have expatriated himself, where the case is not regulated by treaty?

"7. Are the children born abroad of a person who has been a citizen of the United States, but who has become a subject or citizen of another power, or who has expatriated himself, citizens of the United States, entitled to its protection?

"8. Can a person who has formally renounced his allegiance to the United States and assumed the obligations of a citizen or subject of another power become again a citizen of the United States in any other way than in the manner provided by general laws?"

If, Mr. Speaker, I should proceed to answer these queries in detail, as the Cabinet did, I would only repeat what is in type; and perhaps I can best obtain their best meaning, and give an added meaning to them, by pursuing my own method of discussion. I do not deny that these questions have been touched with great, though partial, skill by the gentlemen of the Cabinet.

* * * * * * *

One thing is apparent in this discussion. It is this: that the common-law right, the old feudal idea, that a man who is "racy of the soil" is always a citizen, has become more or less obsolete. This is manifest by the progress of civilization and international law, as well as by the laws of all countries, including our own. So that now the question is not between a man who was born here and one who is naturalized here, for they are exactly in the same condition, and so far as our Government and its faith are concerned we are committed to the doctrine that a naturalized citizen is in the same troth and plight as one born here. We must love and comfort him the same, at home or abroad. His children are our children; his folk and kin are our folk and kin. Like Ruth, we will follow him irrespective of previous or other conditions. His citizenship is as immutable as if he had been born here for all purposes. When, when, when will the people who remember Columbus, Kosciusko, DeKalb, La Fayette, the gallant Germans and the gallant Irishmen, the McMahons and the O'Donnells, the men who make, fight, and create peoples; when will they remember that they are scions of a stock which emigrates, populates, fights, civilizes, and progresses?

* * * * * * *

I have the responses of gentlemen connected with the German public press. I cannot send them to the Clerk's desk to be read, for they are in the tough Teutonic syllables, which Milton said never echoed the doctrines of slavery. They are not understood in this Congress. The honorable Senator, Mr. Schurz, has given me their inner meaning. I accept his statement as that of an honest man. These extracts are from the Staats-Zeitung of New York of April 4, 1874, and also from a German paper of the same title and date in Chicago, and from the German paper of Philadelphia of April 6, 1874. They speak as if they were jealous and fearful of this and similar bills; not because the German people would disfavor expatriation, but because such bills seek rather to deter immigration and to make our citizenship subject to odious and onerous restrictions; subject to a net-work of police.

* * * * * * *

Although it may be true, as my honorable friend [Mr. E. R. Hoar] says, that embarrassments have arisen in our Department of State and to our Government in being called upon to protect men who have become citizens here and have afterward gone to their native land to make difficulties, yet I do submit that we might well have these alleged embarrassments, and more of them, rather than discourage immigration or throw a cloud over American citizenship.

What is such citizenship? To men and women, ay, to women and children, to persons of both sexes, it is their all. Many of them have this and nothing more when they go abroad. Should we not guard it carefully? Should we raise any presumption that, because they may have remained abroad for one or two or more years, they do not therefore intend to return? Should we be overprompt to raise the presumption that they have not the animus revertendi? Should we not be careful about the precise evidence required to indicate that intent?

I might go on, sir, for some time to show the House, in a general way, that the whole drift of this bill is at variance with the fundamental ideas of our republicanism as illustrated by those attractive forces which have brought men of all nations here to commingle with us in their and our varied independencies and industries. The old idea under the feudal system was glebæ ascriptus. The idea was that a man was bound to the soil. It was a system that resembled the villanage in England. A man owed personal service to the lord of the soil, the same as his master owed it to the king; and it was born with the child and only ended in the grave. It was from this relation of lord and vassal, or rather of master and servant, that the system of passports took its origin. That system is alien to our federal system of States, interdependent, with perfect comity among each and all.

No distinction was then made between native-born and naturalized citizens. Nor is an individual of the latter class excepted who may return to the country of his birth. The rights of each are broadly defined as being identically the same. The duty of the President is made the same as to them. Now, sir, compare with this the following provision taken from the second section of the substitute under consideration:

"Thirdly, the following persons shall be regarded as not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; fourthly, naturalized citizens of the United States who may by the terms of any treaty be regarded as having resumed their original nationality, or who, on returning to their native country, may be convicted of offenses against the laws of that country committed prior to their arrival in the United States; fifthly, a naturalized citizen of the United States becoming domiciled in the country of his or her nativity, unless when otherwise regulated by treaty."

What is the meaning of that? It is an offense in Germany for a man to desert from the military service. Such a horrible crime is, of course, committed before he leaves Germany. The man may have become a citizen of this country. He renounces and abjures all allegiance, &c.; when he goes back he becomes denationalized by the provisions of this bill, if I understand it rightly. If so, this bill is a gross and glaring outrage. In some parts of Germany, I believe, citizens are sometimes regarded as having committed an offense if they emigrate.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Yes; the very act of emigration is a crime.

Mr. COX. The very act of emigration, as my friend well says, is an offense by law. When they return to their native country they lose all the benefits of naturalization because of that very offense. And this in this nineteenth century! And this when Germany dominates Europe!

* * * * * * *

Is not the inference pardonable that the sole purpose of this bill is to curtail the rights of naturalized citizens tarrying abroad? Can such an inference be hid by the addition of a few general clauses? What need is there for such legislation?

* * * * * * *

Judge Black, than whom no better interpreter of international law ever acted as Attorney-General of the United States, expressed himself in an official opinion with equal clearness in defining the meaning of naturalization. "In its popular etymological and legal sense," he wrote, "it (naturalization) signifies the act of adopting a foreigner and clothing him with all the privileges of a native citizen or subject." And this very same construction was adopted by a royal commission in England, which had for its chief the Earl of Clarendon, and among its members such eminent authorities and writers as Sir R. J. Phillimore, Baron Bramwell, Sir John Karslake, Sir Roundell Palmer, and Mr. Vernon Harcourt, (late solicitor-general of England, and better known here as "Historicus.") This commission examined the whole subject thoroughly, and concluded to abandon the old common-law rule of perpetual allegiance. It adopted the American doctrine as eminently in accordance with the enlarged freedom of the age, and applicable also to Great Britain hereafter. Their recommendation was subsequently approved and confirmed by Parliament in the passage of the naturalization act of 1870, the sixth section of which reads:

"Any British subject who has at any time before, or may at any time after the passing of this act, when in any foreign state and not under any disability, voluntarily become naturalized in such state, shall from and after the time of his so having become naturalized in such foreign state be deemed to have ceased to be a British subject and be regarded as an alien."

Mr. Speaker, you will observe from this that it is precisely the ground taken by Secretary Cass and Attorney-General Black, to wit, that naturalization invests the foreigner with complete citizenship the same as birth, and that as to all other countries, even that of his nativity. Can the United States afford to be less liberal than Great Britain, can we be less liberal than Great Britain, which regards a British subject naturalized here as an alien thereafter within its territories? Why should Congress, then, make a distinction between these two classes of citizens as if the rights of the one were not the same but less than those of the other? This is done most unequivocally by the language of the fifth clause of the third subdivision of section two of the substitute I have quoted, that a naturalized citizen becoming domiciled in the country of his nativity—which by section 3 means a continuous residence of two years—shall cease to be under the protection of the United States, be arbitrarily deprived of his rights acquired by naturalization, and abandoned to the very power all allegiance to which he had under oath renounced in accordance with the laws of the United States.

No native citizen can possibly be exposed to any such difficulties, doubts, and entanglements; although under the bill now pending even he may often be unreasonably vexed and harassed. Why not place or rather leave the naturalized citizen upon the same footing as originally intended, as lucidly expressed by Cass and Black, tardily adopted by England, and authoritatively confirmed by act of Congress in 1868? Why change it now in 1874? Has any new light dawned upon our Federal Legislature—the great Sanhedrim of thirty-seven States—that makes it desirable to enter now upon such a retrograde movement? I believe I can discern far across the Atlantic the true source of this intended reactionary legislation.

The Bancroft treaty with the North German Confederation, concluded in 1868, does now apply to all the states comprised within the limits of the newly-constituted German Empire, including Alsace and the annexed portion of Lorraine. A native of any part of that country, being naturalized here, is by the terms of that treaty reincorporated in among the subjects of the emperor after a residence anywhere in Germany, though hundreds of miles away from the place of his birth, for even a day over two years. He may be a native of Bavaria; and if, after his naturalization in the United States, he enters into business relations at Hamburg or Bremen, a residence of two years in either of these cities, far remote from the country of his nativity, or elsewhere within the empire, makes him a subject of the emperor, of whom he never was a subject before, and divests him of the character of an American citizen without his consent, and possibly against his will. And it need occasion no surprise were it to appear that this very bill has been suggested in the interest of that policy which seeks by every means to render emigration from Germany to the United States, and the naturalization of native Germans as American citizens, less desirable and popular in the country under its sway.

That Bancroft treaty might be termed a convention to impede German immigration to this country, and the bill before the House, begotten in the spirit of that and other similar treaties, could appropriately be entitled "An act to discourage immigration to the United States." For myself, and representing a hundred thousand Germans, I do desire to bring the kith and kin—all the good folk of Germany to this land, to meet and kiss their kith and kin here. Our race so needs replenishing; and are not the Germans so thrifty, good, and prolific? Who could help us better?

Congress should adhere to the doctrine which prevailed before the advent of the impolitic and injudicious Bancroft treaty, after which all the subsequent treaties on the subject seem to be modeled. Admitting, as it is but just to admit, that every man has a natural right to expatriate himself, it must be borne in mind that, in the terse language of Judge J. S. Black, "expatriation" includes not only emigration out of one's country, but naturalization in the country adopted as a future residence. Hence I incline to a principle totally at variance with this bill, and I consider it a principle distinctly and truly American that no mere residence abroad, however protracted and wherever it may be, can divest one of the rights and correlative duties of American citizenship or relieve our Government of its obligation to protect the citizen except by his own free will expressed by becoming fully naturalized.

Mr. ROBESON. The debate upon this bill has taken a range somewhat wider than was anticipated when we entered upon it, and therefore I have been willing, so far as I control it, to be liberal in dispensing time to the representatives of all opinions.

In this discussion the Irish question seems to have come to the surface, and the position has been gravely advanced by gentlemen on the other side of the House, with violent assumption and loud declamation, that the interests of freedom in thought and action are represented by only struggling Irishmen, and that the great principles of freedom have found their consistent and effective defenders in the Democratic party.

Mr. Chairman, it has been the custom of impostors, since the world began, to declare some great and unquestioned principle, and under its cover to seek belief for the falsities they would propagate. Thus it was that Mahomet proclaimed the great principle of the universe in the existence of one only true God; but added to it the falsehood that Mahomet was his prophet. And thus it is that the ad captandum orators and speechmakers of the other side of this House endeavor to catch the ear of the country, by loudly proclaiming the great and unquestioned principle of freedom, progress, and the rights of man, to the end that they may induce belief to the monstrous assumption that the modern Democracy of this country have been or are its champions and defenders. The member from New York told us that it was the treaty of Ghent that practically established the principle of free citizenship. The assumption admits of grave question; but admitting its truth, who made the treaty of Ghent? Who was Jonathan Russell? Who was John Quincy Adams? Who were James Bayard and Henry Clay?

Mr. McLANE. They were Democrats.

Mr. ROBESON. Henry Clay or John Quincy Adams a modern Democrat! God save the mark! The gentleman knows and I know what they were, and that neither they, nor Mr. Russell nor Mr. Bayard, had any association, either in principles or action, with the ideas or the conduct of the Democratic party, and, least of all, with that party which now calls itself Democratic.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from New Jersey knows that John Quincy Adams was a Democrat or a Republican, as that party was then called, and so was Mr. Clay.

Mr. ROBESON. Did John Quincy Adams represent modern Democracy when day after day on this floor he attempted to assert the right of petition in behalf of the freedom of labor and was constantly and violently denied that right by the modern Democracy? Sir, he lived the staunchest opponent of that miscalled party, and died on this floor the bravest denouncer of its character and conduct.

Mr. McLANE. He was the candidate of the Republican or Democratic party in 1824, that is, he was voted for in their caucus and supported by the masses of that party.

Mr. SPARKS. And all his descendants are Democrats to this day.

Mr. ROBESON. And Henry Clay is also claimed as a Democrat. Then what was James K. Polk when Henry Clay was candidate of the old Whig party and Mr. Polk of the Democratic party? To claim Mr. Clay is an assumption of the same kind, and not more violent than these other pretenses. They will be claiming Grant as a Democrat next.

Mr. McLANE. Yes, yes.

Mr. ROBESON. And yet he fought the principles of the modern Democracy, and the men who maintained them, on a hundred fields made glorious with the blood of our best and bravest.

Mr. HAZELTON. They will be claiming you before you know it.

Mr. ROBESON. Of course, if it will serve their purpose. For I have done more in the past for the cause of true democracy than any of them, and am ready now to go as far as the boldest of them dare go to maintain and carry out free principles. Now, Mr. Chairman, I declare that it is the right and duty of this Government to see to it, that our citizens, native or naturalized, are protected in every right which belongs to them in foreign countries; that this right and duty extends, not only to our citizens, but to all others who have acquired a domicile here and settled themselves under the protection of our laws. I admit that the right of civilized trial and the right of speedy trial are of those great rights which were secured on the field of Runnymede and were crystallized into substantial form among the principles of Magna Charta.

The habeas corpus is the great safeguard of these rights wherever the forms of English law are recognized and pursued; and I do not hesitate to say, that in every case where the American citizen or the American domiciled resident is charged with crime, it is the duty of our Government to see that speedy trial is not denied to him, wherever he is, in whatever country, under whatever government; and to see to it also, that it is not denied by any specious form of process for delay; that the rights, secured to him by the great writ of freedom, under our law, are not denied to him wherever organized civil government exists. But the measure of the right which remains to the man, who has forsaken his residence in this country, voluntarily resigning the guarantees of our laws and the protection of our flag, and has adopted a domicile in another country, has trusted himself to the safeguards of other laws and relied on the protection which another government gives to its citizens, presents a question far more difficult; yet even there I am ready to go as far as the farthest, and insist that in the cause of humanity, in the cause of progressive human freedom, this much of the principles embodied in that code of organized liberty which we call the "common law" shall still apply to him wherever he is. International law, like the common law, is a progressive science, and ought to and does, adapt itself to the changing conditions of men and the changing relations of nations. Its flexible but consistent code must expand to the enlarging measure of human freedom, and the spirit of advancing civilization ought to demand and secure, as one of its inherent guarantees, for every man wherever he is, with whatever he is charged, a speedy trial, a true deliverance, and a civilized punishment. This much is demanded by the spirit of the age, and for its accomplishment I will unite with any party and strike hands with any honest man.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from New Jersey was a member of Grant's Cabinet, and perhaps he will remember what was embodied in the message as to expatriation. He will perhaps remember the bill of Judge Ebenezer R. Hoar came from that Cabinet. Does he so remember?

Mr. ROBESON. I do not so remember. But I do remember that this treaty of 1870, and all those treaties which organized into the forms of international law the rights of foreign-born citizens, here and elsewhere, to the protection of our country's power, did originate in the Cabinet of General Grant, of which I was an humble member, and were placed upon the treaty-book under his auspices and with a Republican Senate of nearly two-thirds majority. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Does not the gentleman know——

Mr. ROBESON. I will read from that treaty.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman has not answered my question yet.

Mr. ROBESON. I said that I did not know that Judge Hoar's bill, which was not passed, though Congress was Republican at the time, originated in any movement in that Cabinet.

Mr. COX, of New York. Do you approve his bill?

Mr. ROBESON. I have no time now to answer hypothetical questions, nor to submit myself to the gentleman's political catechism. I do not now even recall the special provisions of that bill, but I have just declared my views broadly and freely. The gentleman can find his answer there.

Mr. COX, of New York. Do you approve the Bancroft treaty?

Mr. ROBESON. The Bancroft treaty, good or bad, is not to be charged to us. Mr. Bancroft was born and has lived and is now a Democrat of the old school. He was appointed minister to England by President Polk; he was appointed minister to Berlin by Andrew Johnson. He represented then, and represents now, in his principles and in his writings, the very ideas of modern Democracy which the gentleman himself professes.

Mr. COX, of New York. Do you approve of his treaty? That is the point.

Mr. HAZELTON, (in his seat.) Never mind about that.

Mr. COX, of New York. But I do mind.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let him have the floor.

Mr. COX, of New York, (to Mr. HAZELTON.) I am not talking to you. I got the privilege of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HAZELTON, (to Mr. ROBESON.) Did you yield?

Mr. ROBESON. I always yield to a question from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not think it is very polite for any gentleman to sit in his seat and instruct the gentleman from New Jersey as to his courtesy.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am not instructing him; he does not need any instructions. You have no right to talk while he is talking.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have a right to ask a question of my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, when he yields, without your consent.

Mr. ROBESON. If my friend will permit me, I have now answered——

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not understand that the gentleman has answered my question.

Mr. ROBESON. I did not take the floor to answer all conceivable questions about my own belief, or about the laws and treaties of this country. I simply took the floor to declare broadly my own principles and those of my party, and in them the gentleman will find his answer.

But, to resume, Mr. Chairman, the Irish cause, like many another good cause, has lost much by the weakness of its leaders and the inconsistency of its advocates. Who fails to see the folly of constantly making large demands upon diplomacy and power, and with the next breath, without reason and without information, declaiming loudly against delay, because time and distance are not both annihilated to meet their impatience? "I know," said a philosophic statesman, "that a generous and Utopian disposition would have all things changed and all the various elements let loose in the world without control. But a real statesman and a true politician endeavors to deal as best he may with circumstances as he finds them."

No, sir; a disposition to preserve and an ability to improve, these make a statesman; all else is vulgar in conception and perilous in action. I say that the interests of freedom and of free labor, Irish, or German, or American, must look for their protection in the future, as they have in the past, to the Republican party; to that party, and to that party only, which cherishes in its principles and illustrates by its actions a deep and unselfish sympathy with man, [applause;] which has, and exhibits, an abiding faith in the truth of the great principles of equity and justice and a deep conviction of their power and efficacy when applied not only to the conduct of men, but to the direction of political affairs—not to that party which in the years of its dominion and of its insolent revolt, held labor in chains and degraded it by association with slavery; but to that party which has sanctified it with the blood of martyrs, inspired it with ambition, enriched it with power, and ennobled it by the willing industry of free men.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You have not read from the treaty yet.

Mr. ROBESON. I was, indeed, about to read from the treaty, but my friend from New York [Mr. COX] has led me along the seductive ways of general debate——

Mr. COX, of New York. You have not answered my question yet.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman will have had all his questions answered if he has listened. I would now like to read one clause from the treaty of 1870; this is the clause:

British subjects who have become or shall become, and are naturalized according to the laws within the United States of America as citizens thereof, shall, subject to the provisions of article 2, be held by Great Britain to be in all respects and for all purposes citizens of the United States, and shall be treated as such by Great Britain.

Who wrote that chapter of liberty on the statute-book? It was the Republican party, which we represent to-day, though we were told the other day, and am reminded to-day, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] did it. He had nothing more to do with it than any other man who shouted for freedom while he voted for slavery. But let that pass, for I desire now to come to the discussion of the bill that is directly before us. The only material changes in principle made by the bill I will state generally without detaining the committee.

We recognize that our civilization, that the growth of our greatness, is founded on labor and its results developed into trade and commerce—that it does not rest on the old organizations of society nor conventions and forms of other days. We have endeavored to bring diplomatic representation abroad in some degree, as far as we thought it safe to venture now, into harmony with our consular system there. We have recognized that the only practical business which our diplomatists have abroad, which supports the interests and accords with the sympathies of our people, arises out of our commercial relations.

We have therefore sought to build up our consular system by associating it with our diplomatic system. We have provided that the consuls-general at certain important points shall be so attached to our legations that they shall be respectable in the eyes of the community in which they live; that they shall not be counted out because their duties pertain to trade and commerce, but that they shall have the status and the privileges of gentlemen, at least to the same extent that these are accorded to the secretaries and attachés of the legation. That they shall have the right of presenting their business directly, whenever it is necessary, through the legation to which they are attached, to the government to which that legation is accredited.

All the real business of ministers in these times grows out of the duties and relations of our consular service. The two classes of officers are branches of the same system; they belong to the same great organization; and they should be brought together to act in harmony and not dissevered, so that instead of having a correspondence between our consul-general and our minister, then through our minister with a foreign government, then from the foreign government back to our minister, then back from our minister to our State Department, then from our State Department to our consul, they should be able to communicate freely and act together. Our advance here is only a small step, but we must step cautiously at first. It tends at least to bring these two systems into better accord, at least to put them under one head, to have them transact their business under one roof, to maintain but one organization, to have one policy, one measure of efficiency, with the hope that both offices will be raised to a higher standard and both services improved, that the country may have at the same time better conducted service and better paid officers, at a less expense, to the mutual advantage of the Government and of its servants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time limited for general debate has expired. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $70,000.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the clause just read, for the purpose of replying to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON;] I shall do so with perfect respect for him and for his magnificent opinions, generalizations, and rhetoric. The gentleman did not answer the question which I proposed. Although he made a very proper eulogy of Mr. Bancroft, he failed to defend that treaty. Although the gentleman was a member of General Grant's Cabinet, and although he remembers that this matter of expatriation came up in that Cabinet, and although he must have known at the time (though he may have since forgotten it) that Judge Hoar was representing General Grant in that bill, he does not now dare to defend the provisions of the Bancroft treaty. The great body of German people, and the intelligent men on the other side of the House representing German constituencies who have been instructed by them, must favor giving the notice required by that treaty for its abrogation. It requires a notice of one year. That has never yet been done, although the treaty is as obsolete in this locomotive and emigrating age as the feudel system.

What was the effect of that treaty? It gave away the rights of our naturalized citizens; it gave away their rights without consulting them and without their voluntary consent. One clause of the bill referred to provides that a citizen of the United States, even one born here, who happened to be in Germany, and remained there over two years without reporting to a consul, was to be deprived, against his own consent, of his citizenship among us. This was the way that side attempted to denationalize and expatriate our unwilling citizens. The Republican side of the House tried in that Congress, as I shall show, to crystallize that monstrous anomaly into legislation, even while our German fellow-citizens were harassed all through Fatherland by reclamations of army service and government obligations. They were thrust into the army and held in subjection to the laws of Germany, though they may never have been expatriated, and though they may have been born here. Look at the debates, and you will see the instances cited. Ah! how the cunning gentleman from New Jersey avoided answering my question.

What did that Republican treaty and law do? I will give it to you in a very few words. The effect of the Bancroft treaty was that a native of any part of Germany, though naturalized here, was by the terms of that treaty incorporated among the subjects of the emperor after residence for a day over two years anywhere in Germany. He might be a native of Bavaria or a native of this country, or if born abroad he might after his naturalization in the United States have entered into business relations at Bremen or Hamburg or Frankfort and resided there for two years far remote from the country of his nativity, and even though he went there simply as a student or in the pursuit of health, yet by the terms of that treaty he was made a subject of the emperor of whom he was never a subject before. The gentleman from New Jersey, therefore, was singularly adroit in not answering this question that comes home to our German fellow-citizens. Yet he would, or those on his side would, boast of their loyalty to the adopted citizen. Why, England did better by us in her treaty than Germany as to expatriation, better by her Parliament in the law it made. But because England did adopt that mutual principle we had so long contended for we have a right to demand its enforcement in behalf of citizens here naturalized who were born in Ireland under the English flag. The relations we bear to England by treaty are fair, her conduct otherwise. Our treaty with Germany was not mutual or fair, but her conduct in releasing our citizens was much better than her treaty.

As to the matter of the sympathy of the gentleman from New Jersey with the Irish-born citizens, let their land leagues who have denounced him recently speak for themselves; I do not speak for them. They know their friends. The impression made throughout the country by the gentleman's relation to these debates is exactly as I have stated. The old incarnate federal deviltry and hatred of foreigners of the time of John Adams, illustrated in the alien laws, survives. From that time every party opposed to the Democratic party in this country has been federal in its jealousy, opposition, and persecution of foreign-born citizens. Such parties have shown a vindictive disposition to restrict the right of naturalization fully accorded by the Constitution and the laws. Our records are full of these proscriptive policies of our antagonists. They took shape in attempts to take from State tribunals the right to naturalize, to restrain suffrage, to prolong the time of probation of the immigrant and modes of religious bigotry and persecution.

I say therefore, and I speak it boldly as one familiar with federal and democratic history, that when any man on the other side impeaches this side of the House as being in any way recreant in devotion to the naturalized citizen in all the length and breadth of his rights and privileges, or when any member thus derogates from our well-earned fame and arrogates to himself and his party any such special devotion, he falsifies history. He will be convicted for it before the intelligent people of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I did not wish to extend this debate into the five-minute discussion. I gave up freely to others the hour to which I was entitled, and therefore had no chance for reply; but having been associated with this legislation as to German and Irish adopted citizens, having defeated the Republican attempt to denationalize our German fellow-citizens abroad, having stood by the Irishmen here as a faithful representative, having by my exertions almost alone—not in the Thirty-ninth or Fortieth Congress, for I was not here then—but having, with the aid of a few good men on the other side of the House, succeeded in having the prison doors opened for our citizens in Ireland who had fought under our flag, I could not say less, and I might say more.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, I would only again remind my friend, and if need be, the country, that the rights of no people are to be maintained or advanced by mere declamation upon the floor of Congress. They have rights; but if they are to be enforced they must first be organized in the forms of law, so that they can be enforced by organized executive action. I say again that the treaty of Ghent was made by men who did not represent the principles and never consented to, assisted in, or were associated with the party of modern Democracy. I say that from that time to 1870, during the forty or more years the Democratic party held sway here in Washington at both ends of the Capitol, those principles were never embodied either in legislation on the statute-book, or in ordinances in the form of treaties, and that it remained for the Republican administration of General Grant to organize them, and place them forever on the statute-book as authorized, authoritative, and effective expression of those great principles of freedom and the rights of man on which the Republican party is founded.

I need not remind the country that the great battles of civilization are not achieved by the small boys who put feathers in their caps and march ahead of the music, or by the half-hearted or lukewarm, who cry out but do not follow, but by the great column of stalwart soldiers, who march steadily forward, and capture success by the vigor of their attack, or overwhelm and trample down opposition by their steady and determined advance. It matters little what leagues or associations may say. The intelligence of the people will not be deceived. The country will understand the force of the remark made by Mr. Burke, on an occasion and in regard to a pretense not dissimilar to the present. "Gentlemen," said he, "must not suppose that the grasshopper that chirps upon the bough is the only occupant of the field where a thousand noble cattle chew the cud and are silent." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. I renew it. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from New Jersey, as to whether it was the stalwart column of three hundred and six he referred to as accomplishing such wonders in all time to come? [Laughter.]

[Cries of "Read."]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amendment is to strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move, in line 13, after "Brazil," to insert the words "and Paraguay," and I will explain briefly the necessity for that amendment. We have a chargé d'affaires at Paraguay and Uruguay at a salary of $5,000. We have attached Uruguay to the Argentine Republic and Paraguay to Brazil. I desire to read a single paragraph in regard to Uruguay, that the committee may judge of its importance and say whether our minister to Brazil cannot discharge our diplomatic duties with that government:

Uruguay, a republic of South America—area, 70,000 square miles; population, 1877, 440,000, (estimated)—is governed by a president, a ministry of four cabinet officers, and a legislature composed of thirteen senators and forty representatives. The revenue in 1878 was $10,406,840, three-fourths of which was from customs duties; the expenditures, $10,090,260, nearly one-half of which was for the army and navy. The public debt in 1877 was $47,611,486. Paper money to the amount of $6,000,000 was no longer current in commerce, though received by the government. Payment of interest on the debt has been lately resumed.

The imports in 1877 were $14,200,000, and the exports $17,492,159 in 1879.

The army consists of 2,261 men; 225 miles of railway are in operation, and 730 miles of telegraph. There are 144 post-offices. Letters mailed in 1877, 1,042,876. Capital, Montevideo; population, 1877, 91,167. About half the property of the republic belongs to foreigners, principally Spaniards, Italians, and Brazilians.

That is in regard to Uruguay. I desire now to read a word in regard to Paraguay showing why it is united with Brazil. We unite Paraguay with Brazil in diplomatic relations because it virtually belongs to that country. It is under the same domination.

Paragnay, an inland republic of South America—area 57,303 square miles, population in 1876, 293,884—is a country without cities, and almost without civilization. The language spoken is chiefly that of the Indians mixed with a little Spanish. The country achieved independence in 1811, and was ruled by the dictator, Dr. Francia, for twenty-nine years, during which no foreigners were allowed to enter or leave Paraguay. Since 1870 the government, though nominally republican, has been under the control of Brazil. The country is hopelesaly insolvent, owing $236,000,000 to Brazil and the other allies as a legacy of the war, $9,000,000 to Great Britain, and $2,100,000 domestic debt, amounting altogether to more than the total value of the country, real and personal. Revenue in 1876, $295,567; expenses $228,630, besides interest and army. The imports in 1876, $657,466, and the exports $392,887. The army embraces 2,000 men, mostly now discharged to relieve the treasury of expense. The only railway in Paraguay is one of forty-five miles, and the only telegraph is of the same length.

We think under the circumstances whatever diplomatic relations we have with that country can be discharged by our minister to Brazil.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, in the remarks I shall submit relating to the bill pending before the committee I shall make no reference to party politics, and I hope I shall not be ruled out of order on that account. [Laughter.]

In the consideration of the bill before the House I object to the lines in parenthesis on page 4, lines 78 and 79, because in addition to the implication that the duties of the consul-general are very light, or else that the secretary of legation has nothing to do, (an implication that is more than sustained by a remark from the gentleman from New Jersey as to another officer referred to in the bill,) it involves, as I regard it, a damage to the consular service, in a great capital like Vienna, if not a general damage. I am aware that the committee did not so intend it, and that it is, on the contrary, the desire of the committee to elevate the service at all points; and their idea is that to make a consul-general a secretary of legation is to elevate him in position. I shall not have time here to discuss the eligibility of the two positions with respect to each other. If there is need of a consul-general at Vienna I would have him maintained as such. If there is no need of one, or of but such fractional part of a man's time as a secretary of legation might have left, then I would place an officer there of lower consular rank and provide for him accordingly. If there is no more need of a secretary of legation at Vienna than for such portion of time as a consul-general may have left after the discharge of his consular duties, then the need of a secretary of legation can be scarcely appreciable. The consul-general is at the head of his department of service. If he were in the line of promotion, the next advance would as a rule carry him into the diplomatic service as a minister or chargé d'affaires.

A member of this House within the last two or three years, who had previously had experience in the consular service, was tendered by the President then in office the consul-generalship at Vienna. Had he been persuaded against his judgment to accept the duty, and had found himself soon after called upon by a law of Congress such as now pending in this bill to report himself to the minister either as coachman or clerk, or secretary to the legation, he would not have regarded it as a promotion.

Men accept consul-generalships as eligible who would not accept secretaryships of legation; and the reverse of this may be also true, in some cases. I apprehend that the consuls-general at Berlin, London, or Paris would not be pleased to have their offices merged in those of the secretaries of legations.

The consular service is a useful, hard-working, and honorable service. Its efficiency has been greatly augmented within the last twenty years. Immediately prior to that time its expenses in excess of fees were about $750,000 per year, and the whole amount was paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Now its expenses are about $1,200,000, which is wholly paid from the fees collected by consuls, leaving a surplus which has sometimes reached $140,000 in a year. The improved service, beside paying its way in this manner, has been declared by men of good judgment, in debate in both Houses of Congress, by its close attention to the verification of invoices, for which these fees are mainly collected, to afford protection to the revenues of the country in rescuing from fraud $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 per annum.

Prior to 1862 very few invoices of merchandise exported from foreign countries to the United States were ever subjected to consular supervision. A series of letters at that time, addressed to the various collectors of customs in all the principal cities of the United States by a consul then in service, developed the fact that not one invoice in three hundred had on it the consular verification, and it was also disclosed that the invoices were not always the real evidence, or real instrument, on which was transacted the purchase and sale of the property. There was a general law requiring the verification of invoices, and a consular fee collected for it, I think, of the same amount as that now collected for invoices in triplicate; but the law was subject to several exceptions, as, for instance, if the goods were sent out to this country to be sold on commission, or if they were shipped by a manufacturer to be sold for his account, or if they were not dutiable goods, then the consular certificate was not required, and under these exceptions the majority of foreign merchants managed to avoid the consular office entirely.

In 1862 a law was passed making it incumbent upon shippers to have attached to all invoices, without any exception, the consular verification, and that in the consul's judgment the prices were honest and fair; this was supplemented by the oath of the shipper that the invoice presented was the actual instrument of sale, according to the market value of the article. This placed the seller on record under oath against himself in case a fraud was afterward disclosed in regard to that transaction. And this it is that has been, I have no doubt rightfully, asserted to be worth from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 per annum to the revenue. This, too, it is that has made the consular service self-sustaining. In one office of which I had knowledge, where the annual fees had never exceeded $800, they sprung up the first year to $25,000 and more, which the officer paid into the Treasury of the United States.

I note fully all that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has to say of what he supposed to be the fallacy of this idea of "self-sustaining," and I credit him with disclosing a carefully acquired knowledge of consular administration, which would almost suggest the idea that he had been himself in the consular service, however equivocal he may consider the compliment, in the light of what I shall presently have to say concerning some remarks that fell from the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE.]

It is quite true that the consular system is self-sustaining by a form of taxation, but it is self-sustaining somewhat in the same way that a mill is self-sustaining that takes toll for grinding the corn that comes to it, rather than by levying a tax upon the community by which it is supported.

The consular system is supported by those who go to the consular offices for consular services. It presses upon the sailor, feelingly referred to by the gentleman from New York, but very slightly. The sailor highly prizes the consul; always calls him council, and uniformly applies to him for advice when he is in trouble in a foreign port, a condition for which he has a proclivity almost controlling. The consular service is no disadvantage to him, and this very bill provides the sum of $70,500 to be expended for his relief in foreign countries. Nor does the tax fall on shipping with any appreciable force. The bulk of it is collected on the invoices of merchandise, on which it does not amount to the one-hundredth part of 1 per cent. in the average.

The objection suggested that the exposure of invoices to the keeping of the consul had sometimes caused merchants to fear the disclosure of their secrets of trade, has probably led to such results in but very few instances. I have never heard of one. Doubtless there have been such breaches of confidence, but in very rare cases. Merchants have to expose their business to telegraph operators, but violations of trust are not frequent.

The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE,] usually so considerate, and never, I am sure, intentionally unkind, has without his habitual reflection permitted himself to animadvert upon the personnel of the consular and diplomatic service. I am confident that his remarks cannot commend themselves to his more deliberate consideration.

When he proceeded to characterize the foreign service as composed, or largely composed, of men who are so worthless at home as to be called poor devils, and so utterly without repute that it would be disgraceful to employ them at home in a service which he pauses to characterize as debased and degraded, and then waits to admire the fitness of those words, I cannot think that with deliberate candor he applied his judgment to his expressions.

There is an oriental proverb something like this: "There are three things which in going make no return—the sped arrow, the spoken word, and the lost opportunity." The gentleman from Maryland's words, like sped arrows, wounding arrows, have sped beyond recall. They are these:

> No, Mr. Chairman, we might as well look this subject in the face fairly. This foreign service of ours is more—well, the word comes, and the word fits—more debased and more degraded than our own home service, and that is saying much. It has become the rule that a poor devil who is not able to pension himself on the home department begs a foreign consulship. If he is without repute, and so much without repute that he would discredit a department of the Government at home, then he gets an appointment to represent us at a foreign government.

The words quoted are now spread upon the public journals, and preserved in the archives of the nation. It remains only to us to place beside them sentiments of contrary import, in the hope that they may more extensively command the assent of our countrymen.

The gentleman upon whose remarks I am commenting appeared, after the utterance of the words quoted, to remember the exceptions usually imposed upon gentlemen as to present company, and observing near him the gentleman from Iowa, lately returned from foreign service at Vienna, at once generously excepted him from the sweeping tenor of his statement, and thus emphasized his general rule. There were other members present who had been in foreign service, including the gentleman himself, and one from Indiana, and still others who were not indulged to share with the gentleman from Iowa in this, in the parlance of railway traffic, "discriminating rate."

But I desire, Mr. Chairman, to interpose my objections also to the gentleman's estimate of the home service of the United States. Are gentlemen on this floor willing to spread on the records without dissent the statement that the foreign and home service of the United States are correctly described as only differing from each other in disgrace by the single degree of difference noted between degradation and debasement, each service conducted by poor devils, the foreign being just perceptibly below the domestic?

Some engaged in the consular and diplomatic service were members of Congress before they went abroad. Some became members of Congress after their return from foreign service, and some were members of Congress both before and after service in consular or diplomatic character. I use the word character purposely, because as the character, on the theory of the gentleman from Maryland, is but a comparison of degrees of degradation between the home and foreign services, so it would seem that when the two services are thus interwoven and entered into alternatively by the same persons that the uniformity of adverse qualification designated by the gentleman must be maintained with comparative ease by those who, in exemplary worthlessness, have the gift of continuance.

But, Mr. Chairman, quite enough of this. We maintain that the service is not debased and degraded. The whole public business of the Government of the United States is committed to its home service and its foreign service. The conduct of the business is more successful than the conduct of any national business since the world was made; and just in proportion to that average success is the average merit of those to whom the affairs of the nation have been intrusted. The consuls, as a class, are exemplary in all their duties. From their industrious and painstaking reports there is added month by month to the literature of commerce contributions of great value to the merchants, manufacturers, and agriculturists of our country. These consular officers are distributed all over the earth; the majority of them so poorly paid that they are always subject to discomfort and very often to mortification. As the representatives of a great and wealthy people they are in numerous instances tendered attentions and hospitalities which they cannot accept, because they cannot reciprocate on account of the poverty of their reward. Meantime, under their instructions, the myriad-handed mechanism in our great manufacturing towns, where you feel the pulsations of machinery under your feet as you walk the streets, is sending out across all the great waters and through all the arteries and channels of trade the product of our industry, the proceeds of which return to us on each refluent wave of the swelling seas in veins of silver and of gold.

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks Mr. HORR and Mr. ROBESON successively took the floor, and yielded their time to Mr. LORD.]

Mr. ATKINS. I shall not object to the gentleman from Michigan continuing his remarks until he concludes, but I shall object hereafter to extending the time of any gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope we will now have a vote upon the pending amendment.

Mr. HORR. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Brazil," in line 13, insert the words "and Paraguay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, as follows: To Chili and Peru, at $10,000 each; to Turkey, $7,500; in all, $27,500.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19, after the word "dollars," insert the words "and the minister to Turkey shall also be accredited to Persia."

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, Persia is one of the oldest, and was, at one time, the most powerful nationality upon earth. The United States is to-day the youngest and most powerful, and between these two nationalities no diplomatic relations exist. But the necessity for such diplomatic relations arises not from any sentiment but from that duty which has been so eloquently dwelt upon on this floor, the duty of the United States Government to protect American citizens within the limits of that nationality, as within the limits of all others.

Persia has become effete, superannuated, and insignificant among the powers of the earth, because of the blighting influence of Mohammedanism. The young and vigorous Christian civilization of America has stretched out an arm to lift that nation from its moral degradation. Forty years ago an American mission, the first Christian mission in that country, was established by Americans.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have we any treaty relations with Persia?

Mr. DAWES. I am not able to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is there in existence any treaty with Persia?

Mr. DAWES. I do not know.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why should we send a minister there if we have no treaty?

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman will allow me to conclude my remarks, and not occupy my time, I will make it clear before I finish what necessity there is for establishing diplomatic relations between the two countries. That is the very point I desire to make in this connection.

This mission was established forty years ago, and to-day there are American citizens located all through Persia, laboring for the advancement of civilization and Christianity in that country. Twenty American citizens, ladies and gentlemen, are located at a point in the interior of that country at one of these missions.

These people were just outside of the city of Oroomiah. This city of Oroomiah lies near the adjoining province of Koordistan, a mountainous region controlled by a powerful sheik of the nationality of Koords, nominally a subject of Turkey, who, in the war with Russia, with his half-savage warriors, battled for the Turkish government and got back home to his mountain fastnesses with the Martini-Henry rifles in the hands of his warriors, and with the spirit of war and conquest inflamed in his soul. Suddenly the sheik came down upon Persia with an army of 20,000 men, and at once assaulted the city of Oroomiah, and surrounded the mission station from which floated the stars and stripes and the banner of England. This savage chieftain respected those emblems and protected our citizens. He showed deference to our remote but powerful nationality, of which he had heard, but of which he had little knowledge.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to say, in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, that, whether it is material or otherwise, I think we have gone quite far enough in the direction he proposes; and such a measure demands more careful consideration than can be given to it by the committee. There are objections, however, to this amendment which should not be lost sight of. In the first place we have no treaty relations—I believe none whatever—with Persia; and in addition to that Persia sends no representative to this Government. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ORTH. I renew the amendment, and yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order that no gentleman can take the floor in the committee and yield to another, for the reason, if this is admissible, a member who could secure time thus yielded to him might occupy the floor indefinitely.

Mr. DAWES. I shall occupy the floor but for a brief time. This is an important matter.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am only anxious to proceed with the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I gave notice that I should object to gentlemen yielding the floor in this manner. We never can get through the bill in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAWES] withdrew his amendment, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] renewed it, as he had a right to do, and yielded his time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ATKINS. I make the point of order that that cannot be done if any other gentleman claims the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DAWES. When this information was received by the friends of the missionaries they appealed to this Government. The Secretary of State replied that this Government had no diplomatic relations with Persia and that it was not in the power of this Government to protect American citizens there in peril, but that the kindly offices of the British Government would be invoked. They were invoked. A telegram was sent to London and the British Government telegraphed to Teheran, the capital of Persia. The Persian Government acted promptly. Couriers were sent to the seat of war and the intervention was just in time to save the missionaries, because this sheik had incited the war, as are incited most wars of the East, in the name of a religious and fanatical issue, on the part of one sect of the Mohammedan Church against another. The Persians accused the missionaries of complicity with the sheik because they were Christians, and unmolested by him, and at the very moment when the missionaries fell within the power of the Persian authorities this intervention arrived and saved them from the extremest peril. Thus, through the intervention of England, for the first time in the history of Persia, that nationality was ready and willing to protect American citizens. But shall the United States continue to invoke England for power to discharge her duty of protecting her own citizens?

It is for these reasons I have desired to bring the subject before this House. I do not care what form the legislation takes. The necessity for such direct diplomatic relations with that nationality as will assert the power and dignity, and discharge the duty of this Government for the protection of American citizens there, as well as in Ireland and elsewhere, is manifest, and I regard the duty to establish them as imperative.

Mr. ORTH. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will offer the substitute which I have sent to the desk, when the Clerk in reading reaches the bottom of the page.

The Clerk read the following:

For ministers resident at Belgium and Netherlands, Sweden and Norway and Denmark, Hawaiian Islands, Argentine Republic, and the United States of Colombia, at $7,500 each, $37,500.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 22, after the word "Republic," insert the words "and Uruguay."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now offer my amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of the bill printed on page 2 as amended, namely, the following:

"For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, and China, at $12,000 each, $84,000.

"For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, as follows: To Chili and Peru, at $10,000 each; to Turkey, $7,500; in all, $27,500.

"For ministers resident at Belgium and Netherlands, Sweden and Norway and Denmark, Hawaiian Islands, Argentine Republic and Uruguay, and the United States of Colombia, at $7,500 each, $37,500.

"For ministers resident and consuls-general at Bolivia and Venezuela, at $5,000 each, $10,000.

"For minister resident accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua, to reside at the place that the President may select in either of the states named, $10,000.

"For ministers resident and consuls-general to Liberia, Hayti, Switzerland, and Portugal, at $5,000 each, $20,000.

"For minister resident and consul-general to Roumania, Servia, and Greece, $5,500."

And insert in lieu thereof the following substitute for the various paragraphs on said page:

"For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Brazil, Mexico, Chili, Japan, China, Turkey, and the Netherlands, at $12,000 each, $84,000. And hereafter the minister accredited to Germany shall also be accredited to Austria; the minister accredited to Russia shall also be accredited to Roumania, Servia, and Greece; the minister accredited to France shall also be accredited to Spain, Italy, Switzerland, and Portugal; the minister accredited to Brazil shall also be accredited to the Argentine Republic, Uruguay, and Paraguay; the minister accredited to Mexico shall also be accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua; the minister accredited to Chili shall also be accredited to Peru, Bolivia, Venezuela, and the United States of Colombia; the minister accredited to Turkey shall also be accredited to Persia, and the minister accredited to the Netherlands shall also be accredited to Belgium, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark. The President may designate the consul or consul-general residing in any of the countries mentioned in this paragraph to act as the chargés d'affaires where their respective consulates are located, but no additional compensation shall be allowed for this service, except as herein specially provided.

"For ministers resident and consuls-general to the Hawaiian Islands, Liberia, and Hayti, at $5,000 each, $15,000."

Mr. ROBESON. Points of order on that amendment are reserved.

Mr. SPRINGER. If points of order are to be made, they might as well be made now and decided.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Does his amendment decrease expenditures?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; over $100,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does not change any law anyhow.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield the five minutes I am entitled to in support of the amendment to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE.] But if the point of order is made, let us understand what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the point of order is made.

Mr. ROBESON. Let it go.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to support the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which, as I understand it, covers substantially the ground I endeavored to occupy in the debate the day before yesterday. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois follows more closely the bill from the committee than I was myself disposed to do. I would prefer the appropriation for four principal missions, leaving the President of the United States free to exercise his constitutional power to accredit the four ministers to any country where in his best judgment he chose to send them. I did not myself feel that it was the duty of Congress to provide any special appropriation if we were to have a reorganization. But as the President has the right to send a foreign minister where he pleases with or without an appropriation, and as the proposition made by me to confine the appropriation to four principal missions has been somewhat radical, I accept cheerfully the modification suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, as I should accept very cheerfully the reform proposed by the Committee on Appropriations if I were limited to that reform in my choice.

I am not going to press, and did not mean in the remarks which I submitted the day before yesterday to press, any radical view of this question. I believe that the President could conduct the diplomatic work of this country in Europe with four ministers, as I think he could with one for Central America, one for Mexico, and two for South America. I do not at all retreat from that opinion when I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois or the modification proposed by the committee.

I desire to say only a word in reference to some remarks made by the honorable gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. LORD.] He does me some injustice when he treats the observations I made day before yesterday as so general in their character as he has chosen to represent them in his criticism.

My remark about the poor devil who took a consulate when he could not get a home office was not all intended to convey, and did not convey, the very general meaning which he has given to it. I do not qualify it at all, however, as I made it. A moment's reflection will suggest to him that it does not bear upon one set of officers or upon one administration more than upon another.

I spoke of it as a source of regret, and very general on this floor, that our home service and our foreign service should have become so inferior to what it ought to be and to what it has been. If I used the term "poor devil" I could give him abundant illustrations of its real rather than its figurative force. In fact, I forbear to give him one that rises to my lips, and that was accompanied with such results as excited the horror and the disgust of the country.

But, if I pass that and treat his criticism as serious, I could refer him to an illustration within the last week where a distinguished man sought through the action of his friends to be placed at the head of a Department of the Government, was condemned as unfit for it, and in the same connection, and contemporaneous in point of time, was nominated to one of the principal foreign missions of the country. This is the practice which I condemned as general in our day and generation, and which I did not allege against any party in particular, and the effect of which is to discredit our foreign service.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not suppose, Mr. Chairman, that it is expected that we on this side of the House will consume the time of the Committee of the Whole in a defense of the appointments made for service abroad. I think that criticisms from the other side upon those appointments, when there is no time to defend or reply, are entirely out of order, out of place, and uncalled for. I say that distinctly, recognizing precisely to whom and at whom the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] points his remarks.

I believe that this debate should not be allowed to run in the direction of challenging the qualifications or the propriety of the appointment of any man to any place. And I do not think, and I say it with all deference to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE,] that it is in good taste. The gentleman appointed to a distinguished post abroad has his friends and his champions. But he should not be dragged into this arena of debate and subjected to criticisms when the mouths of his friends and of his champions are substantially closed. So much for that.

A single word in reference to the pending amendment. The Committee on Appropriations sympathize to a certain extent with the views of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] and of my colleague, and they have taken a step in that direction for the purpose of pointing the mind of the Administration to the subject.

I apprehend, however, that there is no man upon the other side of the House who will say that it is proper, without the gravest consideration being given to the subject, to introduce the radical reforms projected by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] in his amendment; and I am glad to see that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] draws back when he confronts the illustration of the argument which he made. The other side of the House has had the control of legislation, certainly of this House, for three or four successive Congresses and may have taken steps in the direction that we have, but they did not deem it wise to inaugurate any such radical changes as have been indicated here. As I have said, the only purpose that the Committee on Appropriations had in view was to call the attention of the Administration to this reform, if it be one; and when we can be possessed of its views, to give the subject the consideration which it demands.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to amend the pending amendment so as to give the President discretion to consolidate the missions as proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] That I believe will meet the views of gentlemen on both sides.

My colleague from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] complains that the discussion of this morning has taken a partisan direction. If it has done so, it is entirely due to him. He himself took the floor and began his remarks by asserting that in the remarks which I had delivered to the House I claimed that the legislation of 1868 was Democratic legislation. He did that with the RECORD lying before him, from which I will read an extract in regard to that legislation. I said:

> It was, in fact, not a party measure, and the best men on both sides contributed to its success; but so far as it was opposed it was opposed only by Republicans.

Now, was it possible to put in words a more express disclaimer that this measure was party legislation? And yet my colleague consumed ten minutes in attacking me on the ground that I claimed that it was a party measure. He went further, and said that I was an enemy of the consular system. He said that with the RECORD lying before him, in which were these words:

> The cost of the consular service of Great Britain is about one million three hundred thousand dollars per annum. They maintain no consuls in interior towns, but they have consuls in every port where the British flag floats. I advocate the same system. I would strengthen the consular system all over the world in ports of entry; I would pay an adequate compensation for men competent to perform the duties subjected to preliminary examination, and I would let the charge fall upon the whole country, and not place a positive obstruction in the way of its general commerce.

I ask my colleague whether he could coin any language more calculated to bring the attention of this House to the necessity and importance of sustaining the consular service of the country? I go further, and gentlemen on this side of the House will bear me witness when I say it, and say that when in the Forty-fourth Congress radical changes—reforms as they were thought to be—were proposed by my own party associates, I stood alone on the floor of this House to protect the consular system from what I considered would be destructive measures of legislation. My associates had the good sense to adopt most of the suggestions which I made. The consular system was from that hour improved; and the very reports referred to in this debate were suggested in the first speech I ever delivered on the floor of this House on the subject of foreign relations.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I most respectfully insist that I did not introduce this partisan discussion into this debate; and I most respectfully insist that it was introduced by my colleague from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] who has just taken his seat. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that a careful perusal of his speech will show it an attempt to glorify the Democratic party as the champions of the rights of the adopted citizens of the nation.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. And I repeat it now.

Mr. HISCOCK. And I insist on the other hand that until the Republican party took control of the administration of this Government the rights of our adopted citizens were neglected in our treaty obligations, and that we had no legislation for the protection of those rights. Labor was not ennobled by the gentlemen on the other side, but was debased. The rival of the labor that came to us from abroad was disposed of in the slave-pens, even in the District of Columbia. The great power that controlled the Government under Democratic administration was not zealous for free labor, and did not legislate in that direction.

My colleague has said that it was not partisan legislation that was had in the Fortieth Congress. I insist that the Republican party is responsible for that legislation; it is our legislation; it is to our credit and our glory. Imagine a Democratic Congress with a membership of one hundred and fifty Democrats and thirty Republicans yielding to those thirty the credit of the laws placed on the statute-book by that Congress.

I saw in the House a little while ago the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts who substantially formulated the law referred to. Why, sir, he belonged once to the Native-American party; yet recognizing the right of our adopted citizens to all the privileges accorded to native-born citizens, he sought and procured the necessary legislation to guarantee those rights.

Mr. McLANE obtained the floor.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. McLANE. I move to amend by striking out the word "Japan." I wish merely to say a word in reply to the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] I shall at all times be ready to accept his counsel, and I was about to say his training, but he will excuse me if I tell him it does not lie with him to reflect upon my political course. I have, in fact, taken no part in the political aspects of this debate. My remarks on the day before yesterday referred to the service at home or abroad, having no reference to either party, as I expressly stated. Throughout that debate I did not indulge in partisan or political allusions; but to-day, when the honorable gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LORD] gave to this discussion a partisan character which I would not have felt disposed to give it, I could not refrain from making the allusions I did. There were, perhaps, allusions made in the debate of day before yesterday; but if there were they had express reference to the value of the diplomatic service. I do not feel at all that I was taking any liberty with the committee in making those allusions, though perhaps the time is more valuable than the speech.

Mr. LORD. Will the gentleman allow me one question? Did I understand the gentleman just now to refer to a distinguished gentleman just appointed to go abroad as an illustration of his poor-devil theory?

Mr. McLANE. I cannot permit the gentleman to make me more personal than I choose to be, indeed I do not want to be personal at all. The gentleman from Michigan may make his own application. I am dealing with a system. I know very well that, like my honorable friend from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he will have no difficulty in making his application. But I was about saying in the minute that is left me that we are at perfect liberty upon this bill to introduce partisan views, though I have not. But when the honorable gentleman from New York who, if he did not introduce it, followed keenly in the scent, and was not far behind either of the honorable gentlemen on that side of the House who gave us on the day before yesterday a political chapter, denounced this side of the House, denounced the Democratic party at large as never having been distinguished in the history of this country for the championship of the rights of the naturalized citizen, such an allegation so unfounded, so much at war with the political record of the country, might well have excited the indignant denial of every man on this side of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can reply in five minutes to all the speeches of the last two days. I wish I had the ability and could. I thought to say something on the bill; but I feel sure that would be out of fashion, and possibly out of order.

Now, as to this Irish question. If the Democratic party are not the friends of the Irish they certainly ought to be, for the Irish have stood by them; and there have been times when they would have been seriously embarrassed and their ranks sadly thinned but for their Irish friends. A very bright Irishman once said to me: "Would you like to have me tell you what an Irishman's politics are?" I replied that I should indeed. "Well," said he, "be jabers, they're opposed to any government they are under." And we both enjoyed the joke. But I would supplement it by the further statement that some of the brightest intellects of the world and some of the most gallant defenders of our flag and country have been Irishmen; and as they have made common cause with us, so would I make common cause with them in protecting their every right, regardless of their political affiliations. And what I can say for myself I can most safely say for this side of the House.

But, Mr. Chairman, I doubt if we can settle the next Presidency, the war in Ireland, the division of parties in New York, or the history of the rebellion in Indiana or elsewhere on this bill. Nor do I believe that those issues which will come to the front and assert themselves in due time will be much affected by what we may say here, though the debate has been both able and interesting. Great political issues are the outgrowth of great political forces.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I rose chiefly to say this, have been anxiously and I think diligently searching for facts and official information for the purpose of responding in good faith to the instructions and the resolution of this House. This cannot be done in a minute, and when it is done it should be founded on fact and not on theory or denunciation. So soon as the information called for can be obtained it will be the duty, as it will be the pride of that committee to bring before the House whatever of fact it may obtain for its considerate and practical action. If cases be found requiring dignified and decorous but decided action in Congress, we shall then be able to determine who are the true friends of the imprisoned American citizen abroad. I care not where he was born or what his politics may be. Be he American, Irish, English, German, or Scandinavian born; be he white or black; be he Democrat or Republican; be he Protestant or Catholic, Jew or Gentile, it matters not if a bona fide American citizen, incarcerated for no crime and no adequate cause, and denied a speedy hearing under the forms of law, then let the demand go with such dignity and decorum as should command respect; and then, if unheeded, let every power of this Government be invoked to open his prison doors and bid him stand forth a free man. [Applause.] But first let us ascertain the facts in an official and authentic form, and then act in view of them.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will talk appropriately to this present amendment after congratulating the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] that he is about to obey from his committee instructions of this House which I had the honor to pass for his instruction. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman on my left from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] proposes an amendment. To this I will speak. He would combine certain of these embassies. He differs from the committee in more combinations and at less cost. That is very well if the combinations were not rather confusedly made and if it were not in advance of practical and present sentiment.

On this floor, years and years ago, I have urged that the time would come when, by harnessing the forces of nature through steam and telegraph, we might be rid of most of this diplomacy. I have said it again and again, in elaborate speeches; I said it to sodden ears who heeded not. My colleague from New York [Mr. HEWITT] afterward, when he became a member of this House, made research and speeches in the same direction.

My distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIN,] who has honored our country at a foreign court, intimated the other day that he hoped the time would come for a happy riddance of the inutilities, forms, and fooleries of diplomatic etiquette and ostentation. I wish the world were ripe and ready for it now. Looking at the records of the English Parliament, I see that this sentiment is growing there, and that some practice has obtained to that end. In so far as such improvement has been made, it is to be noted for our instruction. Treaties are negotiated at home offices, and without the aid of embassies or ministers, in great emergencies, as at Washington and Berlin. Our recent fishing troubles were settled here in Washington without the intervention of our minister at St. James. Our telegraph expenses at the State Department will show how much is done now by the quick intelligence of the cable. In many places, by consolidating the various embassies under one head, through the aid of the telegraph and prompt travel, much more might be accomplished. All this, sir, I have urged and I concede.

Our committee, Mr. Chairman, in moving in this direction are pursuing by this bill the thought of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] and my colleague from New York, [Mr. HEWITT;] they are pursuing the thought, though not completely, of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] and of members of the last Congress and of the Congress before that, when we consolidated these Central American missions into one. For the benefit of the service, as well as in the line of economy, we have still pursued this idea in the present bill. We are combining Holland with Belgium, and making the Scandinavian nations, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden one in our representation. We have attempted it somewhat in South America. We might go further and adopt the plan of my friend from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] but let us do it more heedfully than in his proposition, for that is subject to much criticism; let it be done, if you please, after advice by the Secretary of State and after examining all our relations of comity and commerce.

In this bill provision is made for every proper representation of our Government abroad. We have economized on ministers to the amount of some fifteen thousand dollars. Most of this we add to the efficiency of the consular service. Moreover we have on the whole cut down from last year some eleven thousand one hundred and twenty-five dollars. This bill is, therefore, ample for all our diplomatic and commercial work, and it is ample in so far as economy is concerned. It takes from the ornamental minister to give it to the useful consul.

In these five minutes I cannot discuss the matter raised by my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] as to the improvement of our consular system as to the invoices, fees, and the ad valorem and other methods of advancing trade abroad.

Let my colleague come before Congress with a general bill. Let us raise, if you please, a committee to study in and out of the State Department, whose archives are full of instruction as to our commercial and consular regulations abroad, and I venture to say that much legislative amelioration would result. For one, I am willing to undertake my part in the work, and I welcome my colleague, who is a business man and who knows what it is to import under present conditions. His experience and his ability would be indispensable in perfecting that work. It is no place on an appropriation bill to enter into that discussion or legislation. We are now limited by rules of order from considering it. Let us then go along with the bill and close it before Sunday comes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let us have a vote.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the words "Hawaiian Islands," as I desire to say a word in reference to this amendment.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] asked why the Democratic party did not cut down these missions when we had control of the House during the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, and Forty-sixth Congresses. I refer the gentleman to the fact that we did abolish the mission to Greece, where our minister was not engaged in any other occupation, that we could ascertain, than in waltzing with the Queen; and we consolidated several missions in South America. And I have never yet heard a word, or a single complaint, that any one single interest of the United States has been jeopardized, or in any wise injured, by abolishing the mission to Greece and consolidating the South American missions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that work having resulted so favorably to the interests of this Government, and no detriment having resulted in any direction, I propose to commend that policy to the gentlemen who now control the majority side of the House; and say to them also that these missions were not abolished or consolidated up to that time, by the advice or suggestions of the State Department. The only suggestions in that connection came from this House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we did not act under the advice of the State Department at all in this matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not referring to the gentleman from New York nor do I mean to criticise his action; but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has stated that we must wait until the State Department advises this action. Now, I say that we did not wait when we had control of the House in the past, but went on and abolished this mission to which I have referred, and consolidated others, and no gentleman can refer to one single instance where there has been any detriment to any one single interest of the Government in consequence of that change. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I entirely concur with the disposition of the gentleman from Illinois, who has just spoken, in reference to these matters. We have had this same question under discussion for three Congresses, and I have never yet heard any gentleman on this floor suggest any practical service that we have obtained from our foreign diplomates that would justify the continuance of the great body of them. I have no doubt but what the service would be benefited by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. There is no need for their continuance in the present condition of our Government.

In the origin of our Government, when this system of foreign service was first under consideration in Congress, the debates of that period will show that the great minds that then dominated in these two Houses then contemplated that this was not to be a permanent fixture upon the country. In our infancy, our feebleness, our complications with foreign powers, and in our very struggle for existence itself, it was well that we should have at these foreign courts men to look to and consider our interests and represent us among the nations of the world. But with the present facilities for communication between the different nations of the earth, with the absolute assurance not only of national existence, but with a standing in the world scarcely equaled, and certainly not surpassed, by any other country, I am unable to understand why we should continue this service. The gentleman from New York tells us what England has done, and of reforms that are in progress in that country. But, Mr. Chairman, do we stand as England, or France, or Russia, or Germany, with all their complicated questions, not only requiring diplomatic intercourse abroad, but standing armies at home on the watch for any encroachment upon their interests or territory? No, sir, we are perfectly free from all that. We stand aloof from all such complications. We have our well-defined status among the family of nations. We are free from complicating entanglements, and there is little reason for continuing this service to the extent we have in the past.

I trust we shall have no fear in adopting the amendment, and go forward in the new line of policy that commends itself to our judgment. There is no reason why it should not be done, and I have never, in defense of this system, heard it even suggested by any gentleman that anything of great importance has been done by our diplomatic agents. The Government in all such cases has been acting directly; and therefore there is no reason for continuing the system. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I move to strike out the last word. I dislike very much, Mr. Chairman, to trespass on the time of the committee when I know they are so anxious, as I am myself, to proceed with the public business; but what I desire to submit is pertinent in connection with what has just been said in reference to the mission to Greece by the gentleman from Illinois. I desire to put in the RECORD at the close, and as a part of my remarks, a communication from the Secretary of State in reference to the abolishment of that very mission, and the necessity for its restoration.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was put in yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. That was in reference to Antigua. This communication and documents accompanying it refer to that portion of the President's message recommending its re-establishment and the practical necessity therefor. Now, in regard to our diplomatic and consular system, it is as much a system of the Government as the Army and the Navy are. And I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that it is a hazardous experiment to try to reorganize this system piecemeal on an appropriation bill. Some say: "Let us abolish it altogether. It brings no money; it is a useless and costly bauble; steam and telegraph have rendered it obsolete." Sir, until steam and telegraphs can do away with the necessity of business men transacting business at the national capital, sending agents here, known and knowing others, you will never do away with your diplomatic and consular system. You may talk about it, but it will never be done.

The officers of your Army and Navy bring little revenue in time of peace, but in an emergency their knowledge and skill may save more to the Government in a day than it costs to maintain them for a generation. I do not mean that our diplomatic corps are drilled and trained in their calling, but frequently, being on the spot, able to speak face to face, they are able to so shape negotiations as to save two nations from being plunged into war, and this may be after long periods of inaction and apparent uselessness. Then, I fancy, that like members here, they all find more on their hands than the people realize.

But what I wanted principally to remind the committee of again was that the State Department informs us, by the communication it printed in our RECORD yesterday, that that Department is diligently laboring to ascertain wherein this system can be reorganized and improved, and they appeal to Congress to give them time to complete that investigation and submit suggestions. We cannot, and we ought not, to desire to abolish this system. Then it should be improved upon the best information obtainable and after careful consideration. We speak of steam and electricity superseding the personal presence of the diplomate. Does any business man, transacting business at this capital or elsewhere, rely on the mail and telegraph, or does he secure the presence of some one with whom he can communicate? If individuals require this, nations require it all the more. It requires the presence of those known to others, but known by them as well. The idea of envoys and ministers plenipotentiary riding the circuit of the European capitals was answered yesterday by the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] that they were unknown in those other capitals. It requires acquaintance, address, and social and business status to accomplish much in diplomacy; and while we would have our ministers and consuls pander not one iota to the frivolities of aristocratic imperialisms, we would have them respect the manners and customs of the people and governments to whom they are accredited. While they maintain the dignity of true democracy and command the respect of all in return, I would send them forth so equipped as to be able to do this.

Why, sir, take the republics of Chili and Peru in their recent troubles. Look into the correspondence just published and see how important it was for those governments to have representatives personally present at Washington to inform our Government, correct rumors, and maintain the cause of each as each claimed it. Could they do that by steamship or telegraph? And if these smaller republics can afford this, shall we first proclaim that our great Republic is about to take an advance step among the nations of the earth and then declare that she is really too poor to keep up diplomatic relations with her neighbors?

I hope we shall not in any hasty manner disturb the well-established system of our foreign representation, but that we shall diligently examine and carefully promote its efficiency wherever we can.

The following are the communications referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 28, 1882.

SIR: Referring to a clause on page 9 of the President's message of December 6 last, touching the restoration of the mission to Greece, I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter from the consul-general of that country at New York, giving an expression of the satisfaction which this clause had afforded to the Greek Government.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

Hon. C. G. WILLIAMS,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Inclosure: Mr. Botassi to Mr. Frelinghuysen, February 17, 1882.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF GREECE,
New York, 5–17 February, 1882.

SIR: His majesty's government has read with great pleasure that passage in the President's message to Congress by which his excellency recommends to that body the re-establishment of the United States legation to Athens, Greece.

By a dispatch dated Athens, January 5, (old style,) just received, I am instructed by Mr. Coumoundouros, prime minister and minister of foreign affairs, to express officially to your excellency the satisfaction with which the Greek Government would see this recommendation of his excellency the President of the United States realized.

In complying thus with the order received, I beg your excellency to communicate this desire of the Greek Government to the proper committee of Congress, and to be good enough to let me know in due time the decision which has been taken in the premises.

I need not enumerate to your excellency the many advantages which the re-establishment of the American mission to Athens would offer for the benefit of both countries. A larger number of American citizens visit Greece now than ever before, owing to increased communication by steam. Some American machinery begins to find its way to Greece by the direct line of steamers from this port to Naples, Italy, while the export of American refined petroleum to Greek ports takes larger proportions every year. An American legation at Athens would greatly facilitate this business intercourse, while it would be the means to maintain and increase the friendly relations happily existing between the two countries.

I remain, with the highest consideration, sir,
Your excellency's most obedient servant,

D. M. BOTASSI,
Consul-General of Greece.

Hon. F. T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The last amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois was a formal amendment, and was withdrawn. The first amendment proposed by him is now before the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That is not necessary; it has been reported already two or three times.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask that it be read again. Several gentlemen desire to have it again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on Mr. SPRINGER's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to strike out the word "dollars." My object is to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from W. J. Stillman, formerly consul-general at Athens. I do not desire to have it read; but as an antidote to the communication which I understood the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs obtained permission to have inserted in the RECORD, I desire that this shall go with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then I withdraw the amendment.

The letter referred to is as follows:

A LETTER OF MR. W. J. STILLMAN.

[From the Evening Post.]

I learn that the diplomatic appropriation bill proposes to re-establish the legation of the United States at Athens. As one of the Americans most conversant with the state of the politics of Greece and the needs of Americans here, as well as with the relations of Greece with America, I beg to protest, both as an American and as a friend of the progress of Greece, against the re-entry of the United States into the diplomatic circles of Athens. We have no diplomatic interests here, and a legation is an utterly useless expenditure, from which no good can in any case result to us, and much injury is likely to result to Greece. The present condition of the kingdom is one of open and hardly legal struggle between the king and the entire mass of liberal and the progressive Greeks—a struggle in which the very existence of Greece as an independent country is at stake, the king steadily, and without any regard to constitutional obligations, endeavoring to override the restraints of the charter, and playing absolutist antics which no other constitutional sovereign in Europe (if he, indeed, can be counted such) would dare put in practice.

In this struggle the diplomatic body is invariably, and perhaps (considering that it is accredited to the king personally, and has little to do with any one but him) unavoidably, on the side of the king. In all cases, at any rate, the ministers have sided with the king, and an American minister must do the same or be isolated in many ways, and in a manner not at all comfortable. Out of three American ministers in Greece, two have taken this position, and considered themselves as peculiarly honored by the personal friendship of the sovereign, his adulators, and part of the train whose moral influence has always been against the best part of the Greek people in their aspirations for good government. Nothing is so disheartening to them as to see a representative of the great Republic to which they look as the exemplar of the modern civic existence enlisted, through its representative here, against them in their contest with the continual usurpation of their sovereign. They do not desire a minister from America here. I speak from knowledge of the most authoritative opinions in Athens. They cannot hope or expect that he would enroll himself on their side in the contest which has been going on almost ever since the king came, and which must finish soon in the defeat of one or the other party to it, for its intensity increases every day, and they do not want to see him among their adversaries, as are all the ministers of the powers at Athens.

Meanwhile we want a consul, as we do not happen to have an American representative in Greece; we want a gentleman, for his services will be mainly social, and it were better to have some one whose scholarship will do us credit and whose opportunities here will by and by return for the good of America. It ought to be a tradition with us to keep a Greek scholar at Athens, as it used to be to keep an artist consul at Rome.

I have not alluded to the other solid reason for not sending a minister to Greece, that Greece does not send a minister to Washington, nor will in any case be represented there. This alone should prevent us from renewing the legation which was originally established when Greece sent a minister to America during the Cretan struggle. We have no pretext for re-establishing it, and several for not doing so.

W. J. S.

ATHENS, GREECE, January 24, 1882.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the consul at Liverpool, $6,000.

Mr. CONVERSE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 86 add the following:

"Provided, That hereafter no consular fees shall be charged by any consul or commercial agent of the United States for services to American seamen or shipowners, or for any certificate or manifest to vessels, or for merchandise shipped or to be shipped in vessels belonging to citizens of the United States and carrying the flag of the United States."

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask the gentleman to withhold the point of order while I make a statement that will not occupy more than three or four minutes.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. My point of order is that the amendment is new legislation, and does not retrench expenditure.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to be heard for a moment on the point of order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I withhold the point of order for the present to allow the gentleman from Ohio to explain his amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will make the further point of order that the amendment is not germane to the clause under consideration.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to call the attention of the committee (and I have offered this amendment for that purpose) to the subject of increasing the merchant marine. I hope the point of order may be withdrawn and a vote had on the amendment. I suppose there is no difference of opinion on this floor as to the desirability of building up American shipping and restoring the prestige that this Republic once enjoyed by reason of its merchant marine. In my judgment that desirable object cannot be obtained by giving large subsidies which may build up a single line to the destruction of all the small craft or weaker lines that may be engaged in the business or on the same route. But it must be done by making the ocean carrying business profitable. How can that be done? That can be done, or assisted very much, by getting rid of the numerous and, in the aggregate, great expenses that tax the shipping interest. As I am told, you cannot now ship merchandise that would be worth $1 from a foreign port without a manifest or certificate signed by an American consul or commercial agent of some kind, for which he would charge one or two and up to five dollars.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The value of the imports for which a certificate is required must exceed $100.

Mr. CONVERSE. That is not according to my information; but suppose it is $100. There is then a charge on every such shipment that is made.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Which exceeds $100; otherwise not.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to call the attention of the committee not only to the subject of consular fees but to the fact that the shipping interest has been to a great extent taxed out of existence. You charge by your laws to-day $4.80 as hospital dues for every sailor that is employed upon an American vessel, that is at the rate of forty cents per month for each sailor; a thing unheard of in any country other than this. If we desire hospitals at our ports for the cure of sick or disabled sailors, why not appropriate the money from the common treasury? No other industry is thus taxed for the support of its sick or disabled employés. Why should the ocean commerce be thus taxed any more than interstate commerce? Why should you not as well tax railroads for the support of their sick and maimed? Such taxation discourages our citizens from engaging in ocean commerce. Besides that you permit American vessels to be taxed as other property in local ports, which I could easily show to be unjust if my time was not limited. And in addition to that you have onerous charges of pilotage in every port in the United States, amounting from $5 to $50; and those charges are made in all cases, even when the masters of the vessels are themselves better pilots than any you have in your ports. And there are other charges besides this pilotage, local taxation, consular fees, and hospital dues. There is also the payment of the sailors three months' extra wages in foreign ports which has been brought to the attention of the House by my friend from New York, [Mr. BELMONT,] by the introduction of a bill on that subject. These are the things that have assisted in driving the American shipping from the ocean. Whenever it shall become profitable for American capital and American skill to sail American vessels they will appear, and it will not be necessary to buy them abroad either. The ships will be built at home and be manned by American sailors. Only begin the work of making the business profitable by conceding these numerous small demands which in the aggregate amount to large sums.

In addition to the taxes, which I have enumerated, during the late waf there were still other taxes. Not a single certificate or receipt or paper of any sort could be signed without a stamp upon it, and nearly the whole business was conducted by a system of checks and receipts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say a single word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] who has just taken his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been made against his amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will not insist upon speaking if the committee desires to go on with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] did not discuss the point of order, and I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] might be allowed to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will not occupy the attention of the committee for more than two or three minutes. I have not taken any part at all in the discussion of this bill thus far.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] I think is a little mistaken when he says that these consular fees and these minor charges made upon American shipping drove American commerce from the seas. The gentleman ought to remember that when the war broke out American commerce had the respect of the world and the command of all the seas. It was a source of revenue to us, while now it is true we are paying upwards of a hundred millions of dollars each year to foreign vessels to carry our own produce abroad.

While that is true, it is also true that we will not get back that commerce by a simple repeal of the law providing for consular fees. Before the war, when our commerce was what it was, the pride of the nation and the boast of our Government, those same fees existed which exist now; the same restrictions which exist now existed then and have existed from the early days of the Republic.

The old navigation laws that are now in force were put in force in the early days of the Republic. I agree with the gentleman that those laws ought to be somewhat modified. I charge upon my friend from New York, sitting near me, [Mr. COX,] that he, more than any other man on this floor, is responsible for the retention of the pilotage system against which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] so pertinently spoke. We ought to get rid of the pilotage system. And I agree with the gentleman from Ohio, that many of these consular fees might be dispensed with. But they are only a drop in the bucket as compared with the mighty causes that are keeping American commerce where it is. We must have more radical legislation before we will get back our lost commerce.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DUNNELL. Excuse me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not yield just now.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman attacked me.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman from New York has spoken a number of times here, and I have spoken but this once,

Mr. COX, of New York. But not on that subject.

Mr. DUNNELL. So fertile is that gentleman in resources that he will easily get a chance to reply to me without me yielding to him.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not want to reply to the gentleman. I want to go on with the business of the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Oh!

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman is speaking by my sufferance, for a point of order would cut him off. Yet he attacks me and does not give me a chance to reply.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have said here and elsewhere that not only the Democratic party which had power here for six years, but the Republican party which has had power here for so many years since the war, each of these two great parties is chargeable with dereliction of duty in that they have done so little for the restoration of American commerce. And we on this side of the House, slightly in power now, if we hope to retain our power I trust will have the brains and the bravery to meet this question of a depressed American commerce.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been made against the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE,] and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read the following:

Class 2. At $3,500 per annum.

CHINA.

Foochow, Hankow, Canton, Amoy, Tien-Tsin, Chin-Kiang, Ningpo.

PERU.

Callao.

UNITED STATES OF COLOMBIA.

Panama and Colon, (Aspinwall.)

Class 3. At $3,000 per annum.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Manchester, Glasgow, Bradford, Demerara, Belfast.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by inserting the word "Leith" after the word "Bradford."

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I make the point of order against that amendment that it changes existing law and increases expenditures.

Mr. DUNNELL. The point of the gentleman is not well made. The amendment does not change existing law. There is no law in existence which the amendment proposes to change.

Mr. ATKINS. It makes a new law.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I renew it on the gentleman, on account of his courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before the Chair rules upon the point of order I desire to say a word. I do not believe that the amendment changes existing law at all; it only proposes to adjust salaries. The legislation in this bill upon this subject is simply to provide for carrying on our foreign and commercial intercourse. These offices are not salaried offices, but are provided for year by year.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I renew it. After the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] I believe that the amendment is not in order. Although there is no law establishing these offices, yet by putting this amendment in the bill you will make a new law. I think, therefore, it is a change of law and an increase of expenditures.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not think the point of order is well taken, and I trust the Chair has not definitely made up his mind upon it.

The consular and diplomatic offices of this Government rest on a different basis from any other offices. They do not rest upon the authority of statute law. The President of the United States can double the number of our consuls or our diplomates, in virtue of the authority inherent in the Executive under the Constitution. The only hinderance in respect to these appointments is as to the money to compensate the officers. From the beginning of the Government down we have simply provided money for this service. In the beginning the appropriation was a gross sum, with no designation at all by Congress of the officers to be appointed, that matter lying entirely with the President. There has been for several years past a simple provision of law for salaries, and no more. There is no legislation to be found presuming to create these offices at all. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] asks me where are the appropriation bills? The appropriation bills do not create offices at all; they simply provide money for the payment of the officers at these different places. The President of the United States may fail to make the appointments provided for by this bill, or he may double them. This has been regarded as a part of his constitutional authority from the beginning of the Government down.

Mr. ROBESON. As it will probably take much longer to discuss this point of order than to decide the question presented by the amendment, I ask my friend from Michigan to withdraw the point.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I withdraw it, because I think we can in that way get through with the question more quickly.

Mr. ATKINS. I renew the point. I take the ground, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment makes a new provision of law. This appropriation bill when enacted is a law; it is a guide to the President and binding upon him. The similar appropriation act now on the statute-book is binding upon the President; he has conformed to it; he has not varied from it in appointing ministers and consuls to foreign countries. I renew the point of order because it is just as well that this question should be ruled upon here and now. It has been ruled upon time and again by different occupants of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt that this amendment proposes to make a new provision of law, and thereby to change existing law. Therefore the Chair holds the point of order well taken.

Mr. DUNNELL. I appeal from that decision of the Chair.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I understand the Chair to have ruled in ignorance of the fact that by existing law there is a consul at Leith, as appears by the official register of the State Department, which I hold in my hand. This consulate was appropriated for in the last bill; it now exists; and this bill changes existing law, if there be any law on the subject.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to remind the Chair of an important point which ought to influence him in deciding a point of this sort. The rule states specifically that an amendment to be ruled out of order must change existing law. When a point of order is made against a proposed amendment it becomes the duty of the person making the point to prove that the amendment does propose a change of existing law. He must produce the law; he must show the statute which the amendment, if adopted, will change. He must show that if adopted the amendment robs some officer of a discretion or changes some other existing law. Now in this case not only is it contended on this floor that there is no change of existing law, no statute affected by the amendment, but it is asserted that by law the office now exists; and I insist that before a final decision be made some authority should be produced showing how the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. I understand that the Chair has ruled three several times on this point. I hope the Committee of the Whole will not abide by the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HASKELL. An appeal has been taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to state that in the ruling just made it was assumed that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota was an addition to the existing law. Upon that assumption the ruling was based. As the Chair understands, the burden of proof is upon the party making a point of order to show that it is well founded. If the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is correct—if this office does already exist—then the assumption on which the Chair rested his ruling is incorrect, and he would revise his ruling.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The Chair will allow me to say that in line 142 of this bill Leith appears as a consulate to be appropriated for. The effect of the proposed amendment is simply to increase the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the point of order is withdrawn; and the question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

The amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes 36, noes 53.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to insert the word "Leith" after the word "Sheffield," in line 126; and I desire to make a single remark on the amendment. The point of order will not of course be made. The consul now at Leith receives the sum of $2,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make the point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. State it.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point is that this changes existing law. Leeds is enumerated among the consuls at a salary of $2,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. My amendment is Leith, and not Leeds.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah! I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman propose to transpose Leith from line 142 to line 126; is that his purpose?

Mr. DUNNELL. It is.

Mr. ATKINS. Then why not state it so we may know what we are voting on?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That is an increase of $1,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the receipt of fees at Leith indicates an increase, a very decided increase in the business done at that port. Leith is a suburb of Edinburgh, and the consul is compelled to reside in the larger city, where residence is expensive. We have given to the consul at Demarara, where less business is done than at Leith, $3,000. We are now proposing to give to the consul at Birmingham and other places, in lines 126 and 127, where less business is done than at Leith, $2,500. I am therefore willing to compromise and make the amendment in the line of $2,500 salaries.

The fees for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, were $1,194.08. The fees for the next fiscal year were $1,656.23, almost enough to pay the entire salary of the consul at Leith; and I insist this, my sole amendment to this bill, is offered in the utmost good faith, and in the belief it is an act of justice to the consul as well as to the honor of the country, and to the benefit of its commerce. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman from Minnesota has correctly stated the amount of fees collected by the consul at Leith. He compared him with the consul at Birmingham. At Birmingham last year the fees collected amounted to $5,602.

Mr. DUNNELL. I had not the statistics before me at the time, and I said "or other places in that list." I will modify my statement, as I intended to do it at the time, I will say respectfully to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will say that I do not think in all the consulates receiving $2,500 a year any one is as low, or nearly as low, as the consulate at Leith.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TURKISH DOMINIONS.

Smyrna.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to add after "Smyrna" the word "Jerusalem;" and I ask to have read a letter from the consul at that city. I will say to the House and the country I now lay this letter before them because I did not have it while our sub-committee was acting on this matter, otherwise I think I should have asked them in deference to the work done at that consulate it might be placed at $500 greater than at present. This gentleman is from Iowa, and gentlemen from that State will know him. His statement is entitled to be spread upon the record.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES CONSULATE FOR PALESTINE,
Jerusalem, November 5, 1881.

DEAR SIR: I have, under date November 5, sent dispatch No. 119, with inclosure, to the State Department, with request that it be laid before the Committee on Appropriations. The inclosure is a statement of the salaries and expenses of the several consulates at Jerusalem. The dispatch is a plea for the United States consulate, with a view to its elevation of grade and improvement of its financial condition.

The United States consulate has the lowest salary of the nine consulates here, while its real importance and the amount of labor required and the responsibility sustained are more than of any consulate.

There are about one hundred and seventy resident American citizens, who are under the government and protection of the consulate, and nearly or quite five hundred American travelers annually, every one of whom either personally or by his dragoman, has demands upon the time and labors of the consul.

If you can consistently do anything to secure the proper presentation of this subject to the Committee on Appropriations, it will be esteemed a favor, and I shall be greatly your debtor.

I remain, sir, yours, respectfully,

J. G. WILSON.

Hon. S. S. COX.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That is provided for in this bill at $1,500, and the proposition is to increase it to $2,500.

Mr. COX, of New York. No; to make it $2,000.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The fees at that place during the last fiscal year were $138.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw it here, and will renew it under $2,000 consulates.

The Clerk read as follows:

Portugal—Lisbon.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am instructed by the committee to move to strike those words out. At present we have a chargé d'affaires at $5,000 and a consul at $2,000. We have by this bill made the minister resident at that port consul-general. We therefore propose to strike out these words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. NEAL. Before that motion is put, I desire to offer the following as an addition to the clause as it now stands.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman propose it as an amendment to perfect the text?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Lisbon" add, "who shall also act as secretary of legation."

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad if the committee would listen to me for a moment while I give my reasons for offering this amendment.

The present minister resident, or chargé d'affairs, at Lisbon is Mr. Benjamin Moran, who was for twenty-five years secretary of legation, and also minister, to the court of Great Britain. He is, as I state from personal knowledge, one of the most accomplished diplomates in the service of the United States at this time. He has given his life to the service. He is, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] perhaps will remember, and doubtless other gentlemen also, a confirmed invalid, not able to discharge the duties of consul if they shall be imposed upon him. Now, I propose the consul shall be retained, and the duties of secretary of legation shall be added to the duties already discharged by that gentleman. It would be, in my judgment, doing an act of gross injustice, and is an unwise economy, to strike at this officer and compel the minister to discharge the duties of both positions.

Mr. Chairman, I had once the honor to be consul of the United States at Lisbon, and therefore I speak from personal knowledge when I say the court of Lisbon is one of the most ceremonious in the whole of Europe, and involves the necessity of maintaining there a consul and minister resident to keep up the dignity that is attached necessarily to these officers as represented by foreign nations at that place. I would myself rather go back and strike out the provision for minister altogether, rather than degrade him to the rank of an ordinary consul, and expect him to perform the duties of his office in that capital. I trust the amendment which I have suggested will be adopted.

Now, sir, a word further in connection with this matter. The consulate at Lisbon paid, at the time that I was familiar with its duties, something like three hundred dollars, and the receipts now are, I understand, about one thousand dollars in round numbers. There is not another consul in the whole government of Portugal. We have commercial agencies at other points. If you strike this out, as proposed in this bill, what will be the result? Why, when the minister is absent for two months in the year, as he has the right to be, under the orders of the State Department, the entire business will be left under the control of commercial agents, who are natives of that country or, to a certain extent, subjects of Great Britain. Our commercial agent there is a Dane, who represents the Danish Government at that port. Now, you strike this out, and you impose unnecessary and unheard of labors upon the minister resident, a man who ought not to be burdened with them, and at the same time, when he is absent, as I have shown, you put the entire control of the affairs of this country in the hands of foreigners; in the hands of men who have no interest whatever in the welfare of the Government or people of the United States.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, it is proper that I should say here that this committee directs none of its measures toward individual men. If the gentleman who is now representing us at Lisbon is unfortunately unable to discharge the ordinary duties of his office I cannot help it. I will be pardoned also for saying, in a word, that this change is not anomalous or unusual in the history of the world. I find that it is customary among the nations of the earth to unite these consular duties with those of their higher diplomatic officers without degradation to diplomacy while greatly adding to the efficiency of the consular service. I find that Austria has a representative at Buenos Ayres who is minister resident and consul-general. Italy maintains a minister resident and consul-general at Morocco and chargé d'affaires and consul-general at Mexico, Guatemala, Chili, Peru, and Uruguay. I find that Great Britain has four envoys extraordinary who are also consuls-general in China, Japan, Persia, and Morocco, and seven ministers resident who are also consuls-general at Lima, Bogota, Quito, Uruguay, San Diego, Central America, and Hayti, the last being chargé d'affaires for the Dominican Republic, and one commissioner and consul-general to the Sandwich Islands. I find that even in those countries that put the highest appreciation upon their diplomatic service they have not thought it was degraded by association with consular duties.

The question being taken on Mr. NEAL'S amendment to the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The question being next taken on the amendment of Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, it was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Oh, no! there is nothing left but the formal part of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read the following under "class 5; at $2,000 per annum."

SWITZERLAND.

Basle, Zurich.

Mr. NEAL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 162, after the word "Zurich," insert the words "St. Galle."

Mr. NEAL. I wish to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, which seems to have been to an extraordinary degree economical in the preparation of this bill, to the extraordinary fact that while at Basle there are fees to the amount of $4,103, and at Zurich to the amount of $4,993, there are at St. Galle fees to the amount of $4,582. The committee propose to pay the consuls at Basle and Zurich $2,000 each, while the consul at St. Galle is permitted to collect and put into his own pocket the sum of $4,582. I ask them upon what principle they have made that distinction? I ask them why St. Galle is so much more important a position than Basle or Zurich? If economy is to rule, we should make these consuls doing a like amount of business similar as to the salaries they receive.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. What does the gentleman from Ohio mean by saying that this consul puts that amount into his own pocket?

Mr. NEAL. According to the report of the Fifth Auditor, he receives all the fees he collects.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let us vote.

Mr. NEAL. I did not hear the gentleman. Does he say it is not so?

The question being taken on Mr. NEAL'S amendment, there were—ayes 10, noes 45.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read, under "class 5," the following:

TURKISH DOMINIONS.

Beirut.

Mr. COX, of New York. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "Beirut" insert the word "Jerusalem."

This amendment will add $500 to the salary of the consul at Jerusalem; that is all.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not call for a division.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That amendment increases the salary from $1,500 to $2,000.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to say one word, as the gentleman from Indiana has called for a division. The population has increased there——

Several MEMBERS. We will vote for it.

Mr. COX, of New York. All right; I can give reasons for it.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 37, noes 22.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following under "class 6, at $1,500 per annum:"

GREAT BRITAIN.

Bristol; Newcastle; Auckland; Gibraltar; Cape Town; Saint Helena; Charlottetown, (Prince Edward Island;) Port Stanley; Clifton; Pictou; Winnepeg; Mahé; Kingston, (Canada;) Prescott; Port Sarnia; Quebec; Saint John's, (Canada;) Barbadoes; Bermuda; Fort Erie; Goderich, (Canada West;) Windsor, (Canada West;) Southampton; Ottawa; Ceylon.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I offer the following amendment:

At the end of line 183 insert "Antigua."

This is recommended by the State Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UPSON. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HISCOCK. I appeal to the gentleman to withhold that motion. Let us read the bill through.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It will take only a few moments to complete it.

Mr. UPSON. I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read the following under "class 6:"

TURKISH DOMINIONS.

Jerusalem.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that those two lines be stricken out, this consulship having been provided for by the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

The motion to strike out the clause was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For salaries and expenses of the United States and Spanish claims commission, namely: For commissioner, $3,000; for counsel, $3,000; for secretary, $900; for messenger, $300; for translation, stationery, and other contingent expenses, $750; making, in all, the sum of $7,950.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to ask the Committee on Appropriations when we are to get done with the expenses of this commission?

Mr. COX, of New York. This is paid for by Spain but has to be appropriated for by us.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. And the work will be completed this year.

Mr. COX, of New York. It does not cost us anything.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For relief and protection of American seaman in foreign countries, $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 311 add the following:

"And the consent of the United States is hereby given to the imposition by any State in the ports whereof emigrant passengers are or may be landed, of a tax not exceeding $1 for each emigrant so landed, and the money thus collected may be retained by the State imposing such tax, and shall be applied solely to defray the expenses incurred by the said State, under the laws thereof, for the care, relief, or support of emigrants landed in the ports thereof."

Mr. ATKINS. That is right.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, if no objection is made to the amendment, I do not desire to speak in support of it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I ask that the amendment may be again read. We could not hear it.

Mr. McCOOK. Before the amendment is read again I hope the committee will be in order, as it is an amendment of very great importance.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be read until the committee come to order.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that amendment is subject to a point of order. It may be germane to the subject-matter of the bill, but it has nothing to do with the question of expenditure. It is independent legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HORR. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw the point of order. This same subject has been before the Committee on Commerce, and a bill has been reported unanimously to the House covering this same idea, and it is right. The gentleman from New York is simply in the line of humanity in offering this amendment, and I hope from this side of the House and from the other no objection will be made to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will be very glad if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] will show how it comports with the duty of the United States to impose a tax on immigrants coming to our shores who are virtually invited to come here.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will answer my friend from Indiana by saying that efforts have been made in this House for the last six or eight years, to pass some law by which this enormous immigration which comes to this country, half a million a year, shall be cared for. It has been done heretofore by New York State. It has been exclusively done by its appropriation of its own money. Such an appropriation is an unfair tax on a State which secures but a small share of the immigration. It will be borne no more. A small sum for this year, and that will end it. Chaos will come again, and Castle Garden and its great uses will be lost. The shark will again, as thirty years ago, prey on the defenseless immigrant.

The Supreme Court of the United States decided that as the capitation tax, or head money, fell under the head of commerce, the taxation imposed by the State of New York for this purpose was unconstitutional and void. It should be a Federal exaction or not at all. Therefore, in order to maintain Castle Garden as the entrepot and guardian of the immigrant, in order to protect the poor, destitute and sick who come to this country from abroad, and in order to return the paupers and criminals sent us, in order to prevent diseases from being scattered over the whole country with their contagion, to provide that which would otherwise be uncared for, we are compelled to come to Congress and seek relief. Give us, if not this measure, some system which will enable us to be self-protective, just and kind to these immigrants.

There is no more simple or humane plan than that of my colleague, [Mr. HEWITT.] I confess that I have no hope of a more elaborate plan. On this occasion we may signalize our sense of the duty we owe to the great influx of the brawn and brain which comes to us by adoption of his amendment. I think there will be no more complaints, just or unjust, which emanate from the New York Legislature as to the dereliction of our New York Congressmen.

I have seen such unreasonable complaints. As most of the efforts have been made by myself, fruitlessly thus far, but faithfully always, I desire, Mr. Chairman, to repel the slanders of a New York member of the Legislature, which I see reported in the Herald. This member of the Legislature is a Mr. Benedict. He has been greatly misinformed. To show his injustice to the delegation here, let me quote what he said in his carefully prepared remarks:

"It is not the great question of national immigration, but whether the State of New York shall continue to expend from her treasury $200,000 or more yearly to maintain a vast steamship and railroad office for the benefit of foreign companies and corporations, and mainly for other States, and to receive as charity patients the sick, lame, blind, and insane alien paupers who are shipped with systematic regularity and landed on our shores by the agents of steamship and railroad companies to become a public charge on the State treasury or a burden on the several counties of the State." Mr. Benedict argued that a refusal by the Legislature to appropriate further moneys would compel Congress to take action, the expenses incident to immigration being clearly a proper charge on the whole country. He charged that the commissioners of immigration had failed to do their duty in urging Congressional action because it would conflict with their own interests, their tenure of office being at stake. He charged a like remissness on the part of New York's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

In vindication of our labors here let me say, Mr. Chairman, that it is grossly untrue that "the commissioners of emigration failed to do their duty in urging Congressional action, because it would conflict with their own interests, their tenure of office being at stake." As it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the Representatives from this State, and the commissioners of emigration have done all that lay in their power to obtain national legislation. The failure is attributable in part to adverse action by gentlemen from other States, who would not consider the gravity of the questions and the fairness of the requests of New York. My report on this head is a carefully digested statement of the question, in all the length and breadth of its emergencies and needs.

To show the groundlessness of this assemblyman's charge let me refer to the history of the legislation here proposed. That history is as follows: the Legislature of New York, on the 29th of April, 1876, adopted a resolution directing the commissioners to bring to the notice of Congress the condition of the immigration laws arising out of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States declaring them unconstitutional. After consultation and correspondence with the boards of charities of other States a bill was agreed on and introduced by myself in the House of Representatives on July 7, 1876, (H. R. 3853.) On my motion, the memorial of the board was on the same day received and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. A similar bill was on same date introduced in the Senate by Senator Conkling. The bill introduced by me was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and Commissioners Quintard, Lynch, and Mauger appeared before the committee and asked its passage. The bill was reported with amendments on January 16, 1877, and recommitted. On the 13th of December, 1878, arguments in its favor were submitted by myself and the late Hon. Clarkson N. Potter. Mr. Jackson, the intelligent secretary of the board, was present at the hearing, giving us aid and counsel out of his abundant experience. I urged, as earnestly as possible, speedy action on the measure. This bill was, however, not passed, but from no fault here or at Castle Garden. A second bill was prepared by the commissioners, and with the memorial of the board was presented by me on the 2d day of December, 1879, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I was chairman. The bill was promptly reported back to the House (December 17) with a favorable report. On February 24, 1880, Mr. John E. Develin, counsel to the board, came here to urge the passage of the bill. The bill was considered April 22, 1880. It was a night session, the only hearing I could get. I solicited my colleagues of both parties to aid me; they responded. Morton presented the case in a carefully prepared speech; the RECORD will show it. Other members, including myself, urged with all the earnestness we could command the passage of the bill, showing our helplessness under the decision of the United States Supreme Court. Our arguments were not answered. Sectional prejudice west and south was aroused, and we failed. The bill introduced was elaborate in its provisions and just to all the States. It was entitled a bill "to regulate immigration." It was submitted to and approved by the entire New York delegation in the Forty-fifth Congress. It had the approval of the immigration commissioners.

I believe, sir, that the present mode suggested by my colleague, [Mr. HEWITT,] even if obnoxious to the point of order, if not the best possible, will answer equitably and humanely. I hope it will be presented in some shape and soon, as the matter is urgent and the object great.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HORR. Is the point of order withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is still pending.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Then let the point of order be decided.

Mr. McCOOK. Is the Chair going to decide the point of order now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not decide it now, if any gentleman desires to be heard upon it.

Mr. McCOOK. I desire to be heard a minute or two, but not especially upon the point of order. I desire to say a few words in regard to what I believe to be the necessity and the propriety for the immediate passage of just such an amendment as this.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Let my amendment be read, and the gentleman can speak to the whole of it.

Mr. McCOOK. The gentleman from New York, my colleague, [Mr. COX,] has not exaggerated in the slightest degree the facts that call for my colleague's [Mr. HEWITT's] amendment. If gentlemen here had ever seen or obtained any knowledge whatever of the infamous system which prevailed in the city of New York prior to the one which of late years has been in operation there, a system by which immigrants arriving there unfamiliar with our customs, a large majority of them unable to speak our language, became the prey of every shark and sharper in that great city, and then could see the manner in which they are now cared for and sent from that city all over the great West, (for not 1 per cent. of them stay in the city of New York,) their money and effects cared for, their persons properly looked after, I am sure there would be no opposition to this amendment. And there certainly should not be any opposition to this amendment, when I state, as my colleague has stated, that the whole burden and expense of caring for the 500,000 immigrants that annually land in the port of New York will be thrown solely upon that State if it is not adopted. Yet New York does not appeal to the Congress of the United States for charity. Whenever the people of any section of this country have suffered from any great disaster, the first to whom appeals are made for assistance are the merchants and capitalists and people of New York, and never has there been such an appeal made to the people of that city which has not been fully and most generously met. It is not necessary for me now to refer to the many instances of that kind.

We come here now simply asking for justice. We ask that the burden of caring for the 500,000 or 600,000 immigrants that yearly land at that port shall not be thrown on the State of New York alone. I do not believe that 5 per cent. of all the immigrants that land at the port of New York remain in that State. And I simply repeat myself when I say that it is for the benefit of the great and growing States of the West that we of New York ask this action by Congress; they will become citizens of those States, who will receive the benefit of the amendment.

Mr. HOUSE. I think it is apparent that we cannot get through with this bill this evening.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Let my amendment be read.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. We can complete this bill in a short time.

Mr. HOUSE. It is now five o'clock.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] be read again.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to let the committee rise.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I think we can get through with this bill to-day.

Mr. ATKINS. You cannot complete it to-night.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let us dispose of the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] submits an amendment to the bill, upon which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes the point of order that it is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill and does not upon its face reduce existing expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that it is independent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. And that it is independent legislation. The Chair recognizes the importance of the amendment. The committee have heard the remarks of gentlemen in regard to it, and the Chair needs to add nothing to what has been said. The Chair prefers that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana shall be decided by the committee, and will therefore submit to the committee the question whether the point of order so raised shall be sustained or not.

The question being taken on sustaining the point of order, there were—ayes 66, noes 42.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for tellers upon this question.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. ATKINS. Gentlemen on the other side will not make anything by refusing to allow the committee to rise.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I do not "refuse" anything; but as business men we can just as well as not finish this bill in fifteen minutes. We do not ask that a vote be taken to-night on the passage of the bill, but simply that we may get it out of committee and order the previous question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] that the committee rise.

Mr. ROBESON. We can finish the bill in five minutes.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MILLS, there were—ayes 49, noes 62.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the next paragraph of the bill, when

Mr. COBB said: Mr. Chairman, I insist that no quorum has voted. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. A quorum is not necessary on the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to know what has become of my call for tellers on deciding the point of order. If gentlemen will agree to give us a vote in House, I will be content.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. There will be no objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I object, unless my amendment can be read and a vote taken on it.

Mr. COBB. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. When a vote is taken in committee, and the question of a quorum is raised, is it not necessary that the Chair shall order tellers, if no quorum has voted?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary that a quorum should vote on a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. COBB. I understand that it is not necessary, unless the point as to the absence of a quorum is made; but when it is made, I submit it then becomes the duty of the committee to decide the question by tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Not upon a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. COBB. Well, I move that the committee now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that before the question was put on the motion of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] had demanded tellers. Does the gentleman withdraw that demand?

Mr. COX, of New York. In this matter I would like to defer to my colleague, [Mr. HEWITT,] who introduced the amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I would like to have tellers, but I confess frankly that I suppose the proposition is in truth subject to the point of order, and if gentlemen will make it I am not disposed to take up the time of the committee upon the question, but will try to bring it up in some other form hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] moves that the committee rise.

The question being taken, the motion was declared not agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the committee refused to rise.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If no separate vote be demanded, the question will be taken in gross upon the several amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union were agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I now move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it understood that the first business on next Monday will be the vote upon the passage of this bill?

The SPEAKER. That is undoubtedly the practice and the rule.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments, from the Committee on Civil Service Reform, the bill (H. R. No. 4467) for the judicial ascertainment of the facts in cases of private claims, and for other purposes; which was placed on the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed with the amendments.

LEWIS JOHNSON & CO.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4790) for the relief of Lewis Johnson & Co.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2192) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARNER, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. BUCK, until March 9, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILSON, on Monday next, on account of the sickness of a relative.

To Mr. CABELL, for three days from Monday next.

To Mr. HOGE, until Wednesday next, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, (at five o'clock and eighteen minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: The remonstrance of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis and the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh against any change in the present general bridge law of the Ohio River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BAYNE: The resolution of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Philadelphia, requesting the prompt abolition of the tax on tobacco or the passage of a resolution that it is unwise and impolitic to tamper with said tax during the present Congress—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of ex-soldiers of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, for the early passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1440) for the establishment of a soldiers' home at Erie, Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BINGHAM: The resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Marine Underwriters and the resolutions of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, urging the passage of a bill to increase the efficiency of the United States Signal-Service Corps—severally to the same committee.

Also, the petition of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the first Congressional district of Pennsylvania, urging the passage of the bill to establish a soldiers' home at Erie, Pennsylvania—to the same committee.

Also, the resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Philadelphia, asking Congress to take some action in the nature of a protest against the treatment of the Jews of Russia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the resolutions of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Philadelphia, asking Congress to take prompt action in disposing of the question of abolishing the tax on tobacco and cigars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRIGGS: Memorial of Thomas H. Rogers and other soldiers who served during the late rebellion, requesting the passage of a law authorizing the payment of the balance of bounty due to them—to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. CARPENTER: The petition of citizens of Buena Vista County, Iowa, asking that the same privileges and encouragement be given to the building of railway bridges above Omaha as have heretofore been given below that city—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CLARDY: The resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, approving the laws in relation to the building of bridges across the Ohio River, and protesting against any change or amendment of such laws—to the same committee.

By Mr. CURTIN: The petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill to establish a soldiers' home at Erie, Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ERRETT: The petitions of citizens of Allegheny County, and of Post 199, Grand Army of the Republic, of Turtle Creek, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1440) to establish a soldiers' home at Erie, Pennsylvania—to the same committee.

Also, the report of the committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Saint Louis, Missouri, relative to building bridges over the Ohio River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GARRISON: The petition of certain citizens of Virginia, for dredging the mouth of Piscataway Creek—to the same committee.

By Mr. GEORGE: The petitions of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, of the fish packers and dealers of the Columbia River, Oregon, and of the Oregon and Washington Fish Propagating Company, relative to salmon hatching on the Clackamas River—severally to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, the petition of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, in opposition to the adoption of the French metric system—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the resolution of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, against the forfeiture of the Northern Pacific Railroad grant—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH: The petition of Mary H. Noonan, widow of Cornelius Noonan, for compensation for rent and injury of dwelling-house in New Orleans, Louisiana—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HATCH: Memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Missouri, relative to building bridges across the Ohio River and other navigable streams—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HUTCHINS: The petition of 40 citizens of Yonkers, New York, for the repeal of the tax on bank deposits and the two-cent stamp on bank checks and drafts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LORD: The petition of 70 citizens of Michigan, for reduction of the tax on cigars—to the same committee.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of Thomas E. Moore, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late rebellion—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NOLAN: Papers relating to the pension claim of John H. O'Brien, of Troy, New York—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAY: The petition of R. F. Carter and 30 others, praying for legislation to regulate charges for railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of W. P. Barwell, asking that the value of certain tobacco be refunded to him—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 6, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 24, 1882, information relative to the cost of Indian wars during the past ten years; which, on motion of Mr. HOAR, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Benjamin Clark and others, citizens of Bradford County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a bill granting pensions to late Union soldiers who were confined in so-called confederate prisons during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of E. A. Barnes and others, citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the McKinley bill, fixing the rate of duty on manufactures of iron; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of citizens of Lee County, Texas, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of A. Cordson, of Franklin County, Florida, praying compensation for property destroyed by United States naval forces at Appalachicola, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa, praying Congress to provide for the construction of a bridge at or near Omaha. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Whereas the development of the northwest portion of our State will be greatly promoted by the construction of bridges over the Missouri River above Omaha in aid of interstate trade and commerce by railroad: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate, (the House concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to vote for and to use their active influence to procure appropriate legislation by Congress to authorize the construction of railroad and highway bridges in aid of the above-mentioned object over said Missouri River, in Iowa, above Omaha, upon terms and with privileges equal to those already granted by Congress for bridges at and below Omaha.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, instructed to transmit a copy hereof to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved March 2, 1882.

STATE OF IOWA, Office Secretary of State:

I, J. A. T. Hull, secretary of state of the State of Iowa, hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct copy of a concurrent resolution of the nineteenth General Assembly on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State, at Des Moines, this 2d day of March, A. D. 1882.

[SEAL.] J. A. T. HULL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a memorial of the board of city trustees and Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, California, in favor of the forfeiture of the land grant to the Texas Pacific Railway Company, within the State of California; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of California, praying for legislation to suppress polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROWN. I present the petition of William M. Wadley, president of the Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia, and numerous other citizens of that State, praying for an adequate appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Savannah, where there is now a very rapidly growing commerce. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a memorial on behalf of certain officials and citizens of the State of Kansas concerning the non-taxability of lands heretofore granted to railroad companies. Inasmuch as a bill in reference to the subject is before the Committee on the Judiciary, I move that the memorial be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I received a copy of the resolutions and memorial which have just been presented by my colleague, and supposing that the presentation of one copy is sufficient, I move that the copy I have lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a memorial of the Saint Louis Cotton Exchange, in favor of an increase of the Signal Service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, remonstrating against any change of the present bridge law; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 80) in behalf of the American Company of Revisers of the New Testament for return and remission of duties, to report it favorably, and I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate consent to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time?

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to object to this measure, but I give notice that hereafter I shall object to this class of bills or any other being taken up when reported from a committee. We have on the Calendar a great many other measures of equal importance which have not been reached and which will not be reached this session if we go on in this way. I propose that we shall go to the Calendar, and no matter what measure hereafter may be called up for final action, when it is reported, I shall object to its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (S. No. 199) to establish a branch mint of the United States at Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, adversely, and I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope the bill will go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar at the request of the Senator from Nebraska, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the same committee to report adversely upon the bill (S. No. 10) to authorize the payment of customs duties in legal-tender notes, and unless the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] prefers to have it placed on the Calendar I shall ask for the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. BECK. That is an adverse report by a majority of the committee. I desire to have the bill placed on the Calendar, as I expect to call it up at a very early day and test the sense of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Chester County, Pennsylvania, in favor of Congressional action to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to repeal discriminating duties on tea and coffee, the products of the possessions of the Netherlands, to report it favorably; and as it is a brief bill, and as it will take less time to pass it now than at a future period perhaps, as there can be no objection to it, I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. BECK. I would rather it should go upon the Calendar. I do not think we can put a tax on nothing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom this subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1384) for the relief of C. B. Bryan & Co., of Memphis, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 779) to provide for the bringing of suits by citizens of the United States against the Government thereof in certain cases, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a message of the President of the United States, embodying a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, printed as House of Representatives Executive Document No. 38, in relation to additional room for the Pension Office and the General Land, Patent, and Indian Offices, ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with the statement that the Committee on Public Lands are advised that there is great necessity for additional room for the General Land Office, and they commend it to the consideration of that committee.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1162) to amend section 2343 of the Revised Statutes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 475) for the relief of A. A. Thomas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1382) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. I give notice that as soon as the pending business is disposed of, and other measures to which the attention of the Senate has been called are out of the way, I shall move the consideration of the bill just reported.

Mr. HOAR. While I take as much interest in this measure as any Senator possibly can, and the people whom I represent, like other commercial and manufacturing people, have very much interest in it, I suppose the Senator from Kansas will not antagonize the Presidential count bill, which I hope will be disposed of at an early day.

Mr. INGALLS. I said that as soon as the pending business and other measures to which the attention of the Senate has been called are out of the way I shall press the bill which I have just reported.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kansas be kind enough to state to the Senate which of the various measures on the subject it is which he has reported?

Mr. INGALLS. It is an original bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, embodying what is commonly known as the equity system, conferring jurisdiction upon the district courts of the United States to hear matters in bankruptcy upon petition.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4283) for the relief of Susan Marshall Massie, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BECK. This is a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a check which has been lost to the widow of a pensioner, on making full proof and giving bond. The pension was issued and the check was sent, but lost in the mails, and being over a thousand dollars—thirteen hundred dollars and something—it cannot be paid without the action of Congress. She needs it very much, and it will not take a minute, I think, to pass the bill. If the amount had been less than a thousand dollars, it would have been put through the Department without coming to Congress. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I think we had better let it go with the others, and take it up in its order.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 802) granting a pension to Mrs. Cornelia F. White, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1212) for the relief of Catherine Phillips, submitted an adverse report, which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 771) granting a pension to Laura C. P. Haskins, submitted an adverse report, which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably the bill (S. No. 430) to incorporate the Interoceanic Ship Railway Company, and for other purposes, with certain amendments. Accompanying the bill is the written report of the committee, with the evidence taken before the committee. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar, and that the amendments and evidence be printed for the use of the Senate with the report. I give notice now that after the disposition of the pending order and of other orders before the Senate, I shall ask, if the time is opportune, that on Wednesday a week the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. COKE. I desire to state that, as a member of the Committe on Commerce, I agreed that the bill should be reported, reserving to myself, however, the right in the Senate to act upon it as my best judgment shall dictate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the accompanying report and statements will be printed.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1383) to provide for the erection of a public building at Montpelier, Vermont, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1361) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rent for a term of years the building at the southwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Thirteenth street northwest, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 725) granting a pension to S. Annie Esterbrook, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4449) granting a pension to Lucretia R. Garfield, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 248) for the relief of Mary P. Abeel, have directed me to submit an adverse report, and recommend its indefinite postponement. The Senator from New Hampshire desires to present the views of the minority of the committee.

Mr. BLAIR. I beg leave to present the views of the minority, and ask that they be printed in connection with the majority report.

Mr. PLATT. The bill will go upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar, and the report printed, and the views of the minority will be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 219) for the relief of Rebecca Wright, widow of James Wright, a soldier of the war of 1812, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 952) granting a pension to Theodore Rauthe, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 581) granting a pension to Riley H. Smith, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 918) granting a pension to William Nichols, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 240) granting an increase of pension to Henry Strawbridge, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1385) for the relief of William A. Courtenay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1386) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point at or near the city of Jefferson, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1387) for the relief of Hensman Wiseman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1388) for the relief of J. J. Murphy; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BECK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1389) to establish the eastern judicial district of Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GEORGE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1390) to aid in the repair and construction of levees on the east bank of the Mississippi River, in the State of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1391) to revive the grant of lands made to the State of Mississippi to aid in constructing a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. McMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1392) to provide for the removal of obstructions to the free navigation of the navigable waters of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1393) for the relief of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1394) relating to the public lands of the United States, and to require payment of costs in certain cases of trespass or conversion of material therefrom; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on public Lands.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1395) to restore to market and sale certain lands of the United States in the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, and to authorize their sale subject to the right of flowage; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1396) relating to the public lands of the United States, and amendatory of an act entitled "An act relating to the public lands of the United States," approved June 15, 1880, and confirming certain sales made thereunder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1397) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen J. Brosman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair.) My colleague, [Mr. LOGAN,] who is unable to be in attendance to-day in the Senate, has prepared a bill and sent it to me with the request that it be presented, which I ask leave to introduce for him.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1398) to provide for the construction of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, and to cheapen transportation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAYARD asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1399) to repeal section 3224 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4185) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for filling treaty stipulations, &c., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. JOHNSTON. On Friday last I introduced a bill (S. No. 1377) for the relief of W. S. Kimball and others, which should have been referred to the Committee on Finance, but it was referred to the Committee on Claims. I move that the reference be changed and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, it was Ordered, That Charles L. Denman have leave, under the rules, to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his case that were laid before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Forty-sixth Congress.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. GARLAND. I submit a resolution which I ask may be considered at this time.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the necessity and propriety of increasing the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores to aid in the relief of the laboring classes in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries made under and by Senate resolution passed February 23, 1882, and report by bill or otherwise.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to make a remark in explanation of the resolution. It is simply one of inquiry addressed to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Last Thursday a week ago there was a joint resolution passed making an appropriation of $100,000 for the purposes indicated in the resolution. It was a case of emergency, and immediate action had to be taken. The committee, as best advised then, thought that $100,000 would possibly be sufficient. It was sufficient, from all the information I get, by way of a beginning to rescue these suffering people from absolute want, and, in many instances, from starvation. Since the passage of that joint resolution, however, I have received information from many sources which convinces me that that appropriation will not be sufficient. The overflow continues, the rising of the waters continues, and the suffering really is beyond estimate even at this time.

I have telegrams and letters from different persons stating these facts, under which I have felt it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to this matter. I hold now in my hand a letter from the governor of Arkansas, which I shall lay before the committee for its information. It is not necessary to have it read. I hope the committee will take the subject-matter in hand immediately and make the necessary inquiry and report some additional relief for these persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter and other papers referred to by the Senator from Arkansas will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, in connection with the resolution.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 4th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 58) for the relief of William H. Gill;

An act (S. No. 1046) for the relief of the Eastern Shawnee Indians at Quapaw agency, Indian Territory; and

An act (S. No. 1211) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Galveston Harbor, State of Texas.

ANN M. PAULDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the morning hour is declared ended and proceedings under the Anthony rule are in order. The Secretary will read the first bill in order.

The bill (S. No. 64) to amend an act granting a pension to Ann M. Paulding, widow of Rear-Admiral Paulding, was announced as first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was reported adversely by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY. The adverse report was made, I think, by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was.

Mr. HAWLEY. I asked that the bill be placed on the Calendar. I did that under a misapprehension as to what was the character of the bill. Mrs. Paulding has a pension, and this is a bill for some arrears. I do not feel disposed to contest the report of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection. Let it take whatever course the Senator from Oregon desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator from Oregon wish?

Mr. SLATER. I have no particular request to make in regard to the matter. The bill was put upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee. I ask that it be indefinitely postponed, unless the Senator desires further action on it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Whatever the Senator from Oregon desires I have no objection to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, there being no objection.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. FRYE. I see by reading the proceedings of last Friday that the bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic was passed over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] as he stated, on account of my absence. That being so, I should like to have that bill taken up now in its order and disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in order.

Mr. INGALLS. That bill has been read but once, and it therefore is not on the Calendar for consideration under the Anthony rule. It can be read the second time and referred, but it cannot be considered under the rule we are now acting under.

Mr. CONGER. The bill was introduced and placed on the Calendar for the action of the Senate. The question of referring it to a committee was discussed, and it was proposed to take action in the Senate upon it without a reference. I do not know that I am right in stating the fact, but by the suggestion of some Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has never received the report of a committee, and the Chair is of opinion with the Senator from Kansas that the rule operates upon cases that have been reported from committees. This bill was read the first time and laid on the table to be considered and discussed.

Mr. CONGER. The bill was placed on the Calendar under the rules of the Senate. I understand the Anthony rule to apply to bills on the Calendar, and I should be sorry to have a construction that would throw out a bill which has its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill can be taken up and read the second time.

Mr. CONGER. Whatever will move it forward I should be very glad to have done.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read the second time.

The bill was read the second time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill be read at length?

Mr. TELLER. I suppose it is not necessary to read the bill through. Let it be referred to some committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Michigan have it referred?

Mr. CONGER. Such bills, I understand, have been referred to the Committee on Finance time out of mind. I speak of action in former sessions when I had no responsibility, not being a member of the Senate, but I understand such bills have remained there until the close of session after session of the Senate.

It was thought by the friends of this measure that a matter of such importance, on which we could not get a report from a committee, might be taken up in the Senate and acted upon. From the conversation in the Senate at the time the design was that the bill should not be referred to a committee, but should be placed on the Calendar. The bill was placed on the Calendar, and it has its place there now.

Unless some gentleman desires to take the responsibility of showing either by word or work that this is a bill which must be objected to every time it comes up, and take the responsibility of refusing the petition of a hundred thousand people of the United States for its consideration, I hope it may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is up for consideration, and any disposition can be made of it. A motion to refer will be entertained, and if that is voted down any other disposition can be made of it.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Michigan seemed to be addressing himself to me, as he was looking this way. I have no objection to the bill being considered on account of the subject-matter; I am heartily in accord with that. I shall vote for the bill, as I understand it, on every possible occasion; but I do not know that there is any special reason why this bill, because it commends itself to me and the Senator from Michigan as a very good bill, should not run the gauntlet of the appropriate committee like all other bills. I do not believe the bill ought to be taken up and discussed under the five-minute rule, but I shall not interpose any objection under the circumstances to a bill which I believe ought to pass.

Mr. CONGER. I hope then the Senate may act upon it now.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not quite understand the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. My remark was made so that there might be explanations of it, for which I wait.

Mr. ALLISON. The chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. MORRILL] is not present at this moment. My recollection is that this matter has been several times referred to that committee and several times reported from the committee. I remember a year or two ago that we had a long debate upon this identical question, and my recollection is that the bill passed the Senate. I think such a bill has passed the Senate twice, if I am not mistaken.

I do not quite understand why the Senator from Michigan should assume that the Committee on Finance would not take up this question and consider it if referred to them. I do not want it referred to them. If they would not, I would suggest that a select committee be raised, of which the Senator from Michigan would be an excellent chairman, to consider this question. I suppose I am for the general features of the bill. I do not know what they are, as I have not had the opportunity of examining them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa move a reference of the bill to a select committee?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; I do not move that, because I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Michigan. I am ready to go on with the bill now, if he prefers that; but I only wanted to call his attention to the fact that the Committee on Finance have had the bill under consideration from time to time, and have reported it, and it has been debated in the Senate, and passed the Senate certainly once, if not twice.

Mr. CONGER. I have been misinformed, then. I heard a remark that that committee had not reported the bill and that there was no use of sending it there. I may have been mistaken. At any rate the bill has been discussed in the Senate heretofore, and those Senators who desire to examine it have had the opportunity; and there is no reason now why it should not be taken up and passed, if it is proper to pass it at all.

Mr. FRYE. I will state what I understand to be the position of this bill. A motion was made and entered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] for a select committee to take into consideration the petitions, orders, and bills touching the alcoholic liquor traffic. That motion or order has been called up once or twice and then postponed. This bill was reported by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and placed upon the Calendar, as all the bills, resolutions, and petitions touching the same subject are now on the table of the President of the Senate awaiting the appointment of that special committee. If the motion of the Senator from Mississippi can be acted upon at the present time, it certainly would hasten to some end this matter, and relieve the Senate from the petitions and bills on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to refer the bill to a select committee and reach the subject in that way, and then everything that lies upon the table can be referred to that committee. This is a bill which the Senator from Michigan introduced. He did not report it from a committee; he introduced it himself as an original proposition. The Senator can now move to refer it to a select committee.

Mr. FRYE. No; the select committee has not been appointed; three or four weeks have passed since the motion was entered, and I am afraid it will not be appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can test that now by moving that the bill be referred to a select committee.

Mr. INGALLS. To be hereafter appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A select committee to be appointed.

Mr. FRYE. The subject is thoroughly understood by the Senate. It is true, as was stated by the Senator from Iowa, that the Finance Committee has reported a similar bill heretofore in the Senate, and it has heretofore passed the Senate, I think twice. I see no reason why the test may not be taken upon the bill itself, and save all further trouble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think a reference of the bill is at all necessary. When the bill shall have been read, every Senator will have formed his mind upon it. I see no reason why it should not be put upon its passage.

I believe myself that if a commission organized as provided for in the bill, selected by the President and confirmed by the Senate, would examine into and report upon this subject, it would be of vast benefit to the people of the United States. Anything that promotes good order and temperance, as a matter of course, is beneficial to the whole country. I have no doubt that a commission organized under this measure might be able to present statistics and information that would be of great value. After all, the legislation is not of a very practical character, but it might tend to lay the foundation of beneficial measures both by the United States and by the several States.

I hope, therefore, the bill will be read at length; and I am ready to vote for it with great pleasure, and I hope it will pass. There is no necessity for a reference of the bill to a committee. There is not a single thing in it that a committee could inquire or ascertain about. Indeed, the purpose of the bill itself is to organize a commission of disinterested persons outside of Congress, who will take up the subject and do what a committee ordinarily would do on a question of this kind. I hope, therefore, the bill will pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire the bill to be read at length?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask to have it read at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any other Senator desire to have the bill read?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire that it may be read. I want to see whether it is the bill we passed before.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask what committee that is reported by?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is reported by no committee. It is a bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. BAYARD. Then I move its reference to the Committee on Finance, for there is a side of this question of a very important character, touching the public revenues, that certainly should be considered in connection with a measure of this kind. I may say that heretofore a similar bill in other Congresses has been sent to the Committee on Finance as the proper place for its consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know that I have any objection to the adoption of this or some similar measure, but the Senate evidently is not prepared to consider it at this time without debate. As the rules require that the three readings of a bill shall be on separate days, unless by unanimous consent, I ask that the bill may go over for further consideration to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over until to-morrow and be taken up then.

Mr. CONGER. I hope——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under the rule that the three readings must be on separate days. The motion of the Senator from Delaware will be entered. The bill will be called up the first thing in the morning.

CAROLINE TRECKELL.

The bill (S. No. 715) granting a pension to Caroline Treckell was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is reported adversely from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB. There are some facts in that case which I think the Committee on Pensions did not have, which I presume I shall be able to get in a short time. I ask, therefore, that the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done, if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 429) to provide for holding a term of the district court of the United States at Wichita, Kansas, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 797) for the government and control of the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Lake Huron, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 1014) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens;

A bill (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of John B. Trainer;

A bill (H. R. No. 1136) for the relief of John H. Morris;

A bill (H. R. No. 2141) granting a pension to Martha A. Lewis;

A bill (H. R. No. 2756) to settle the claim of the heirs of the late Colonel Stephen H. Long, of the United States Topographical Engineers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3549) granting a pension to Mary C. Murray; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2192) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado;

A bill (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

H. A. MYERS.

The bill (S. No. 472) for the relief of H. A. Myers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the Paymaster-General of the Army to cause to be paid to H. A. Myers, late a private in the Eleventh Kansas Volunteers, a sum that shall be equal to the pay of a private soldier from the 17th of September, 1862, to the date of his discharge from the service of the United States, deducting therefrom any amount that may have been paid to him as such private soldier, and any amount that may be due from him to the Government.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be read.

Mr. PLUMB. I can state in a moment the facts in that case. They are within my personal knowledge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is very short.

Mr. PLUMB. Perhaps the report had better be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. LOGAN January 24, 1882:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 472) for the relief of H. A. Myers, having had the same under consideration, adopt the report of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate of the Forty-sixth Congress, which is as follows:

Hiram A. Myers was enrolled and mustered in, September 17, 1862, as private in Company D, Eleventh Kansas Cavalry, and served honorably to July 7, 1864. The muster-out roll of his company, dated September 13, 1865, says:

"This man enlisted in good faith, and served faithfully as a soldier from enlistment to July 7, 1864. His old enlistment papers were lost, new ones were made out, and upon examination he was rejected by T. Sinks, surgeon, board of examiners of district N, Kansas, July 7, 1864, when he was dropped from the company rolls. There is due him for use and risk of horse and equipments from date of last payment to June 20, 1864, and he is indebted to the United States for horse equipments $31. He was last paid by Major Bowen to February 29, 1864."

The Adjutant-General says:

"There would appear to be no objection to this bill becoming a law."

The Secretary of War, in his letter to the committee touching this case, says:

"The legislation proposed by Senate bill 160 is approved by this Department."

Your committee, therefore, upon examining all the facts in the case, recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES O'CONNOR.

The bill (S. No. 273) granting a pension to James O'Connor was announced as next in order upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] has made an adverse report on this bill. Unless some Senator desires to call it up hereafter, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I trust that action will not be taken postponing the bill indefinitely. The committee reported it adversely solely on the ground that the Commissioner of Pensions had opened the case and was reconsidering it. Let it remain on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over and retain its place on the Calendar.

HARRODSBURGH SOLDIERS' HOME.

The bill (S. No. 506) authorizing the board of commissioners of the soldiers' home to sell certain property at Harrodsburgh, Kentucky, belonging to the soldiers' home, was announced as next in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. In the absence of my colleague, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] who introduced the bill, and of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] who reported it, I ask that it be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, if there be no objection.

ELIZABETH WIRT GOLDSBOROUGH.

The bill (S. No. 743) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Goldsborough, and pay her a pension of $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA SCHELL.

The bill (S. No. 722) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma Schell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Emma Schell, widow of Christian Schell, late of Company M, Forty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and afterward transferred to the Third Indiana Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. That bill, in accordance with the uniform custom and practice of the Senate, should be amended by adding the words "and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act." I suggest that to the Senator from Colorado who is chairman of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. There is no objection to that amendment if anybody desires it, but the Pension Office, as I understand, has construed laws of this character as only authorizing it to pay from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. INGALLS. But, inasmuch as nearly all of these bills contain that provision, it ought to be introduced here.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection, if it is desired.

Mr. INGALLS. I move the amendment, to insert at the end of the bill:

And pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIQUOR PROHIBITION.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 29) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in relation to the manufacture, importation, and sale of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. PLUMB. That resolution was introduced by me at the request of a large number of people, pending action of the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. GEORGE,] creating a committee to consider that question. I will now ask that it be read the second time and lie upon the table awaiting that reference.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will now go to the table.

RANCHO DE NAPA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 801) authorizing claimants to the Rancho de Napa, in Napa County, California, to prove up their title; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, before the word "lands," to insert the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "rancho," in line 5, to insert "and whose claims or those of their predecessors in title have not been hitherto passed upon by proper authority;" so as to read:

That the claimants to the lands situated in Napa County, California, known as the Rancho de Napa, who deraign title through the original Mexican grantee of said rancho, and whose claims or those of their predecessors in title have not been hitherto passed upon by proper authority, are hereby permitted and authorized to present their claim to said lands to the district court of the United States for the district of California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "California," in line 10, to insert "within one year next after the passage of this act, and not afterward."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 14, after the word "cases," to insert "and that the claimants are entitled to have such confirmation;" so as to read:

And if upon the hearing of said case it shall appear to said court that the claim of the original grantee was good and valid under Mexican laws relating to such cases, and that the claimants are entitled to have such confirmation, the said court shall by decree confirm said claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 18, after the word "pre-emption," to strike out "or," and in the same line, after the word "homestead," to insert "or other;" so as to read:

Provided, That no lands shall be confirmed to said claimants to which there are any valid claims existing under the pre-emption, homestead, or other laws of the United States at the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 23, after the word "pre-emption," to strike out "or;" after the word "homestead," in the same line, to insert "or other," and in line 24, before the word "rights," to strike out "adverse;" so as to read:

Nor shall any decree of confirmation affect any valid adverse right of any other person or persons, or give to the confirmees, or any of them, any claim upon the United States for compensation for any land such confirmees may lose by pre-emption, homestead, or other claims or rights as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 26, after the word "may," to strike out "be in possession of," and insert "have or hold;" so as to read:

Provided further, That said claimants before filing their claim shall execute releases to any persons who may have or hold any portion of said lands, under valid claims under the pre-emption, homestead, or other laws of the United States, at the date of the passage of this act, to the portions of said lands so held respectively; and before rendering a decree of confirmation the said court shall ascertain that said releases have been duly executed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "that," to strike out "in case said claim is rejected by said court, then said claimants," and insert "the United States and any party in interest;" and in line 4, after the word "within," to strike out "the time and in the manner now provided by law in like cases," and insert "six months next after any decree shall be entered, in the manner allowed in other cases of appeal;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the United States and any party in interest are hereby granted the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, within six months next after any decree shall be entered, in the manner allowed in other cases of appeal; and the said court in the examination of the claims presented by any person under this act shall be governed, so far as applicable, by the provisions of the act passed March 3, A. D. 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle private land claims in the State of California."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 7, to strike out "Commissioner of the General Land Office" and insert "proper authority;" so as to read:

That the United States surveyor-general for California is hereby directed, upon the filing in his office by said claimants of a certified copy of a final decree of confirmation, under the provisions of this act, to cause said claim to be surveyed as other claims of like nature are now surveyed under existing laws; and upon the approval of said survey by the proper authority a patent shall issue to said claimants in the usual form.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SILAS F. FIELD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 315) for the relief of Silas F. Field, one of the sureties on the bond of John G. Halliburton, deceased, late marshal of the United States in and for the eastern district of Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is reported adversely from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 67) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. In the absence of my colleague, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who wants to be heard on the bill, I object to its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will be passed over without prejudice, if I understand what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice if there is no objection, to be called when the Senator from Vermont is here.

WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The bill (S. No. 254) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William M. Maynadier of $3,726.50, the amount paid by him into the Treasury of the United States in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster at Prescott, Arizona Territory, caused by robbery committed by his clerk, D. D. Chandler, at Prescott, April 3, 1876, as shown by the finding and report of a board of inquiry appointed by General Kautz, commanding that military department, to investigate the circumstances of the loss; and also the further sum of $100 paid by Maynadier for the arrest of Chandler, the restoration of both sums having been recommended by the board of inquiry.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is there a report in that case? If there is, I should like to hear it read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAMPTON on the 24th of January:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 254) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier, paymaster United States Army, having considered the same and accompanying papers, submit the following report:

That under date of January 17, 1882, your committee called on the Secretary of War for a copy of the proceedings of a board of officers convened at headquarters department of Arizona November 17, 1876, pursuant to special order No. 138, dated headquarters department of Arizona, November 6, 1876, to examine and report upon the loss of public funds, for which Major William M. Maynadier, paymaster

United States Army, is responsible, reported to have been stolen from his office safe by an absconding clerk; which record is now on file in the committee-room of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate. Your committee find the facts to be as stated in the finding of the board, which said finding is hereto annexed and made part of this report, and is as follows:

"In conclusion the board find that Major Maynadier was on duty by proper authority as paymaster at Prescott, Arizona; that he was duly authorized and required to keep public money in a safe provided for the purpose, there being no depository available; that he did so keep public money, though not in excess of what the service at his station required; that the safe provided for him was a large fire and burglar proof one manufactured by Jonathan Kitridge, of San Francisco, having two combination locks, the outer one being T. E. Burwell's and the inner one 'Young's Rotary Combination;' that Major Maynadier never made known these combinations; that said safe appears to be a good and secure one; that the clerk, D. D. Chandler, was well recommended and apparently capable and trustworthy; that on March 31, 1876, Major Maynadier had in his safe what under a customarily careful count appeared to be $4,081.11; but there should have been $4,228.46; that on Monday, April 3, 1876, he found in his safe only $211.46, the balance, $4,017, having been stolen by Chandler, who afterward returned $290.50, leaving the amount actually lost by Major Maynadier $3,726.50.

"The following tabular statement will show more briefly the exact state of the case:

Amount shown as on hand by statement of April 1, 1876	$4,081 11
Amount received in March, 1876, but not reported until May, (effects of deceased soldier)	147 35
True amount for which Major Maynadier was responsible	4,228 46
Amount found in safe after burglary	211 46
Total amount stolen	4,017 00
Amount returned by Chandler upon his arrest	290 50
Amount actually lost	3,726 50

"Under instructions of the Paymaster-General, Major Maynadier has refunded the amount lost, but so far as the board can ascertain it believes Major Maynadier exercised due care in the keeping of the public money intrusted to him, and therefore recommends that he be relieved from responsibility for the loss of the $3,726.50, and that this amount, increased by the $100 paid by Major Maynadier for the arrest of Chandler, making a total of $3,826.50, be restored to Major W. M. Maynadier, paymaster United States Army.

"There being no further business before it, the board adjourned sine die.

"RODNEY SMITH,
"Major and Paymaster, U. S. A., President.
"C. A. REYNOLDS,
"Major and Quartermaster, U. S. A., Member.

"JOHN SIMPSON,
"Captain and Assistant Quartermaster, U. S. A., Recorder."

The finding of the court of inquiry is approved by the commanding general Department of Arizona and the Paymaster-General of the Army.

Upon these facts your committee believe that Maynadier is entitled to relief. Therefore Senate bill No. 254 is reported back with recommendation that it pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANGUS M'AULEY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 230) granting a pension to Angus McAuley.

Mr. INGALLS. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over. The hour of half past one has arrived.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Kansas will allow the bill to pass.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will come up in the morning. The hour for the consideration of the unfinished business has arrived.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 429) to provide for holding a term of the district court of the United States at Wichita, Kansas, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 797) for the government and control of the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, Lake Huron, Michigan—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 1014) for the relief of Joseph L. Stevens—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

A bill (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of John B. Trainer—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (H. R. No. 1136) for the relief of John H. Morris—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (H. R. No 2141) granting a pension to Martha A. Lewis—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 2756) to settle the claim of the heirs of the late Colonel Stephen H. Long, of the United States Topographical Engineers—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. No. 3549) granting a pension to Mary C. Murray—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, and 16.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 21, 29, 30, 31, 34, 36, 38, 41, and 42, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 28, 32, 35, and 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Transfer amendments numbered 32, 35, and 37, and insert the same in the order named as new paragraphs after amendment numbered 27, and insert as a new paragraph after amendment numbered 28 the following:

"For contingent expenses of the Senate: 'Miscellaneous items,' the sum of $14,331.20, as follows."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: "In lieu of 'six' in line 1 of the amendment insert 'seven,' and in lieu of the sum named in line 5 of the amendment insert '$3,780.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
P. B. PLUMB,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1514) appropriating $100,000 for continuing the work on Davis Island dam; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 892) for the relief of Warren Hall;

A bill (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1514) appropriating $100,000 for continuing the work on Davis Island dam was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. INGALLS to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations in section 1, line 4, after "of" to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President, it was not my purpose to say anything upon this bill, and I shall not now detain the Senate beyond a few minutes. I would not occupy one moment of time were it not that entire silence might be construed into a lukewarmness of support. I am in hearty accord with the promoters of this bill, and trust that it may pass substantially as it came from the hands of the committee. The only fear that I have is that it may not prove as effectual in checking the influx of Chinese laborers as its promoters hope and expect it will. It may turn out after a time that its provisions can be systematically evaded, but this will come not so much from the bill itself as from the provisions of the treaty under which it is drawn, the defect being one difficult to meet with legislative provisions.

The bill is drawn in accord with the provisions of the treaty, and whatever of defects there may prove to be in its provisions when it shall go into operation will have to be referred to the narrowness of the treaty stipulations in conformity with which it is constructed. It cannot be disguised that the treaty of 1880 is so constructed that there is danger that no legislation, however carefully prepared, if kept strictly within its provisions, will be certain to save it from proving to be a snare and a delusion. Under the treaty we may suspend for a limited period the coming of laborers from China to the United States, but the coming of other classes for other purposes is unrestricted, and the rights which they may enjoy are made even greater than they were under the Burlingame treaty. They may come without limit as teachers, professors, traders, and merchants, and when here are to enjoy all the privileges of the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation, and being lawfully within the United States under treaty stipulations may they not change their vocations and become laborers? As citizens and subjects of other nations they would certainly have this right.

Possibly the treaty carries with it the power to extend legislation to the prohibiting of any Chinese other than laborers from engaging in the labor avocations of the country during the suspension of the coming of Chinese laborers, but the difficulty of enforcing such a provision would in my judgment render it of little value. It may be humiliating to confess, but the facts are, our commissioners who negotiated the late Chinese treaty were unequal to their task, and failed to properly accomplish, or even to comprehend, the work assigned to them. And I fear, sir, that we of the Pacific coast will yet regret that we ever consented that this treaty might be finally consummated. But, like drowning men who catch at anything which promises the possibility of escape from peril, we were unwilling to make opposition to this treaty, fearing that nothing better might be obtained in any reasonable time, and also hoping that legislation under its provisions might be so framed as to check the tide of Chinese immigration to our coast until such time as the morbid and unnatural, though prevailing, craze about the universal brotherhood of man might in some degree subside and wiser counsels prevail.

What was needed was the assertion authoritatively of our absolute right to control this immigration in our own way and in our own good time—the assertion of our right to terminate Chinese immigration absolutely and unconditionally when and as we please; and above and over all the assertion of our right as a nation to do just what China has always done under the Burlingame treaty as respects citizens of the United States traveling or residing in China, and that is the right to prohibit Chinese residing or traveling in the United States from engaging in any of the labor avocations of the country. That is what was needed and what should have been insisted upon, and if we had had a foreign policy worthy a nation of fifty million people it is what would have been exacted, not as a concession from China but as a right belonging to us as a people and nation and as inhering to our sovereignty.

It is humiliating to an American to read this later treaty and find from its terms and provisions that the United States is placed in the attitude of a recipient of favors from the hands and by the gracious benignity of the imperial Government of China, as if this country was a dependency. By its terms and provisions we are restricted in the exercise of rights which pertain to our Government as a sovereign State and which are important and necessary to the protection of the interests of our own citizens and to the preservation of the very form and substance of our own Government.

Since the promulgation of the Burlingame treaty the subjects of China have come to the United States and passed freely through every part of it. They have traveled upon our stages, steamboats, and railroads; they have gone singly and in small numbers into any and every part of it without molestation and in perfect safety; they have worked in our mines, as servants, as cooks, as common laborers, as mechanics and artisans, and have been allowed to engage in any business they desired to; and, with rare exceptions, have been unmolested, and always found protection when protection was needed. How has it been during all that time with the citizens of the United States in China? Have they been allowed to enter China at any and all points or to engage in any of the labor avocations of the country? No, sir. Only in certain cities have they been permitted to come, and these have been limited in number, and even in those cities our citizens have been restricted to defined and designated limits, and they are not permitted to engage in any of the labor avocations of the country, but are restricted to commercial business, and not even permitted to engage in the internal trade of the country. If they venture out of the prescribed limits for foreigners in the cities where they are permitted to come, or if they venture into the country beyond the distance allowed, they do it at the peril of their lives.

The Burlingame treaty was very unequal in its terms, and in its practical operation it was still more so. The commission sent to negotiate the new treaty seem to have overlooked these inequalities, and yet the agitation which led to their being sent out ought to have been a sufficient notice to them of these matters. Evidently, however, they and the power that sent them on their mission were so fully imbued with that theory of the modern philanthropist which takes to its embrace "all the world and the rest of mankind" without regard "to previous condition of servitude," and makes but little inquiry as to the degree of development reached by its protegés in the process of evolution from lower forms, that the most important part of their mission, the assertion of the inherent right of a nation or people to control in its own way the admission into its own territory and among its own people of foreign elements, incongruous with and dangerous to the peace, happiness, and good order of its own community, was overlooked or subordinated to mere idea.

The advocates and promoters of this bill are met with the objection that the principles upon which it rests are violative of the right of expatriation which we as a people have so long and so persistently proclaimed. Why, Mr. President, this is strange reasoning; the application of these principles can have no kind of application here. The circumstances under which we have so often asserted the fundamental right of every man to sever his relation with his native country does not and cannot apply to the relation the Chinese immigrant seeks to maintain in this country. We have asserted the right of expatriation in behalf of our adopted citizens when and wherever the governments from whence they came sought to enforce upon them obligations supposed and claimed to exist by reason of their having been born within their jurisdiction. We asserted the principle because we had taken upon ourselves the obligation of giving them protection for their allegiance—correlative obligations assumed when we received them into our political community. Certainly, sir; the Chinaman, according to our theories which we have made the basis of our political structure, has a right to expatriate himself from his native country and abjure the authority of his emperor and government, but does that clothe him with the right to demand admission into the social compact of any other country or community without the consent of such community?

Why, sir, the mere statement of such a proposition carries with it its own refutation. No principle is better settled in international law than that aliens can acquire no other or greater right in or among a people to whom they would attach themselves than such people may or will accord them. The very right to come at all is derived not from the alien himself nor yet from the country whence he comes, but from the people with whom he would form new relations.

Again, sir, we are told that in this legislation we are treading backward and forsaking the principles and traditions upon which our fathers one hundred years ago laid the foundations of government, and the Declaration of Independence is invoked as a sufficient argument and showing of this statement. The right to the pursuit of happiness is asserted as conclusive of the whole question. No one will deny the axiomatic and self-evident truths of the Declaration of Independence respecting human rights, but that they apply in this case may well be denied. The pursuit of happiness is certainly the inalienable right of every human being, but that pursuit must be regulated by human society and by human laws. It might be a great source of happiness to the highwayman to meet the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] upon the highway and forcibly take from his possession his purse. Necessitous hunger and privation might impel to such an act, and the gold or currency that purse might be expected to contain would bring numberless benefits and blessings, not only to the highwayman, but also to those who might be dependent upon him; but the law of society steps in to protect the citizen in his right to go unmolested about his pursuits, and pronounces such acts criminal and affixes severe penalties to their commission.

So it is daily demonstrated in a thousand ways that the pursuit of happiness is circumscribed and limited by the laws and necessities of organized society. What is true of the individual members of a community in this respect is equally true of nations and peoples, and also true of individuals leaving their native land in search of happiness and to better their own condition among another people in another country. They have no right in the pursuit of their own happiness to inflict injury upon the people of other communities. To assert the right of aliens to impose themselves upon or into communities to which they are alien without their consent and to their detriment, is to assert a principle, when carried to its logical consequences, subversive of all human government. Such a principle leads inevitably to anarchy. The law of life and self-preservation is as important and necessary to communities as to individuals, and is as inalienable and inherent in the one case as in the other; and no principle is more firmly imbedded in the ethics of international law than that it is both the right and the duty of the paramount authority in every state, in whatever form that authority may be vested, and however it may be exercised, to protect the state and the people of the state from all and every evil that may threaten its safety or menace the interests, prosperity, or happiness of its people, be they few or many, and herein alone can be found justification for a resort to the arbitrament of war.

Disguise it as we may we cannot longer fail to recognize the fact that western civilization has met the eastern upon the shores of the Pacific. The westward march of the Caucasian has there met the same teeming hordes that generations ago gave a westward direction to his tireless energy by imposing on his east a living wall of Asiatics, impossible to pass or overcome. The Pacific Ocean until recently had proved an impassable barrier and no Mongolian had ever passed to its eastward shore. But recent developments in steamships and the establishment of lines of steam communication between San Francisco and the open ports of China and Japan have practically connected the two continents and bridged the intervening sea. So that for a few dollars a Chinese immigrant can come from any of the ports of China to San Francisco. At first but few came, some returned, and a larger number followed, and in that way the tide of immigrants swelled to considerable proportions. Almost from the first their coming was objected to, and as its effects became more and more apparent this opposition became more and more pronounced, until within the last seven or eight years it has been greatly intensified, and by its universality as well as intensity has served to hold in check and to keep down and diminish the number of Chinese coming to the United States.

From 1850 to 1880 more than 200,000 Chinese landed on the Pacific coast. The census of 1880 shows that there were in that year 105,000 remaining in this country; but persons well informed in the customs and manners of the Chinese affirm that this is far below the correct figures. The smallness of their present numbers as compared to the total population of the country has been strongly contrasted and urged as a reason for discrediting the earnest statements of the people of the Pacific States and Territories that this Chinese population is a menace to good order and good government and the best interest of the people there. But the fact is overlooked that even according to the census there are 75,000 in the State of California, and some ten thousand in the State of Oregon, while the appeal of the Trades Assembly of California, quoted by the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] on last Friday, estimates, after investigation, the Chinese population of California at 150,000, or 20 per cent. greater than the male whites capable of bearing arms. From this it would seem that the adult Chinese male laboring element in California was very nearly equal to the adult white laboring element. If, however, the census report be taken, then they constitute something like one-half of the male laboring element in that State.

But we are told by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that the Chinese are the most easily governed race in the world; that every Chinaman in America has four hundred and ninety-nine Americans to control him. But the honorable Senator omitted to state that of the four hundred and ninety-nine Americans four hundred and eighty-seven of them were from one thousand to three thousand miles away from where the evils of Chinese emigration are being felt. Why, sir, in the Pacific States and Territories beyond Utah there are, according to the census reports, one Chinaman to every twelve of the white population, and I have no doubt that if the exact numbers of the Chinese population could be ascertained that the ratio would be one to every eight or ten of the white population. Carry this ratio throughout the United States and there would be a Chinese population of adult male laborers of near 5,000,000 to compete with white labor, to depress and demoralize it by underbidding and bringing it down to starvation prices. Let me bring it a little closer, Mr. President. Massachusetts has a population of 1,758,000. Now let the Senators of that State add to that population 175,000 adult Chinese laborers to compete with and underbid the working classes and they may be able to form some just conceptions of the condition of the poor laboring classes in the Pacific States and Territories. My impression is that there would be a small-sized bedlam in Massachusetts under such a state of facts. Pennsylvania has 4,282,000 population. I ask her Senators what effect it would have upon the laboring population of the great State to send into it 400,000 able-bodied laboring Chinese to depress the labor market in the struggle and competition that would ensue. The State of New York has a population of over 5,000,000; let the Senators of that State reflect what would be the effect of letting in 500,000 Chinese laborers to compete with their laboring population. If Senators will but reflect upon these facts they can readily comprehend how it is that there is such a wonderful unanimity in sentiment in every locality where the blight of this immigration has been felt; they will no longer be surprised at the steady and growing opposition to that class of immigrants, an opposition so universal that in a secret vote by concealed ballots no more than 800 votes were given favoring this immigration to 150,000 against it.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked "What argument can be urged against the Chinese which was not heard against the negro within living memories?" I do not suppose that I can satisfy the honorable Senator of the fallacy of his reasoning, but I may call attention to the utter want of any parallelism between the relations of the negro to the people of the United States and that of the Chinese, who desire to come among us as immigrants. The negro was native to the soil, born and bred within our jurisdiction, speaking our language, having, in a large degree, our civilization, and adhering to our religion. He was with us, if not of us; his ancestors were brought here against their will, and the generation with which we had to deal had no land, clime, or country to call their own except the land in which they were born, and no ties with any people or race except those with whom they had been reared. From necessity they were to remain with and of us; the only question, was what should be the relation.

The Chinese are aliens, born in a foreign land, speak a foreign tongue, owe allegiance to a foreign government, are idolaters in religion, have a different civilization from ours, do not and will not assimilate with our people, come only to get money, and return; and they are inimical to our laws, evade them whenever and wherever they can. So numerous are they at home in their own country that existence among the lower orders of their people is, and has been for centuries, a struggle for existence, and through this ceaseless struggle they have developed into a race of people of such character and physical qualities as to be able to exist and thrive where and under conditions the white man would perish and die out. They bring their customs with them, and persistently adhere to and retain them. Having the protection of our laws they systematically evade and violate them. They persistently and secretly maintain a code of laws and a form of government of their own, which they enforce with seeming certainty and effectiveness. Those who come as immigrants are of the lowest orders of the Chinese population, largely criminal. They bring with them their filth and frightful and nameless diseases and contagions. They bring no families as a general rule, but numbers of their country women are brought for purposes of prostitution, and are bought and sold among themselves as slaves, and our laws and courts are powerless to prevent it. They enhance the cost of government, and increase the burdens of taxation, while they contribute practically nothing in the way of taxes. Their labor is essentially servile, and is demoralizing to every class of white labor with which it comes in competition.

These, sir, are the people for whom the honorable Senator would open wide the door of admission, or, being open, would refuse to close it, but rather invites these hordes of heathens that swarm like rats in a cellar and live in filth and degradation along the sea-coast of China to come and compete with and degrade American labor, and compares them to the colored people born and reared in America. The negro is thoroughly American, if he is not Caucasian; the Chinese are neither Caucasian nor American, but are alien to our race, customs, religion, and civilization. The bill is not directed against those already here, but against the hordes that threaten to come. The terms of the treaty place those here beyond the reach of legislative enactment, and effort is now being made to bring in a large number of Chinese laborers before legislation can be had. Last year's immigration was over 20,000. This fact sufficiently demonstrates their purpose to come.

Mr. President, thirty-two years ago last September I camped on the banks of the Sacramento River, where the city of that name now stands, then a city of tents. There I first met the Mongolian; from that date to the present time I have been familiar with them. I have seen them singly and in crowds as they passed through the country from one section to another, traveling on foot with their bamboo sticks and baggage; have seen them in the mines by tens and by hundreds, and in the towns and cities, where they congregate at times in great numbers; have seen them on the witness stand, in the courts as litigants and criminals; have prosecuted them and have defended them in the courts. From this experience and observation I have formed the deliberate judgment that it will be a serious mistake to allow this tide of immigration to continue without restriction. After careful and thoughtful study of this whole matter I have settled down in the conviction that they should be prohibited from entering the labor avocations of the country, leaving them the right to come for commercial purposes, for travel or curiosity, as the Burlingame treaty left them.

I hope, Mr. President, the bill will pass substantially as reported.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I voted against the bill that passed the Senate on the 15th of February, 1879, entitled "A bill to restrict the immigration of Chinese to the United States." It is my purpose to vote for the pending bill, and I desire to say a word in explanation of my vote.

The Chinese question as presented by this bill is very different from the question presented by the bill which encountered the Presidential veto in 1879. Then one of the contracting parties to a treaty, to a contract between natives, proposed to abrogate such treaty without the consent of the other contracting party.

There can be no question that Congress, pursuant to the first article of the treaty concluded between the United States and China on the 17th of November, 1880, while maintaining the most scrupulous good faith toward China, may enact the proposed legislation.

The object of this bill is to regulate and limit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States. This proposed legislation is expressly sanctioned by the article of the treaty already referred to.

The population of the Chinese Empire, according to the most reliable authorities, exceeds four hundred millions.

The Pacific States, for thirty years, have been receiving immigrants from this overflowing Asiatic hive. It is true that the census of 1880 shows that less than 200,000 of these immigrants now remain in the United States; and the number now entering our ports do not exceed 3,000 a month. These figures are not very startling or alarming; but when we take into consideration the fact of the immense and overflowing population of China, and the further fact that the entire cost of bringing a Chinese laborer from Shanghai to San Francisco does not exceed $12, we must, I think, admit that China can, if no restriction be placed upon the immigration of her laborers hither, pour countless thousands of them into the ports of California and Oregon.

When recently in San Francisco, I was informed by Colonel Bee, the Chinese consul-general, that all the Chinese who have immigrated to the United States were inhabitants of one province, which province is not larger in extent than the State of New Hampshire. The Chinese as a people are doubtless shrewd, calculating, and far-seeing. The great mass of Chinese laborers in their native country are poor, and do not dwell in physical comfort. They are not opposed to immigration. If they can improve their physical condition by coming to the United States they will come, if there be no limitation or restriction upon their coming. I am informed by the junior Senator from Nevada, who has traveled in China wherever a foreigner is permitted to go, and who is thoroughly conversant with the condition of the Chinese in the Pacific States, that the physical condition of Chinese laborers in America is much better and higher than that of laborers in China.

I believe that unless Congress adopts stringent restrictive legislation that multitudes of Chinese laborers—cooly laborers—will immigrate to our Pacific States. I have seen this morning a telegram from Portland, Oregon, stating that the Six Companies are now hurrying ten thousand laborers into Oregan, who are to be employed in constructing the Northern Pacific Railway.

I am one of those who believe that either the Anglo-Saxon race will possess the Pacific slope or the Mongolian race will possess it.

By adopting restrictive legislation it is believed we can preserve the great States and Territories of the Pacific slope for our own race.

We have a right, under our treaty with China, and according to the laws of nations, to enact the legislation proposed. I am satisfied it is for our interest to enact it. Having the legal right to enact it, and it being for our interest to enact it, I favor and shall vote for this bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have many reasons which impel me to give my most hearty support to this bill, as well as to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. GROVER] and to the amendment offered by the Senator from California, [Mr. FARLEY.] I shall mention now only two. I shall give it my support, first, because the white people of the States mostly affected by Chinese immigration with almost entire unanimity desire its passage. For the present, at least, the evil and wrong intended to be remedied by the bill are in the main local, spending their greatest force on the Pacific States. These States complain, and I think they complain justly, of the effects of Chinese immigration upon their welfare and prosperity. These complaints are real, based on actual grievances of a most serious character. They do not have their origin in mere sentiment and theory; they are not mere apprehensions of injury to come hereafter; but they set forth wrongs now being felt, evils now being endured. These wrongs and these evils are not temporary or ephemeral. They have existed for many years, and, if continued, threaten permanently to affect the welfare of those States and the happiness of their people.

The existence of the evils arising from the presence of the Chinese in these States is not a matter of speculation or argument, but it is shown by actual experience. These States have had, and are now having, in their borders a practical demonstration of the effects of Chinese immigration. Their people have seen the Chinese in all the walks and pursuits of life in which they are engaged, and in their social relations, and in their religious life. They have observed the influence of their presence among and their contact with the white race on the morals and material welfare of those communities. They have had the opportunity of enjoying the blessings, if any there be, arising from Chinese labor and Chinese association, and they have been compelled to submit to and endure the inconvenience and wrong occasioned by this labor and this association. They have watched and observed the disposition and capacity of the Chinese for progress and advancement and their capability for assimilation with and incorporation into our own people. And their verdict is on all these points against these immigrants.

Certainly, sir, the experience and observation of the people of the Pacific States, and their judgment founded on these data are entitled to the greatest weight and influence on our deliberations. They ought to determine our action, unless we propose to discard the lessons of experience for the speculations of sentimentalists or the theories of a humanitarianism which considers rather what the world ought to be than what it is or can be.

If it were true (which I deny) that this bill is in conflict with the logic of the political theories in regard to the rights of mankind, which have heretofore prevailed in this country, that is no insuperable objection to its passage. I do not deny that every measure should be weighed and considered in the light of accepted and recognized principles, but I do deny that every measure, however necessary to the welfare and the happiness of the people of the United States, however accordant to the teachings of experience and history, should be condemned because it conflicts with the theories of a speculative and Utopian scheme for the administration of the affairs of this world.

Our Government has attained its present astonishing grandeur and vigor because it is the result of the growth and development of Anglo-Saxon ideas, put into practical operation by Anglo-Saxon common sense. It has not grown according to a rule prescribed by an inexorable logic, reasoning from premises which assumed an ideal perfection in human nature and attainable in human institutions. Our Constitution is the work of men, intended for the government of men, not of angels or demi-gods. It recognizes human frailties and human passions, and seeks no unattainable perfection. It was made by the American people for themselves and their posterity, not for the human race. It was ordained by the American people for their own happiness and their own welfare and the welfare of such others as they should choose of their own free will to admit to American citizenship. That our institutions are stable; that they attain the ends of good government—security to life, liberty, and property, the progress and happiness of the American people; that they can stand any strain, however great, occasioned by unlooked-for and calamitous emergencies, is because they were evolved and were modified as circumstances demanded, and were not the result of the a priori reasonings of political theorists.

The foundations were not laid according to any scientific rule, but according to the exigencies and needs of the people. The superstructure may be patch-work, but the different pieces are so dovetailed into each other, so skillfully joined, that the weakness of one part has up to this time been counterbalanced by the united strength of the whole. In short, sir, I may well say that the excellence, the strength, and durability of Anglo-Saxon political institutions result from the fact that they are both illogical and inconsistent. It is, therefore, no good reason why we should not relieve the people of the Pacific States of the great evil of Chinese immigration, so ably and fully presented by their Senators here; no reason why we should not adopt the amendment of the Senator from California prohibiting the naturalization of natives of the Chinese Empire, that we do tolerate the presence of another inferior race, and have conferred on them the privileges of American citizenship and imposed on them the discharge of its high duties. I prefer, sir, to expose myself to the charge of inconsistency rather than to disregard the known wishes of the white people of the Pacific States and to incur the hazards and dangers to which they are exposed.

I will not discount their judgment, formed from hard experience, in favor of the speculations of a humanitarian philosophy. Besides, sir, it is not so clear that our Constitution, with all its great strength and vigor, after embracing the African, can take in with safety even the more enlightened countrymen of Confucius.

Second. I give to this bill and the proposed amendments my hearty support for another reason. It will really and truly protect American labor. It furnishes no sham protection in the shape of a tax levied on all the labor of the country for the benefit of the capitalist, in the hope (often if not always a vain one) that he will divide it and give some small part to that inconsiderable number of laborers whom he employs.

This bill protects the American laborer directly and clearly, and not in a round-about and second-hand way. It gives this protection by its own force, and the vigor of its own beneficent provisions, independent of either the magnanimity or the charity of another, and that other too directly interested in withholding the protection.

As so well shown in the very able and exhaustive discussion of this subject by the Senator from California, [Mr. MILLER,] the Chinese laborer has an advantage over the American laborer. This is an undue advantage. It does not arise from superior industry, larger intelligence, or greater skill. It comes from the simple fact that the one is an American citizen, with the hopes and aspirations of an American citizen, and charged with the performance of the high duties to his country and his family incident to American citizenship; the other has none of these. For ages he has from necessity been inured to that hard and scanty sort of living, joined to incessant toil, which barely supports life. To compete with him the American laborer must be reduced to the same standard of living, condemned to the same ceaseless toil.

Are we prepared, sir, to invite the American laborer to this competition—to yoke him with this fellow to plow the fields, delve in the mine, or work in the shops of capital seeking the cheapest labor? Sir, we want no such laborers, either foreign or native. We want no class that can or will accept the bare necessaries of life only as the price of its labor. We want no class to whose vision is forever closed all prospect of advancement, comfort, independence, and progress. If there be such now anywhere in this broad land, it would be our first and highest duty, so far as we had constitutional power, to lift the dark veil of despair which shuts out the prospect of elevation and advancement. It is our duty to dignify and ennoble labor, not to debase and degrade it. The American laborer so far has been the grandest product of our free institutions. He has converted a continent from a wilderness into cultivated fields. He has built our towns and cities, our railroads and canals, our ships and our warehouses, the mansions of the rich, and the humble cottages of the poor. He has patiently sown, where in many instances others have reaped; he has built what others have enjoyed. Yet in the main he has been rewarded for his skill and toil. At the same time, sir, he has discharged with fidelity, and in the main with sound judgment, the duties, public and private, of American citizenship. In peace he has created all our great wealth and advanced the country to an unparalleled prosperity. In war he has carried, as a private, the musket and the knapsack, and braved the horrors and carnage of battle without the stimulus of personal ambition or the hope of personal renown. It is, sir, in my judgment, our duty to pass this bill. To reject it is to invite to our shores millions of an inferior and degraded race to drag down to their own level the American laborer.

And now, Mr. President, before I take my seat I wish to congratulate the Senators from the Pacific States on the skill and moderation with which they have discussed the relations of the American people with this inferior race. For once, sir, this subject has been discussed in a calm and philosophical spirit without exciting sectional animosities or rekindling the passions engendered by past contests and dissensions. The time may come—it is not here now—when the relations of another race to American citizenship must be, as all other questions ought to be, discussed in the like spirit. In the mean time, while discharging our duty freely in educating that race into a proper discharge of their duties as American citizens, advancing them to their full capacity, it will also be our duty to observe with care and impartiality the experiment of African citizenship. No man shall strive harder than I will to make the experiment successful, and no man will be more rejoiced if in the end it shall be all that those who initiated it shall desire. All that I ask for the white people of the South on this subject is what I am willing to grant, and I believe a majority of this body is willing to grant to the white people of the Pacific States, that their testimony, their experience, and their judgment shall not be discredited in a matter so deeply affecting their welfare.

The Constitution was ordained and established by white men, as they themselves declared in its preamble, "to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves (ourselves) and their (our) posterity," and I cannot doubt that this great pledge thus solemnly given will be as fully redeemed in favor of the white people of the South, should occasion for action arise, as I intend on my part and on their behalf to redeem it this day in favor of the white people of the Pacific States, by my vote to protect them against a degrading and destructive association with the inferior race now threatening to overrun them.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I gave notice last week that I would call up to-day the resolution I offered, for the purpose of addressing the Senate in reference to the trouble between Peru and Chili. The Senators in charge of this bill, however, desire to press it to a vote, and I have therefore, in conformity to their wish allowed the notice I gave to pass over. I desire now to renew that notice that I will ask the Senate to-morrow morning to take up for consideration the resolution on the subject of Peru that I submitted on the 20th of February, and will at that time ask leave to address the Senate on that subject.

CHINESE MIGRATION AND HOME RULE.

I wish before the vote is taken on this bill to submit a few observations in regard to it. The bill proposes to prohibit the migration of Chinese laborers to this country. It has been urged by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] upon the ground that it was the unanimous desire of the people of the Pacific coast that a law should be passed prohibiting the coming of Chinese among them. It has been said that the principle of local self-government, of home rule, required that we, holding in our hands as trustees the national power of prohibiting the migration of such persons as any of the States might think proper to admit, or the reverse, were bound to exercise that authority in accordance with the wishes of the people of the States concerned, and that they had, with great unanimity in all the States of the Pacific, indicated their desire that a law should be passed prohibiting this migration. I think this is a good reason for the exercise of this power, that the people of California, of Oregon, and of Nevada unanimously ask the Congress of the United States to exercise the power given to it to prohibit the migration of Chinese there. But if that be a good reason, because local self-government in California, Oregon, and Nevada demands the prohibition of Chinese immigration there, is it not a good reason for allowing it upon the Atlantic and the Gulf coasts if the people of those localities desire it? And if there is no evidence that the people of the States upon the Atlantic and the interior desire this prohibition; if local self-government and home rule in Massachusetts, in New York, and in the Southern States do not demand it, is not that as strong and powerful as the argument upon the other side? I think that whatever legislation shall be had upon this subject upon the ground that local self-government and home rule and the sentiment and opinion of California and Nevada and Oregon demand it, should be consistent with the demands of the people of New York, of Massachusetts, and of the Atlantic slope. Let us put our action upon proper ground, and not upon an indefensible ground.

I am in favor of legislation that will prohibit the migration of the Chinese into California if California does not want them; into Oregon if Oregon does not want them; into Nevada if Nevada does not want them; and of such legislation as if the people of New York or South Carolina or Georgia or Massachusetts should demand their admission would allow them to enter into those States.

The honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] whose opinions are entitled to great respect and consideration everywhere, has placed his advocacy of this bill upon the proposition that we are confronted with the necessity of choosing between Mongolian or Caucasian civilization; if we do not exclude the Chinese the Mongolian will subvert the Caucasian, the Christian.

CHRISTIANITY STRONGER THAN MONGOLIAN.

I do not share these apprehensions. I have not lost my faith in the Christian religion nor in the success of the great commission to the preachers of the Gospel, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." I should not be at all afraid to turn the Baptist and Methodist and Presbyterian preachers and other evangelical preachers and the priests of Rome upon all China, if sustained adequately by proper missions for their support, and I would feel confident that the ancient religion of China would topple and fall as did the worship of Baal in the olden time. A little while ago we were told that there was danger that the Mormons and polygamists would subvert the Christian religion and our social institutions and that Christianity was too feeble to combat it with the law of love and the power of faith, but that we must strike down the foundations of our Government guaranteeing freedom of religion. We must define religion and declare it to be that form of worship and observance which we thought right and invoke the power of the State, and that even then it was so strong that we must refuse to allow those who were not religious according to our definition to be tried by any one but those who thought they were criminals because of their belief and their practice of it. Now we are told that Christianity totters and quakes with dread at the advance of the Mongolian, and that we must shield with the power of the State the religion of Him who refused the aid of legions of angels, to the end that faith in Him might triumph.

I do not accept this modern version. I believe in the old Bible and the principles of our Constitution. I believe that though the heavens and the earth should fall not one jot or one tittle of the divine law would fail. I believe if all China was marching here with banners they could not overthrow our civilization. "By this sign shalt thou conquer" was the inscription upon Constantine's banner of the cross, and from that day to this it has triumphed over all other systems and all other forms of religion. Why should it now fall before the Mongolian idols? I do not believe it. I cannot accept this as a justification for this bill. Let us examine the subject and ascertain if we can what solid ground we can stand upon in passing this law, and by what legislation in conformity with the fundamental provisions of our Constitution can we effect the desired object.

PROTECTION OF LABOR.

We are told that the Mongolian is to subvert our system of government, of social polity, and our Christianity, first, by cheapening labor below the standard of price adequate for the support of a man and his family in comfort, and adequate to allowing him to accumulate something for the education of his children and something for his support in old age. If this be true it is the greatest possible evil, for in my judgment the great and primary law of all systems of civil polity should be the greatest good of the greatest number, and the protection of the ninety and nine people who are laborers in the possession and enjoyment of the necessaries of life, the things essential to the comfortable enjoyment of life, rather than the protection of the one man in a hundred who is not a laborer, but has appropriated by some means, just or unjust, right or wrong, the labor of others.

There can be no limit to which legislation should not go for the attainment of this object, and if the organic powers of the State or nation are not adequate to this end, in my judgment they are of sufficient importance to demand the readjustment of its organic powers.

I scarcely think any one can go further than this for the protection of labor and its rights, and whoever will join hands with me and follow this principle to whatever it may reach, faltering not by the way, shall be my companion.

CHEAP LABOR IN AGRICULTURE.

What results, then, do we mean by cheapening labor, and to whom do we make it cheap? Let us leave the paths of generalization, in which falsehood most frequently lurks, and descend into the vale of facts, of humble, poor, neglected truth, and consider the particulars upon which all true generalization must rest.

A man comes to a farm and does equal work with equal skill and fidelity for one-half the existing rates. By the law of competition, of human cupidity and selfishness, the employers of labor give him the preference over the man at double the price, irrespective of the fact that the smaller sum is insufficient to maintain him in comfort, educate his children, and leave something for sickness and age. I agree with you that the selfishness and cupidity which leads to and permits this on the part of the employer is an evil, and, I think, a crime, and should be prevented in any possible way. But let us see the economic effect, and the economic law; let us see if that power that orders all things wisely and well has not made some provision for this.

What is the effect of cheapening agricultural labor in the production of the subsistence of mankind? Manifestly it is that the crop, a thing produced by this labor, will not cost so much as the thing paid for it. Whether the labor be paid for by other labor or other things, or in money which represents them, and as it has not cost so much, it may be disposed of for less.

Now, who, under our present system of distribution, are most interested in cheap corn, cheap wheat, cheap bacon, cheap subsistence? Is it the consumer, the poor man with his many children, the artisan, the laborer, engaged in other pursuits than agriculture, or the speculator, the rich man?

WHAT PRODUCES CHEAP FOOD?

But it is said the cheapness of labor in agriculture is not sufficient without other causes to produce in itself cheap subsistence. The relative cheapness or dearness of corn, wheat, bacon, all articles of subsistence, is qualified and regulated by the demand, sometimes a real and natural one, and sometimes an artificial and unnatural one, as where some great operator, by false pretenses and by the use of facilities ostensibly created in the interests of commerce and for the honest and intelligent distribution and equalization of the remuneration of labor engaged in production, gathers great quantities of agricultural production in his control, and denies the use of it to the starving men, women, and children of the country. But certainly cheapness of labor in agriculture is a factor, and an important factor, in our business economies, and cheapness of subsistence is not an evil to the great mass of consumers.

Is cheapness of labor in production in agriculture an evil to the producer? Does a man growing a crop of wheat or cotton with his own labor or another man's lose anything by having to pay a less price for his labor? Does he lose anything by being able to obtain the necessary labor to work his farm for a smaller amount than he can obtain by applying his own labor to something else?

The proposition then is that production will be superabundant, so that the labor expended in agriculture or anything else will not be able to exchange the products of agriculture for the products of manufacture. To this result it is manifest that cheapness of labor, if it extend in the same degree or ratio to both agriculture and manufacture, would not contribute, and that the causes of the inadequate compensation of labor must be sought elsewhere, and not in the cheapness of the products of agriculture or manufacture. It is the relative price of these products to each other that makes cheapness of the objects of production unremunerative to the labor engaged in it.

OBJECTIONABLE PROVISIONS.

But time and the occasion will not permit me to enter into this subject on this bill. I only wish on this occasion in giving my support to the principle of this bill, so far as it relates to the exclusion of the Chinese from the States where the people do not wish them to go, to express my dissent from some of the propositions which are supposed by its chief advocates to be its essential benefits.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution says:

The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808; but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation not exceeding $10 for each person.

This clause undoubtedly gives the power to forbid the migration or importation of persons into each State after the year 1808, and hence there is no doubt as to the constitutional power; but in the exercise of this power is it necessary because certain States do not wish to permit the importation or migration of certain persons, and therefore invoke the exercise of this power in their behalf, that it shall also be invoked for their prohibition in other States which do wish to admit them?

The argument, in my opinion, does not justify the conclusion, and while I vote for this bill prohibiting the Chinese from all the United States, I wish it understood that I do it distinctly because no States are here asking for their admission into their limits. Is it necessary, in order to protect the Pacific States from Mongolian invasion, that they shall be prohibited from going to the Atlantic coast? Certainly not.

RIGHT OF THE STATES.

Is it necessary because people are allowed to come within the United States that they should be admitted to the electoral power? Upon that proposition I think it is very important that we should have some sound and settled opinion. I do not think so. The power reserved to the States, and expressly declared in the Constitution, giving to each State the right to establish its own electoral qualifications, seems to throw a necessary safeguard around our institutions, and should be carefully preserved and not infringed upon, and it is for this purpose that I wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to this point.

We have now 50,000,000 people. I observe in a paper that 8,000 Mormons, strangers to our language and institutions, are now landing in this country. If it be true that every man by virtue of his manhood, wherever he may be or wherever he may come from, has a right to be admitted to naturalization, it may indeed be true that it is necessary to exclude everybody from our shores except those who are fit to exercise these great powers at once.

The people who are most accessible to this immigration believe that some social and sanitary evils of a very grave character, and certain economic evils hurtful to them, have arisen and will be developed into very great and more hurtful proportions. They have a right so to decide, and it is our duty to exercise the power which we hold in trust for their protection.

ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT OR TRIAL WRONG.

But I do not see that the methods employed in this bill are necessary to this end.

By the Constitution the powers of the Government are divided into legislative, executive, and judicial. Each of these classes of powers is vested in these several and distinct departments. Article 3, section 2, says:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law * * * arising under * * * the laws of the United States, and treaties made. * * * The trial of all crimes * * * shall be by jury. * * * No warrant shall be issued but upon probable cause. No person shall be deprived of liberty * * * without due process of law.

These provisions are, first, a limitation of power, so that there is no power in the prohibited case; and, secondly, they are an immunity or right to the individual—all the officers of the other departments are required to take an oath to observe them. So that every executive and every legislative officer swears that he will not exercise or attempt to exercise a power granted exclusively to the judicial authority, and that he will not deprive any one of liberty without process of law, or punish them for crime without a trial by jury.

How, then, can we by law give an executive officer power to punish a man for an act, namely, coming into the country, which we declare to be a crime, without a trial by a jury or without a warrant for his arrest? How can we authorize an executive officer to seize a person within our jurisdiction, decide that he is a Chinaman here without authority of law, deprive him of his liberty without a trial, and send him out of the country?

No one would contend that we could authorize an executive officer to seize a foreign ship and send it out of our country without a judicial hearing or without the judgment of a court.

There can be no doubt, Mr. President, if we have any regard whatever for the Constitution of the country, which requires that all cases at law, criminal or not, shall be tried judicially, that the judicial power extends to every person in our country. We here, day after day, pass laws, notwithstanding we are sworn that we will not attempt to exercise any judicial power, conferring upon ministerial and executive officers power to deprive men of their liberty. When a Chinaman is here he is as much under the protection and jurisdiction of our laws as if he were a citizen, a Senator, a President, or any one else; to the extent that he has rights, whatever they are, he should be protected in them. You cannot crucify him on a cross; you cannot arrest and imprison him arbitrarily; you cannot touch him except in the exercise of constitutional power vested in the constitutional tribunals of the country; yet we have a bill by which we say that any collector of customs can seize any Chinese, decide that he is a Chinaman just arrived, and forcibly extradite him out of the country.

Mr. President, is it necessary for us to do this? Is it not enough to declare the Chinaman's coming here to be a criminal act, to subject him to pains and penalties, arrest him by due process of law, try and punish him by judicial proceedings in conformity with the provisions of our Constitution and our laws? I think this section of the bill should be stricken out. If in my power to procure it, I should be glad to see it done. I wish to record my opposition to it and to express my opinion that it is utterly subversive of the Constitution and the laws of the United States.

FORFEITURE OF VESSEL WRONG.

I think, again, the section of the bill which forfeits the vessel of an owner who has committed no offense against the laws is unnecessary, harsh, and objectionable in every respect.

I am aware that that is an ordinary principle of the admiralty law as applied to the revenue system of the United States, but it is harsh and unnecessary, even in regard to our revenue law, which is in itself an arbitrary system, and has always been so held. Can any man give a reason why a foreign shipowner in a distant part of the world, committing his ship to the care of a person whom he regarded as worthy of trust, because that person has betrayed his trust without knowledge or consent or procurement on his part, in a foreign port, should have his property destroyed? It can never be justified except in a case of customs and revenues, where there is said to be no other mode of preventing the violation of the revenue law. But even there it fails. There is no just reason for it. The master is subject to punishment; the law rests upon him and administers punishment upon the offender. I apprehend that this custom—nay, I can scarcely call it a custom, but this interpolation in many of our laws, of the condemnation and forfeiture of a vessel without offense on the part of the owner, or knowledge on his part, is simply a remnant of the barbarous proceedings of the past.

These two provisions of the bill I think are entirely objectionable. I shall vote for it; but I will vote to strike out these provisions, and I enter my protest against them.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the problem that the Senate now has to deal with is a very grave one. The importation of Chinese laborers into this country without limitation or restriction may promise much misfortune and evil in the future; I think it wise to restrict that importation; but while we restrict it, we should remember that it is the duty of the American Senate and the American Government to keep faith with every people and every government upon the face of the earth.

Some years since we ratified what was known as the Burlingame treaty with China. That treaty caused very friendly relations to be established between the two governments, and in some measure between the peoples of the two governments. The result of that treaty and those friendly relations was a very rapid increase and extension of the commerce of this country with China. That commerce is most important to the people of the United States. It has long been the complaint of other nations that the Chinese Government did not permit intercourse with foreign powers. We have reached a period when that rule has been relaxed in China, and there is a vast trade there of immense value, whose fruits are to be gathered by commercial powers. Great Britain at present has much the better part of that trade. As a commercial power we are striving to compete with Great Britain and to build up our own trade there as much as possible.

In this state of the case it seems to me to be a most unfortunate time for us to do injustice to the people of China or to offend that government unnecessarily. Take, for instance, our manufacturing classes, and there is a wide field open there for the sale of their productions. I recollect not long since, in a conversation with one of the admirals of our Navy, he gave me a very interesting account of a period of time spent by him in China. He spoke of the immensity of the future commerce of that country, of the quality of the cloths with which the Chinese are clad, and the point struck me that it was of very great importance to my section of the country that we should maintain friendly relations with the Chinese; because if we seek in the South to build up our infant manufacturing establishments of cotton, woolen, &c., and especially cotton, there is no market in the world so inviting to us for the class of goods we make as the market of China. It is said that the cloths of the Southern mills, where we have plenty of cotton, where the cloth is made honestly of good material and sent to China, have been the most popular there of any brands of cloth, because they are the best and the most durable. Our infant manufacturing establishments are not in condition to compete successfully with those of the world elsewhere in the production of the finer fabrics; and as we make a particular kind of cloth, or a particular production of our looms, that is peculiarly adapted to that trade or to the demands of that empire with its immense numbers of people, it would be foolishness on our part to seek wantonly to offend those people, and destroy our influence and our commerce among them. Therefore there are substantial commercial reasons why we should deal justly and fairly and kindly and honestly by them.

These reasons may not be sufficient to justify us of the South in encouraging the unlimited importation of Chinamen to the detriment of other sections of the Union who protest against it. The people of the United States, having become dissatisfied with the unbounded liberty of immigration into this country that was given by the Burlingame treaty, sought to get rid of it. We sent our plenipotentiaries to China to negotiate for a modification of the treaty. And he who reads the discussions between our plenipotentiaries and the Chinese Government will find that we were not more than a match for them in diplomacy. Whatever you may say of them, of their manners, their customs, their habits, you cannot say that they are not a cultivated people, to a great extent, and you cannot say that their statesmen do not have ability, and you cannot say that they do not comprehend these great questions. The negotiations referred to abundantly attest the fact of their ability, sagacity, and statesmanship, or else they show that we were very much wanting in these high qualities. At any rate, we cannot truthfully claim that we got the better of the correspondence.

But, without tracing the history of that negotiation, we reached the point where we concluded a treaty that has been ratified by that government and by our Government on this very question. Now, I want to refer to the provisions of that treaty, and contrast them for a few moments with this bill, and see whether we are in good faith carrying out the provisions of the treaty. Are we doing our duty, and are we before the civilized world acting in honest good faith toward China? Are we observing our treaty stipulations? Or are we in substance and spirit, if not in letter, unblushingly violating those solemn guarantees? If we are violating the compact, then we ought to modify this bill and keep within the provisions of the contract entered into between the high contracting parties, composed of the representatives of 400,000,000 Chinese and 50,000,000 Americans.

If the treaty will not permit the passage of such a bill as we desire to pass, then in good faith we should suspend action till we negotiate for a modification of that treaty, and not resort to an open, unjustifiable violation of it, or to a violation of the very spirit and essence of it. I propose, Mr. President, to read the four sections of that treaty. They are as follows:

ARTICLE I.

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers, who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nations.

ARTICLE III.

If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

ARTICLE IV.

The high contracting powers having agreed upon the foregoing articles, whenever the Government of the United States shall adopt legislative measures in accordance therewith, such measures will be communicated to the Government of China. If the measures as enacted are found to work hardships upon the subjects of China the Chinese minister at Washington may bring the matter to the notice of the Secretary of State of the United States, who will consider the subject with him; and the Chinese foreign office may also bring the matter to the notice of the United States minister at Peking and consider the subject with him, to the end that mutual and unqualified benefit may result.

These are the provisions of the treaty. Does this bill propose in honest good faith to carry them out? We have reserved the right to regulate, limit, or suspend the coming of Chinese laborers, but the treaty is express and positive in its provisions that we shall not absolutely prohibit it, and that our legislation on this subject shall be reasonable. Now, does any Senator here really believe, when we were negotiating this treaty with the Emperor of China, that our representatives held out to him any such idea as that our first step in limitation and suspension would be an absolute inhibition, or prohibition of the importation of a single Chinese laborer for twenty years under severe legal penalties? Do you believe, Senators, that the Chinese Government would have agreed to such a treaty if they had understood that this was our interpretation of it? Would they have ratified it? I think no Senator in this Chamber can believe they would. Let it be borne in mind that this is the starting point on our part in the execution of the treaty. In carrying out the power of suspension of the coming of Chinese laborers that under certain circumstances as represented to them by our plenipotentiaries might become necessary on the part of this Government, the first step is an absolute prohibition for twenty years, with the heaviest penalties if a single one known as a laborer comes in within that period. It would be very natural for the Chinese Government to conclude that if this is the commencement in the execution of the treaty, they may look at the end of twenty years for a further prohibition for half a century, or ninety-nine years probably. No, Mr. President, they will not misunderstand it. That government is intelligent enough to know that this is not carrying out in good faith the provisions of the treaty. It may be that we can justify it according to the letter, but it is a mere sticking in the bark; it is not in accordance with the spirit or intent of the treaty.

But let it be remembered that that right of suspension, regulation, or limitation applies under the treaty only to Chinese laborers, and it is provided expressly in the treaty that it does not include any other class of Chinese except laborers. Now what as to the other classes of Chinese? We expressly stipulate and bind ourselves that they may go and come of their own free will and accord, and that they shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to citizens and subjects of the most favored nation. How do we propose to carry out that provision of the treaty? We propose to enact a law that permits no one of them to come until he has first obtained the consent of the Government of China. That government has stipulated with us that its subjects not laborers shall go and come of their own free will and accord. We put the obstacle in the way that they shall go to the expense and trouble of getting the consent of their government in each individual case, before they shall come, and they shall then get a passport from the Government of China, and that passport must be viséd by the United States diplomatic agent or consular agent in China, before they can go on board a vessel to start for the United States.

Supposing the Chinaman seeking to come is a teacher or a student, it is expressly stipulated that he shall go and come of his own free will and accord, with all the exemptions, immunities, and privileges of a citizen or subject of the most favored nation. But this bill says he shall neither go nor come of his own free will and accord; he shall not start here until he has obtained a passport from his own government, and had it properly viséd by our representative there. Then he can board the ship coming to our shores. When he reaches here the bill provides that the master of the ship shall not land until he has exhibited to the custom-house officer the list of the Chinamen on board, with a description of each. The custom-house officer must then go on board and examine each, and compare him with his passport, so as to establish his identity, and if he has lost his passport he cannot land. Then, when he has landed, he must be ready at all times to exhibit his passport to the proper authorities of the United States whenever legally demanded. If he is robbed of it or loses it his failure to exhibit it subjects him to fine and imprisonment. The Secretary of the Treasury has then to open books, and every Chinaman in this country must be registered in those books. Then a certificate must be given each with a most accurate description of his person. Let me read that description:

Entry shall be made in such books of the name of every such Chinese, and his proper signature, his place of birth, (giving town or district,) date of birth, last place of residence before coming to the United States, place of residence in the United States, if any, names and residences of his parents, if any, date and place of arrival in the United States, employment or business, height, and physical marks or peculiarities by which he may be identified. Every applicant for registration shall make oath to the facts stated in his registry, which oath shall be recorded in the book of registry. Collectors of customs and their deputies shall have power to administer and certify to all oaths under this act.

Bear in mind that the description must be made in the book opened by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it must be signed by the Chinese with his own signature. If he be in the condition of a very large number of the people of this country, not able to write his own name, though he may not come here as a laborer, and may be a man of wealth and come from curiosity, he would not comply with the law, because his own proper signature would not be upon the descriptive list made by him in the custom-house or upon his passport.

We set up a pretty high standard for the Chinaman. We say he must come here prepared to write his own name, for that is what I understand by a man's own proper signature, which must be upon his passport, and upon the books in the custom-house, before he can stay here, and if he fails to comply with the law in any of these particulars, and he is found at large in the United States, he may be taken up and fined and imprisoned. Suppose after he lands he loses his passport, with great prejudice against himself and his race, unaccustomed to our language, our forms, and our tribunals, if he is taken up, how will he protect himself? He cannot do it, and he will be thrown into jail and fined. This would seem to be in violation of that provision of the treaty which says he may go and come of his own free will and accord. This bill says:

> And any Chinese who shall knowingly come into the United States contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

If he is a teacher or a merchant or a Chinaman coming here from curiosity, he has a perfect right under this treaty to go and come at his own free will and accord. But if he be one of those characters, and he has not complied with everything prescribed in reference to passport, registration, descriptive list, and all that is set forth in this long ponderous bill and its numerous sections, he is to be seized and thrown into prison and fined, and remain there till he pay the fine; and that is what we call extending to him the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to citizens and subjects of the most favored nation!

Do you, I ask, Senators, by your law extend such denial of rights and privileges to the subjects even of the most unfavored nations? Do you extend such treatment to the subjects of any other nation? Is there any other nation on the globe whose subjects are compelled to comply with all these provisions before they can enter an American port? Is there any other nation on the globe whose subjects can be seized, tried, fined, and imprisoned for the non-compliance with provisions like those contained in this bill? If there is an instance I am not aware of it; and I ask any Senator favoring this bill to point it out. Where is the law on our statute book that compels the subjects of Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, or of any power in South America, or of any African chief in the darkest jungles of that benighted land to comply with any such terms under any such penalties before he can enter a port of the United States?

Mr. FARLEY. In the first place there is no treaty between the United States Government and those governments the Senator mentions that such legislation may be had; but in this case there is a solemn treaty between the two governments, China and the United States, that such legislation may be had as will suspend the further immigration of that class of people, but not absolutely prohibit it.

Mr. BROWN. I am sorry to have to take issue with my friend from California, but his statement is not correct.

Mr. FARLEY. It is very plain.

Mr. BROWN. But it is not true. The treaty applies simply to laborers, and says distinctly it shall apply to no other class. I am talking about teachers and merchants and students, and those coming from curiosity, who are mentioned in the treaty, which expressly excepts them from its provisions. I say there is no such provision in the treaty as the Senator refers to.

Mr. FARLEY. There is a provision in reference to laborers.

Mr. BROWN. There is a provision in reference to laborers, the Senator says. I am not controverting that; I was not talking about that. I am talking about the provisions of the bill which would apply to other classes, where the treaty says distinctly and expressly that they are not included in its limitations.

I repeat, there is no such legislation unfavorable to the subjects of any other power on earth as we propose to apply to the subjects of China who are not laborers, and who are expressly protected by the treaty, and of whom it is said, in the treaty to which we have solemnly pledged our faith before the world, that they shall go and come of their own free will and accord. If this bill passes they cannot come into the territory of this Government without complying with all these cumbersome and burdensome provisions that I have mentioned. If the master of a ship brings one in, in accordance with the treaty, of his own free will and accord, without a compliance of these provisions, he is liable to be punished, and his ship is to be seized and forfeited. That is the privilege we propose to extend to the Chinaman, of going and coming at his own free will and accord, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the subjects or citizens of the most favored nation! That is the kind of faith we propose to keep.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Does the Senator think it would be within the treaty for a teacher or merchant belonging to the permitted class to show that he was one of the permitted class, to show that he was a teacher? In other words, would it conflict with the treaty if we required that he should identify himself? If not this, what other plan can be adopted by which he may be identified as belonging to the permitted class? The provisions of the bill are merely for the purpose of identification. They are in the interest of the classes enumerated who are permitted to come. If there were no provision of this sort in the bill, it would be left to the United States authorities to decide whether they were of the permitted classes or not. The bill leaves it for the Chinese Government to decide, and those persons whom the Chinese Government say are merchants or traders or teachers, and so on, and are not laborers, are permitted to come when they present the evidence that the Chinese Government gives them of that character.

Mr. BROWN. The provisions of the bill look more to prohibition than identification. No unprejudiced mind can read it without being struck with its harshness. It breathes an unfriendly spirit from the enacting clause to the end of its last section. It violates, without the blush of shame, the express and undeniable provisions of a solemn treaty.

There is nothing in the treaty that requires of any Chinaman of the classes about which I have been speaking to bring any certificate of identification. It is expressly provided in the treaty that it shall apply to no other class except laborers. All other classes stand just where they did before the treaty as to their right to come, with the superadded provision in the treaty itself that they may go and come of their own free will and accord, with the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. Do you propose any stringent legislation of this character for the identification of an Irishman or a German? The subjects of China who are not laborers are placed by treaty in exactly the same position of the Irishman or the German.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If the Senator will allow me, the treaty has an object in it. The object is to prevent the coming of laborers. There has to be some mode of deciding who are laborers and who are not laborers, who are teachers and who are not teachers; and that is what the treaty is for.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, the treaty has an object, and so has this bill. The object of the bill is to throw such obstacles in the way as will, without regard to the treaty, greatly limit, if it does not prevent, all Chinese from coming to this country.

The Senator stated when he was last up that that was left to the Chinese Government. I do not think the Senator will be quite content to leave it there. If you leave it for them to decide, they may give passports indiscriminately to everybody who wants to come. Is that the test you are willing to apply in determining whether they are laborers? If you make the Chinese Government the judge, you must be bound by their judgment, and then you have no right to complain of anybody who comes, but you must admit that all who come under a passport with registration, &c., are entitled under the treaty to come.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Unless it is clearly shown that it was done in fraud of the treaty with the Chinese Government.

Mr. BROWN. Then what sort of tribunal would you have to try the question of fraud?

Mr. MILLER, of California. The passports would be viséd by our own consul or by our diplomatic representative in China. We would leave it to that authority.

Mr. BROWN. I reply to the Senator that our representative there is not supposed to know all the subjects of China, whether they are of the laboring class or to what class they belong.

Mr. MILLER, of California. They would have the power to investigate.

Mr. BROWN. We have made no provision in the treaty for any such investigation on their part there. We have agreed that all Chinese except laborers may go and come of their own free will.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to make a suggestion in connection with what he is saying?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir; I have no objection, though I wish to conclude as soon as possible.

Mr. HOAR. I thought it might perhaps call attention to the point the Senator was making, if he will permit me, or I will make it afterward.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly; I yield to any Senator who wishes to interrupt me.

Mr. HOAR. The point which the Senator from Georgia is making is very strongly confirmed by the fact that the bill as originally drawn undertook to enforce the treaty to that extent. The first section of the original bill, as the Senator will find on the paper which he has before him, provides—

> That all subjects or citizens of China who are students coming to the United States for purposes of education, merchants or traders engaged in lawful commerce, travelers, &c., may lawfully enter, remain in, or pass through the United States upon being identified as hereinafter provided.

That was the original proposition, which was rejected by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and instead of that comes the present bill simply prohibiting and punishing certain persons who are not found to be so and so, not repeating the authority which the treaty gives them. It shows that it was the object of the framers of the bill to make a much greater difficulty.

Mr. TELLER. The framers of the bill or the committee?

Mr. HOAR. Those who reported the bill finally propose the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. The committee.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Georgia will excuse me for the interruption.

Mr. BROWN. There is no provision in the treaty requiring the Emperor of China to decide whether a subject of his leaving the shores of China for this country is a laborer or whether he belongs to any other class. There is no provision in the treaty that provides for our consul or diplomatic representative in China determining that question.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Is there any hardship that it shall be left to him to decide?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; it would be a very great hardship. If our representative were acting there under the prejudice that most people here act under, it would be a one-sided tribunal to try the case.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am speaking of the Chinese Government. I ask is it a hardship on the Chinese Government to decide?

Mr. BROWN. When the Chinese Government has provided by treaty that its subjects shall come and go at their pleasure, you have no right to ask it of the Chinese Government. Nor have you a right to impose the burden on a Chinese wishing to come here of going a thousand miles to Peking to get a passport.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator, if he will allow me?

Mr. BROWN. I am willing to be interrupted by all Senators.

Mr. TELLER. That is not the proper statement. They have said that a certain class should not come here if we object to them. Is it unreasonable that we should designate the class when we leave it to them to make prima facie evidence of it? Certainly it is very liberal, it seems to me.

Mr. BROWN. The Senators all make the point that the treaty authorizes us to regulate, limit, and suspend the coming of laborers. I am not discussing that part of the subject. I am speaking of those who are not laborers.

Mr. MILLER, of California. How will you determine that they are not laborers?

Mr. BROWN. You will probably determine that best when they get here. If they come here, and it turns out that they are simply laborers, and you can establish that point and show that they came in violation of law and of the treaty, you can do as you propose in this bill to do by any of them who do not bring a passport and go through the long routine of registration and certificates. You can provide a way to have them sent out of the country; but you have no right, under the treaty, to prevent the classes who have a right to come from coming because some other classes are prohibited from coming.

Take this instance: suppose a Chinese teacher and students are in the Republic of Mexico to-day. They are subjects of the Government of China, and they desire to come into the United States. They are in sight of our boundary line. Under this act, if it is passed, although the treaty says they may come and go at pleasure, they must first go home to China and get a passport and sail back again before they can enter our limits, though the treaty says there shall be no such restriction upon them. Is that keeping faith with the Government of China. Is there a Senator here who can say that that is within the spirit and meaning of this treaty? I apprehend not—not one.

Have you ever heard of an instance where an Irishman or a German, before he could come to this country, must get a passport at home, bring it here and have it registered, carry it with him everywhere he goes, show it to our officers when required, present it if he wants to go back upon a visit to the old country again, and bring it again when he returns? Have they ever been cumbered with any such provision as this? Never in any case. No; they are subjects of favored nations; they are among the most favored nations; and when the Irishman and German come here they soon have the ballot in their hands, and then they are very good people, and politicians and statesmen and everybody respect them; but the Chinaman comes in and we raise the clamor that he must not enter till he has been cumbered with all these hinderances, although we have expressly pledged our faith to China that he shall be put upon the same terms and have the same exemptions, immunities, and privileges which the Irishman or the German, in the case supposed, has, or which anybody else has.

We have always claimed the right for the citizens and subjects of other nations to come to this country and find homes in our vast territory, to be naturalized and made citizens; and when so naturalized we have claimed that they are absolved from further allegiance to the country of their nativity. Great Britain denied this principle in 1812, and claimed the right to board our ships on the ocean, to look after vher subjects, or those who had been such and were then in our service. We denied her right, and fought the war of 1812 in vindication of the right of expatriation by the subjects of any government who might choose to remove to and become citizens of this country. While I do not think it would be wise to naturalize many Chinese and make them citizens, under all the circumstances, I see no reason why we should not stand by the doctrine of the right of expatriation at least to the extent of protecting all the rights possessed by Chinese subjects under the treaty of 1881. They do not claim the right of naturalization under that treaty.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. He has put a pretty lengthy one to the entire Senate. Does the Senator doubt our right to exact just such a thing as he has suggested, a passport, from every man who comes to this country, if we see fit to exact it?

Mr. BROWN. No, I do not; but I deny your right under this treaty to require it of the Chinese unless you require it of other people, because you have pledged your honor before the civilized world that you would put the Chinaman upon the terms of the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation. Whenever you put that burden on the subjects of the most favored nation you can without violation of your faith to China place it upon the Chinaman. Till then how do you justify it? I do not question your power to apply it to all immigrants, but I do deny that you treat all alike as you pledged yourselves to do when you apply it to the Chinaman and apply it to nobody else on the face of the earth. I say when we do that we do not keep faith.

I should like to hear any Senator explain how it is that we keep faith when we throw all these hinderances in the way of the Chinaman who is coming, under the provisions of this treaty, and do not put them upon the immigrant from any other power or nation on earth. Do you permit them to go and come of their own free will and accord, and do you accord to them all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to citizens and subjects of the most favored nations? Do you? I would be glad to have an answer to that question. I have been interrupted several times, and now I invite and court the interruption. Let any Senator on this floor who undertakes to defend this bill now rise and say that this bill does not violate this provision of the treaty with China. Let him say, and defend his position if he can, that this bill puts Chinese not laborers on the same terms or in the same position as the subjects of other favored nations. I pause for the interruption. Defend the position if you can.

Mr. FARLEY. How would you discriminate between them unless there was a provision of that sort? You might as well undertake to discriminate between the flies on a bee-gum on a summer's day. You cannot do it unless you have a provision of that sort.

Mr. BROWN. That is no answer. It is simply saying that to identify a person prohibited by the treaty you must, from necessity, place a burden on a person not prohibited, and from which the treaty expressly exempts him, till you have placed it on the subjects of the most favored nations; which you do not pretend has been done, and which you do not propose to do. The reason you give may be a very good one in favor of an application to the Emperor of China for a modification of this treaty; but it is no reply to the charge of violation of the treaty as it now exists. And I again assert that no such reply will or can successfully be made.

Mr. FARLEY. They have modified it once.

Mr. BROWN. As the Senator from California says, they have modified it once; and we had a pretty hard time in getting the modification we have already procured to the treaty; but when we have accepted such a modification and agreed to be bound by it, and pledged our faith to it, let us in common honesty keep faith until it is again modified.

I know we are not bound to stand by a treaty perpetually. We can give notice that we will not be bound by it, and we can abrogate it, after proper notice, without the consent of the Chinese Government or any other government. But we risk the chances of war; we risk the chances of non-intercourse; we risk the destruction of our trade and commerce with China whenever we do it. If we are willing to take the risks, we have the power to annul any treaty that we have entered into. But we must take the consequences. Now, what would be the consequence in this case?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is the Senator aware that he might go to China now, as a Senator of the United States, and that a great portion of China would be closed to him; that he could not get into it even with a passport? When he talks about the danger of offending that nation he should remember that they do not give to any class of our people any such freedom there as he demands for the Chinese here.

Mr. BROWN. Yes; and I will inform the Senator that the treaty between China and this Government does not give it to us. We got no such provision in our favor in the treaty. That again may be a good reason why the treaty needs modification. The Chinamen really were too shrewd for our statesmen, as it was avowed on my left in a speech this morning. They got the better of the treaty; but is that a reason why we should refuse to keep faith and be bound by it while it is in existence? The manly way is to seek its modification, and if that cannot be done, abide by it while it is in force and abrogate it when we must, and take the consequences.

There is another provision in the bill to which I want to refer. The provision of the treaty I have just mentioned applies as well to laborers who were at the time of the ratification of the treaty in the United States as it does to the other classes I have mentioned. They too are guaranteed the right to go and come at pleasure, of their own free will and accord. Do we propose by this legislation to carry out those provisions in good faith? Do we propose to have any regard to our own honor about it? No; we propose that they shall not go and come according to their own free will and accord, but that they must first go and register at the custom-house before they can go back to that country or go anywhere else, and when they return they must have their registration certificate or they cannot come in. If it should get lost or be burned during their absence they could not enter. The provision in the treaty that they may come and go of their own free will and accord is simply violated. I can use no milder term.

It was said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in his last remark that an American could not go into certain parts of China even with a pastport. That is true; and for a long time he could go into no part of China even with a passport. It has been a very hard struggle for the different Christian churches of this country and Great Britain and other parts of the world to get admission into the Chinese territory for our missionaries of the cross. Better relations have grown up between this country and China. They are now admitted into a large part of the empire; they have privileges that they could not have a few years ago. Suppose in this state of things we now openly violate the treaty that we have made with China and exclude her subjects from coming here as expressly provided by the treaty that they may come, would we be astonished if an edict should go forth from the Chinese throne that every missionary and every merchant of the United States shall be driven from the country? Is this what the American public seeks? Is this what the Christian people of this country desire?

But it has been said that you cannot teach them Christianity; that they will not assimilate with the people of this country. Treat the subjects of any other government on earth as you have treated the Chinese in this country, and you will find they will not assimilate. The people who hunt them down, who throw every obstacle in the way of their progress, who enact penal laws in every manner possible for their punishment for offenses that you would not call crimes in others, should not expect them to assimilate. A people thus treated could not be expected to feel inclined to assimilate.

I remember twenty-odd years ago Rev. Dr. Stiles, of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, in one of their general assemblies, in speaking of the Africans in this country, used in substance this remark, for I cannot quote his exact language: "The Southern church holds up to the gaze of heaven and earth more converted heathen than can be found in all the missionary fields of all the churches in heathen lands." How is it that six and a half million of Africans to-day on this continent and within the bounds of this Government are civilized, and a large number of them are Christianized? Because they were brought here into contact with civilization and Christianity. Our missionaries have gone to Africa, to the dark jungles from whence they came, and have tried to teach Christianity there; and what has been the success? Feeble; amounting to nothing as compared with the results where they were here among us. They were brought here as slaves, it is true, and they were in some instances maltreated; but the relations between the two races had become very cordial before the emancipation, and the result was their Christianization. Take the Chinaman by the hand and treat him as you now treat the African, and you will find him assimilate much more readily than he does with your hand turned against him, with your legislation turned against him, with your penal statutes directed against him, with no encouragement offered to him, but every possible discouragement.

No, the Chinaman does not assimilate. We do not permit him to assimilate. We offer him no inducement to assimilate; and yet with all this oppression, and I may say tyranny over him, the Christian churches even in California are planting the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ among them. I do not know what the will of Providence is upon this question. It may be that He has directed these people to our shores as He did the African people under circumstances of hardship and oppression, that they may become Christianized. If we cannot by proper treatment Christianize them here when brought into constant contact and association with a Christian people, how do you expect our missionaries to do it in the Chinese territory where everything bears the other way?

I believe in the doctrines of Christianity. I believe when it was said, "Go, teach all nations," that it was meant. When it was said in another place, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," I believe it was intended; and I believe the day will come when it will triumph in every nation; until the millennial period will be reached; and this may be one of the means. I know not what are the decrees of Providence upon this subject, but certainly there is more prospect of Christianizing the Chinese by proper treatment when they are here in contact with us than there is by sending missionaries to their country. When we violate faith with the government of that country they will naturally ask, "Is this the character of the Christianity you send us? Is this the way you keep faith? Is this your estimate of moral duty? You make a compact with us, and you pay no attention to the obligation of your compact." I do not think this is the way to Christianize or civilize the Chinese. If we want to convert them to our Christianity and our civilization we must show them that we practice a higher morality than this. In my opinion the passage of this act in this shape would be a great obstruction to the cause of Christianity in China for a long time to come.

I said that churches had already been planted among them in California. Less than two years ago the Southern Baptist convention appointed a missionary to San Francisco to teach the Gospel to that people. He has been laboring with them but a short period, and he now has a small church of Chinamen. Other denominations of Christians also have churches there. Under all the disadvantages and all the disrespect shown them there, the Gospel still makes its impression upon them; and if we should treat them differently we do not know how fast, by getting into their confidence and showing a disposition to do justice, the Gospel would spread among them.

But it is said that there is such an immense number of them, if we permit them to come here without restraint they will overrun the whole country. There have been about thirty-two years when there has been no such restraint. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was ratified, I believe, in 1848. From that time until this, so far as I know or recollect, there has been no law that prohibited the importation. What number have they reached in thirty-two years? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in his able speech told us the other day that, according to the last census, there were about 108,000 Chinese in this country, about 76,000 of those in California. Divide that into thirty years, and what has been the average each year? Between three and four thousand immigrants a year. Some years it has gone above that, some years it has fallen below. Probably there has been a larger number of immigrants, but to speak accurately, for a great many have gone back, that is the number remaining here to overrun this immense continent and subjugate the Anglo-Saxons in the United States. In thirty-two years they have succeeded in having 108,000; but as it is said the census did not embrace all, put it at 150,000, if you please, and it has been a very small importation as compared with that from other countries. Take the last year, and the reports show that there were in round numbers 669,000 immigrants into this country, nearly three-quarters of a million. How many of them were Chinamen? A mere fractional part; and last year, bear in mind, they were laboring under the stimulus that this treaty would soon be in the way, and it was better to hurry up if any of them expected to get in as laborers. Even then, I believe, some 20,000 Chinamen are all that it is claimed came to this country out of 669,000 immigrants during the year.

No, Mr. President, there is nothing in that point. There is no danger of the Chinese race, or any other Eastern race overrunning the Anglo-Saxon or any white race in Europe or America. The tide of emigration has been westward, and still westward since the days of the Goths and Vandals. Yes, it runs westward. The Chinese Empire is in a great deal more danger to-day of being overrun and subverted by Yankee energy and Yankee enterprise on the one side, and the empire of Russia on the other, and England on the ocean, than this country is of being overrun by Chinamen. If we can get a treaty there as liberal as we can by acting in good faith, at no distant day, they will admit our people without restraint, and then we may expect our merchants and manufacturers of various classes to go, and we will soon have thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of our people in China. It is a vast field opening to commerce; it is a vast field opening to manufactures and to railroads, and to every other enterprise, to steamships, to telegraphs, to telephones, to all the inventions of the age. It is a wide field open for us. No people on earth are more interested in that country than the people of the United States.

As I said in the outset, Great Britain has the lead there now. If we keep faith with Chinamen and the Chinese Government and act as we ought to act as a rising agricultural and manufacturing power, being a great silver-producing country as we are, with our great silver mines, and they being monometalists in silver, and with our manufacturing establishments making just the fabrics they need, we ought to build up a boundless trade there, and it ought to be a great field for white men's energy and thrift and gain. I do not think, then, we would act wisely to violate good faith with these people.

We have made vast expenditures to enable us to reach the immense future commerce of China, Japan, and other Asiatic nations. We have as good as donated sixty-six millions of dollars, which, with interest, now amounts to about one hundred millions of dollars and land grants covering a territory larger than the Republic of France or the German empire, to open a great highway by railroad to the commerce of the East, which brings that commerce to our doors by a route thousands of miles nearer than it can be reached by European nations. In addition to this, companies of capitalists have constructed a southern line of railroad across the continent, to put the southern section of the Union in closer relations with the Eastern powers. And still another great line is being rapidly pressed forward, known as the Northern Pacific Road. In addition to all this we have put costly lines of steamers on the Pacific Ocean. Thus, we have already expended hundreds of millions of dollars to open the highways of commerce to the Eastern empires. We produce about 60 per cent. of the cotton of the world. The 400,000,000 of people in the Chinese empire, use cotton almost exclusively for clothing. The cotton goods made by our mills meet their requirements better than those made by the mills of any other country. This alone, to say nothing of all the other commerce between the two countries, is to be a vast item especially important to the Southern States of this Union.

By the Burlingame treaty we had conciliated the government and people of China, and they have shown a disposition to cultivate the most friendly relations with us; and to engage in an active commerce which will be mutually beneficial, and which may soon grow to hundreds of millions a year. In view of all these important considerations, are we prepared to sacrifice the investments we have made, and the vast advantages opening to us for the future, by giving unnecessary and unjustifiable offense to China by a flagrant violation of our treaty stipulations with that government, when there is not even a plausible pretext for the act, as we can amply protect ourselves against the evils of any dangerous influx of Chinese laborers, and still keep within both the letter and spirit of the treaty. The commerce between this country and China is now rapidly on the increase.

In this connection I want to read from an answer to a telegram which I sent to the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics. I inquired of him what was the per cent. of increase in our commerce with the Chinese people since the Burlingame treaty. He states in reply that at the time of the adoption of the treaty it was $15,365,013. During the year ending June 30, 1881, it was $27,765,409, an increase almost doubling our commerce with China in thirteen years. Suppose we act in bad faith in this matter and offend that people and their government, where we are in the wrong, may we expect this progression of increase to go forward as it has gone since the Burlingame treaty was ratified? No; we have much more reason to suppose it will go backward, and that we will have to yield that most inviting field to England and France and other commercial nations who will deal justly by them and keep faith with them.

It has been objected, however, that the Chinamen in this country work for wages lower than our people can afford to work, and that we cannot on that account permit them to come. I state very frankly that I do not want to introduce a class of people here to interfere with the labor of this country or to reduce labor to a lower standard. I have always stood firmly by the laboring classes. I oppose every measure that looks to the reduction of the price of labor. But when you look at the statistics and statements that we read in the newspapers I believe about the highest labor now on the continent is found in the State of California. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] demonstrated that the other day in his speech. Our laborers there get better wages, when they are willing to work, than they get probably in any other State in the Union. This does not look as if Chinese labor there has ruined our working people.

But there is another insuperable objection raised. It is said the Chinese come here not to stay. It is not very consistent with the other proposition, that they are going to overrun the continent, to state that they work and get our money and then go back home again. If they work so low that nobody else can labor for half as small a price as they do, for every dollar they carry back they leave two dollars' worth of labor here. That does not destroy the country much; that does not injure the United States a great deal. If we can keep them out of conflict with other laborers—and they have been mostly engaged in railroad building and other pursuits where you could scarcely get American laborers, in the wilderness—if they do that sort of labor for us which we cannot get our people to do, and do it at half what the labor is worth, and then leave with the money, we keep in improvements two dollars for every one they take away, and our civilization has not been injured. So that point, I think, weighs but little.

I believe, Mr. President, I have gone substantially over the ground I desired to occupy in this case. As I stated in the outset, I am willing to vote for a bill to restrict, limit, and for a reasonable time suspend, in accordance with the spirit and provisions of this treaty, the importations of Chinese laborers. I do not think twenty years a reasonable period. I do not think it in conformity to the spirit and meaning of the treaty. I do think it a violation of the very spirit of the treaty. Therefore, on that point I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] which proposes to limit it to ten years. I think that is as far as the Chinese Government could permit us to go with the belief that we were acting in good faith. And to show how careful they were on this subject, they have provided in the treaty that any legislation we shall enact on this point is to be submitted to them and become the subject of negotiation if it is not reasonable. We cannot expect they will say that this is within the reason and spirit of the treaty. If they say it is not, and claim further concessions we shall probably then be too proud to make them, for we shall have acted and will not like to go back on our action, and the result will probably be disastrous to our intercourse and our commerce with that empire.

If we commence by a shorter period of limitation or suspension, and the Government of China is satisfied with it, and we still believe at the end of ten years that the importation of Chinese laborers is a positive evil, we can re-enact it; but I do not think it is wise or just, or that we keep faith when we say we will commence by an absolute inhibition for twenty years under heavy penalties. If that is the letter of the treaty it is clearly not the spirit of it, and as statesmen, most of us lawyers, knowing something of the rules of construction, it is our duty to deal fairly and construe this instrument as we do other legal documents, and then to carry out faithfully its provisions until we have changed them or have given notice that we will no longer be bound by the treaty.

I know I do not occupy the popular side of this question. In a somewhat protracted political career it has frequently been my misfortune to differ with majorities, and to stand in the current without flinching, while the surging waves of popular disapproval rolled over me and lashed me with their fury. And I have afterward lived to see the storm subside, the elements become calm and tranquil, and to hear the plaudit of well done, for the act that provoked the storm.

The statesman who adopts the rule of pandering to popular opinion may float peacefully with the current for the time, but he will soon be called to answer at the same bar of public opinion for acts which at the time of their performance were hailed with delight. My rule is to inquire: Is it right? And if right to move forward without fear. I would rather be right than popular. I would rather have the approval of my own conscience than the plaudits of the multitude, or the temporary approval of those who are controlled by their passions and not by their reason and their judgment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I intend to vote for this bill, though very likely before I do so I may vote for some amendments, but I do not intend to vote for this bill for the reasons which some Senators have announced as those which induce them to vote for it. I do not intend to vote for the bill because the Senators from California vote for it, or because the people of California demand this kind of legislation; for if I did not think the legislation was perfectly proper I should not vote for it even under that pressure. I shall vote for it because I believe that we have, first, the right to pass this bill independent of any question of treaty. As a question of law it cannot be doubted that the Government of the United States may hinder any class of people from coming in that it sees fit. That has been too well established and too well settled to admit of any controversy. If we had been unable to secure a treaty of this character I should be quite ready myself to vote to keep the Chinese out of this country en masse as they have been coming; but that question can hardly arise, although it seems to have been alluded to a number of times in the debate, when we have here a treaty provision with China that expressly authorizes us to restrict the coming of Chinese, or a class of Chinese at least. I am opposed to their coming here for the reason that they do not come for the purpose that was suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR]—and he made a very strong appeal and one that goes to the heart of every man in the country and awakens his sympathies—when he asked: Shall we shut our doors against people who are flying from oppression and people who seek this country to enjoy religious or civil liberty?

Why, Mr. President, whenever that class of people come here I shall be ready to open the doors, although they may come in hordes and although they may be copper-colored or black. I will be ready at all times to extend to them a welcoming hand. I will divide this magnificent heritage of ours with any people who come for that purpose. But these people do not come for that purpose. No Chinaman ever came here with an idea of exercising any greater intellectual liberty or civil liberty of any character or kind than he did at home. It is safe to say that the most abject Chinaman that ever came to this country came here with a great sense of his superiority, came here with the feeling that he in everything that went to make a man exceeded the best man in this country. Probably among all the races of the human family, with one exception, there is not a class of people who have such a contempt for any other civilization than their own. The only exception is probably the aborigines of this country, who entertain precisely the same opinion and have the same feelings.

These people come here simply to better their financial condition for the time. They do not come here with an intention to remain; they have no conception of dying and being buried in this country, or of raising families and building up the State and participating in the management of governmental affairs here.

I notice that some Senator has offered an amendment to this bill that no Chinaman shall be naturalized. Why, Mr. President, unless he could see some direct benefit growing out of it in a financial way no Chinaman would ever seek to be naturalized in this country. No Chinaman desires to participate in the affairs of government in this country. He considers it beneath him; he will not repudiate his allegiance to his own country for the purpose of voting unless he should discover that he could sell that vote, and when he discovered that I believe the entire Chinese population of California would rush to the courts to be naturalized; not, as I say, because they want to take part in the administration of public affairs, but to make money out of it.

If these people came here and brought their families and settled down and said: "we propose to live here, we propose that our children shall grow up here and be citizens and subjects of this Government," I might in that case be inclined to favor them to some extent; but when there is not any thing of that kind it is nonsense to talk to us about keeping open our doors and extending our hands to a class of people who are attempting to flee from oppression in other lands.

I know that the Senators who have opposed the passage of this bill, and notably the Senator who has just taken his seat and another Senator, have spoken of the advantage of cheap labor. Mr. President, I am not insensible to the fact that from one stand-point it is always desirable to have cheap labor; I am not insensible to the fact that when you have increased the power of one man to manufacture with machinery you have probably made the country richer; but I deny that when you have brought into this country a great mass of people who come here and simply work as laborers and who go away, they in the end have permanently benefited this country at all. I do not believe that the greatness and the glory of any people consist in the number of dollars and cents that are piled up in the treasury of the country or in the banks. I deny that national greatness consists in the number of railroads that it may have, in the great cities that it may build. Its wealth, its greatness, its glory is in the people who constitute the mass of that government, and when by any system you have degraded a great proportion of the people of any country, no matter though you may have grown rich in dollars and in cents, you have destroyed the glory of that land.

Now, Mr. President, it is said that in California labor is high, and therefore the Chinese cannot have injured the American laborers there. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts the other day read an extract from a newspaper. Let me read it again. He read it to prove that labor was high in California and that the people were demanding this kind of labor. This is taken, I believe, from a California newspaper:

> In the matter of servants, wages are from $25 to $30 per month, and even then the girls are not willing to go to places where there are more than two or three children, and are very particular as to the work to be done. They are not willing to go into the country, and seem to be determined to accept no place except that in which the work is light. A few days ago a gentleman in Sacramento sent an order for a cook, at $20 per month. The manager of an employment agency tried to get one of over forty girls to take the place, but none would go. The Ladies' Protection and Relief Society could not get a Protestant cook for $30 from among the same lot of girls waiting for a situation. No one would go to San Luis Obispo to do general house work at $25.

Then at the bottom of the article, skipping a portion of what the Senator read:

The wages paid Chinamen as house-servants are about the same as those paid to white help in the East, where the average wages are about $3 per week.

Any man who has seen this kind of labor——

Mr. MILLER, of California. That paper is four years old.

Mr. TELLER. Things may have changed as to the wages, but any man who has seen this kind of labor will readily understand that the reason why these girls decline to go is that whenever you put in a kitchen in California, or any other place, a "heathen Chinee," so called, that moment you must expect that you will not get an intelligent American girl to go into that kitchen thereafter. The character of the laborer has degraded the labor. We have seen that in a small way in this part of the country. I can recollect when, forty years ago, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts the other day, the best girls in the land went into the kitchen and did work, and were the equals of everybody else in the community in which they lived; but when there came a class of immigration to this country not quite equal to that class of help in intelligence and education, a class that did not feel themselves the equals of these American girls, and when they went into the kitchens all over the country, then the American girl went out of the kitchen and remains out to this day. So it is in California. It is a rule that has never failed; the history of the world for two thousand years will show that it has never failed; that whenever you put an inferior class of people to doing a particular sort of work, that moment the superior class of people decide that they will not do that kind of work, and labor is degraded exactly in proportion as the character of the man who does it is lower than that of the man who has heretofore done it. You may go all over the country to day, and you will find that to be true now. The Chinaman in California has made labor unpopular and disreputable and discreditable.

We saw the same thing in the South before the war, when the sons of the white man, poor as poverty, would decline to work in the cotton-field. Why? Because the work in the cotton-field was done mainly by a class of men whom he regarded as his inferiors. The sons of the northern farmer cultivated their wheat-fields and their corn-fields with as much of a feeling of equality with every other man as it was possible for one man to feel toward others; but not so in the South. The moment a young white man stepped into the field and worked by the side of servile labor, that moment he took the place socially of the men with whom he worked.

Thus it has been ever in all the history of the world, as I before stated. When in the early days of Rome and Greece work was done by the citizen, then labor was honorable, then the man who toiled and labored in the field aspired to the highest positions in the gift of the people. Not so when the labor began to be done by servile hands. Then the people said it is degrading to labor, and then the decay of the nations began when the great mass of the people looked down with contempt upon the men who had thus been laboring.

It is because I believe the strength, the glory, and the greatness of this nation lies in the men who by the sweat of their brow eat their bread that I am opposed to putting them on an equality with any class of men inferior to them. Why, Mr. President, reference has been made to the negro in this country. There is no analogy. The negro was here, he had a right to be here, and by law we made him a citizen. He had a right to invoke every protection of the law, and common decency required that we should give him all the protection that the law could afford. But let us look the truth in the face. Has the fact that the negro uneducated is doing the labor of any State elevated labor? Has it made it respectable? Will it make it respectable? Will it make it respectable in the future? Because we have one evil, shall we fly to another? Shall we take more of that class into the body-politic? We are not required by the rules of equity or by any other rules to make Chinese a part and parcel of our body-politic.

Mr. President, I say that is one reason that ought to make every man in this country consider that he owes more to the people of this land than he owes to any other; and my philanthropy will never get so big that to the people of the United States, born upon its soil, I shall not concede rights that I do not concede to people from other parts of the world. And, so believing, I believe it is time to meet this question to-day, whether you are to put the four hundred millions of Asiatics who can come here (and who cannot only drive out your labor, but who can degrade it) on a par with the American citizen or not. I am not afraid to put myself upon the broad ground that, independent of the wants of California, independent of the wants of her Senators, I am prepared to record my vote in favor of the protection of American labor, not simply by protecting it in our manufactures, but to prevent it from being brought in contact with a labor that must necessarily degrade it whenever it comes in contact with it.

Mr. President, believing as I believe, I am prepared to vote for this bill, and I vote for it with no excuse. I vote for it with pleasure, not speaking now of its details but of the principle, because I see no other way to protect American labor in this country; not only against Chinese but any other class of people who may come to this country lacking the qualifications that I think the immigration should have, I would be willing to legislate against and to restrict. Suppose that from some of the populous regions of Africa thousands and hundreds of thousands of those people should attempt to come to this country. I would not exclude them because they were black, but I would exclude them because if they came here they would injure the people of the United States and would prevent the people of the United States from having a fair opportunity to make their living by doing the work, and consequently they would make labor degrading; and that is why I am prepared to vote for this bill.

I noticed the criticisms of the Senator from Florida; I noticed that he said the bill was imperfect. I am willing to vote for anything that will make it in accordance with the treaty and yet not destroy the very purpose and object of the bill.

Mr. President, during the last political campaign a letter was published in this country that is known to everybody as the Morey letter. It made a great deal of excitement. Why? Because it was said the candidate of one of the political parties had announced that he was in favor of putting the American laborer by the side of the Asiatic laborer, because he had said that it was the right of capital to buy labor wherever it saw fit, without reference to its quality or its character. There rose up in the Republican party the whole party en masse and averred that their candidate had never written such a letter, and that if he had ever written such a letter or uttered such a sentiment they would repudiate him en masse; and in my judgment he would not have have carried a single State in this Union if that charge had been made good, and he ought not to have carried a single State. The Democratic party, a portion of them, sought to fasten it on him. Why? Because they knew it was contrary to the sentiments of the people of the United States. They knew the people did not recognize the right of capital to buy labor at the expense of the men who are already laborers in this land. We all repudiated it, both political parties; but to-day I hear in this Senate the same sentiment uttered, that the capitalists of the country have the right to take labor wherever they can get it the cheapest, and if we object we are to be met with the statement that we are destroying the trade with China, and our people will thereby suffer. Mr. President, we had better quit the trade with China or lose ten times that amount than refuse this kind of legislation.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me? I used no such threat in debate. I do not know whether anybody else did; I have not heard it from any one.

Mr. TELLER. The honorable Senator did not say that in words.

Mr. BROWN. Or in substance.

Mr. TELLER. I referred to the principle. The Senator said cheap labor is valuable.

Mr. BROWN. I said no such thing.

Mr. TELLER. In substance, he did say it.

Mr. BROWN. I did not.

Mr. TELLER. In substance another Senator on that side of the Chamber said it was valuable.

Mr. BROWN. I cannot speak for others.

Mr. TELLER. That has been one of the strong arguments used against this bill, that we are driving out cheap labor and are substituting for it a higher labor. That is what I am willing to do; that is what I am anxious to do. I am anxious that the man who toils as a common laborer should have opportunities to educate his children, to make his children the equals of every other man's children in the land, and that cannot be done if you deny to him the protection of the law under circumstances like these.

Again, can the poor man who has no profession in California, who is brought in contact with this Chinese labor, earn money enough to educate his family as he could do if the whole labor of the country was done not by Chinese but by the Caucasian people? I say he cannot do it, and independent of the question of the degradation that he feels when labor is being done by an inferior race, he is suffering.

But I noticed that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts spoke of this race as not an inferior race; and he quoted from Sumner and from Humboldt to show that we ought not to recognize inferior races. Mr. President, that may be all right in theory; but in practice nobody pretends that is true. The Caucasian race has a right, considering its superiority of intellectual force and mental vigor, to look down upon every other branch of the human family; a portion of the Anglo-Saxon race has claimed for itself the right to look down upon others of the Caucasian race because of their intellectual and moral superiority. All this may be nice in theory, but it is not true in fact, and when you come to make the application it does not work worth a cent. We are the superior race to-day. We are superior to the Chinese, though they go back with their three or four or five thousand years of civilization. As stated by some Senator the other day on the floor of the Senate, the civilization of the Chinese has not proceeded one whit, except as it has gathered some things from contact with us in the last few years, from what it was twenty-five hundred years ago. It has stood still or it has retrograded, and it has not gone on; and for that people there is not, as supposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, any future. It is in numbers great; it is in patience and intelligence great; in ability to live under adverse circumstances it is great. It is the best illustration, as stated here the other day, of the doctrine of the survival of the fittest and of the adaptation of the human race to a certain condition of affairs. They can live upon a meager diet, because for generation after generation they have schooled themselves and educated their race to that method of living. Do we want to try it? Not at all. We do not want it. We want to leave those men there, and if my friend from Georgia is anxious to send them the ministry of the Gospel, let him carry out the very letter of the Scripture and send it to them, and not bring them to it.

But, Mr. President, that will not bear the test of examination. Of the hundred thousand that are here, and have been here for years, will some man from the Pacific coast tell me how many have become Christian people, what percentage of them? Not one-tenth of 1 per cent. have ever adopted the Christian faith or the Christian religion. They all with one accord deny it. They are a people actually without religion of any kind or any character. As they have been schooled in this from the earliest times, as with a Chinese what was is the best thing that can be, so they will ever remain.

I did not intend when I rose to occupy the Senate so long; but I just wanted to say that while other Senators may vote for the bill with a sort of apology, I have no apology to make when I vote for this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not intend to delay the vote on this bill——

Mr. GARLAND. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. DAWES. I do not intend myself to occupy more than ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. GARLAND. If the Senator will give way I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DAWES. I will accede to the wish of the Senator in this matter. What little I desire to say I can say at one time as well as another. I have no prepared speech to make.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 6, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

FRANK GALT.

Mr. CAMP, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and hereby is, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Frank Galt, as assistant to Journal Clerk, the per diem compensation of committee clerks from December 5, 1881, to February 28, 1882, inclusive.

Mr. CAMP moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs this morning on the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, on which, under the rules, the yeas and nays will be taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to recommit the bill with the following instructions:

Resolved, That the pending bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to amend the bill by striking therefrom all the provisions in relation to envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, and also all provisions in relation to ministers resident and secretaries of legation, and all appropriations for salaries of such envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary and ministers resident and secretaries, and to further amend the bill by inserting therein provisions for the appointment of all such consuls and other commercial agents as shall be necessary to promote and encourage the commerce of the United States and to protect the interests of citizens of the United States in foreign countries, and providing suitable salaries for all such consuls and commercial agents.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 79.

Mr. ATHERTON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth not voting in favor thereof.

So the resolution was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 30, not voting 92; as follows:

SOLOMON K. RUGGLES.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4927) granting a pension to Solomon K. Ruggles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF CHARGES OF DESERTION.

Mr. GEDDES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4928) to empower the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from the military records in all cases where the same is unjust; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

IMPORTATION OF LUMBER.

Mr. GEDDES also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4929) providing for a modification of the revenue laws so as to permit the importation of certain lumber into the United States of America free of import duty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MANSFIELD, OHIO.

Mr. GEDDES also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4930) to provide for the erection of a building at the city of Mansfield, Ohio, for the accommodation of the post-office and other offices of the Government of the United States at said place; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

JOSHUA JOHNSON.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4946) for the relief of Joshua Johnson; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. No, to the Committee on Military Affairs. This bill was introduced in the Forty-sixth Congress and referred to the Committee on War Claims, who reported it back stating that they had no jurisdiction of the claim.

The SPEAKER. The question is where it goes under the rules.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I know; but the Committee on War Claims considered this claim and reported back to the House asking to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and asking that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That is the report of the Committee in the Forty-sixth Congress. It would be a great hardship to this man to have this bill sent back to a committee that held it during one Congress and then reported it back and asked to have it properly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair, as a matter of course, under the rules would, without this information, refer it to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules it goes there.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Not necessarily—not unless there is nothing to disclose it should go elsewhere.

The SPEAKER. On the face of the claim it shows it is an appropriation to pay for services during the war; and a great many times this session that question has come up and been decided, not only by the Chair but by the House, in favor of reference to the Committee on War Claims. The Chair decides this bill, under the precedents and under the rule, must go to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Hear me one word. I ask that it be put to a vote of the House. In the Forty-sixth Congress we had precisely the same question. Under the rule the bill was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. That was right.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. That committee reported back it had no jurisdiction and the bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. And this claimant was kept out of relief during that Congress by reason of that action. Now, then, with that action in view, is it proper to refer the bill again to the Committee on War Claims?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I know; but the action of the committee of the Forty-sixth Congress should be considered as an instruction to the House on the subject of the reference of this bill. That report at least should indicate the proper line of action to the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill was properly referred in the Forty-sixth Congress, and if by any mistake it was changed improperly that is no argument for violating the law now. The question has been submitted frequently to the House this session and frequently decided. There is a large number of bills of the same character referred to the Committee on War Claims. This was properly referred during the last Congress, as the same character of bills have been properly referred, during this Congress, to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I believe it is my duty to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in view of the facts I have stated. I demand a division of the House on the question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 26.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on War Claims, under the rule, and ordered to be printed.

MARY E. S. FUREY.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4947) granting a pension to Mary E. S. Furey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. MANNING. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution introduced by me this morning proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall become a part of the Constitution; namely:

That section 2 of article 3 of the Constitution of the United States be amended as follows:

"The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under this authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, and other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

"In all cases affecting embassadors and other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as Congress may make.

"The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed."

FRIDAY EVENING SESSIONS FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, until the further order of the House, on Friday of each week the House will take a recess at four o'clock and thirty minutes until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions only shall be considered.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was adopted.

SALE OF LEAF TOBACCO.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to repeal the sixth clause of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the sale of leaf-tobacco.

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the sixth clause of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as imposes a fine or penalty on any farmer or producer of tobacco who may sell the same to a consumer be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and hereafter all farmers or others producing tobacco shall be allowed to sell tobacco of their own or tenants' production without any license or penalty whatever.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask that the second be considered as ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think the vote had better be taken on seconding.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, and Mr. DIBRELL were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 83, noes 66.

So the motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule fifteen minutes is allowed for debate on each side.

Mr. DIBRELL. The passage of this bill, according to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, will only reduce the revenue about six hundred dollars. During the last fiscal year only five persons took advantage of the law and obtained licenses under it, yielding a revenue to the Government of $583, while it cost the Government $10,000 to enforce the law. The present law is a great hardship on farmers in the interior who raise small crops of tobacco and who have no licensed dealers in their vicinity to whom they can sell it. The passage of this bill will enable them to sell their small crops of tobacco. I do not think that any sensible man who will look at the matter aright will be disposed to continue this hardship on farmers and harass and annoy them by imposing this tax upon them. I now yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HATCH.]

Mr. HATCH. The bill presented by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBRELL,] to repeal so much of that section of the Revised Statutes which prohibits a farmer from selling in the open market the products of his own land, is, in my judgment, the most important bill that has been presented for the consideration of the Forty-seventh Congress. There is no other statute, national or State, like the one which this bill proposes to repeal. It prohibits the grower of a crop from going into the open market and selling to the highest and the best bidder. As the gentleman has stated, it does not affect the revenues of the Government to the extent of one dollar. It costs the Government more every year to collect the license under this law than the revenue which they derive from it. The effect of the law is to force the small farmer either to permit his crop of tobacco to hang in his barn until it rots, or to send it a long distance to a licensed dealer to sell for any price that dealer may fix upon it.

The object of the bill now under consideration is not to interfere with the sale of manufactured tobacco. In my opinion it will not affect the sale of manufactured tobacco to the extent of one dollar a year. The great body of farmers who prefer to chew or to smoke unmanufactured tobacco, "long green," raise it now and use it at home.

Each planter who raises as much as a hogshead or more of tobacco can afford to ship it to Saint Louis or Louisville or Cincinnati, or to any great city where there is a "tobacco break," and sell it in the open market through his commission merchant. But the great majority of tobacco growers in the section of Missouri that I have the honor to represent on this floor do not raise large crops of tobacco, and the consequence of the law is that except at one, two, or three local places they are compelled to send their crops of tobacco hundreds of miles to Saint Louis, or give it away, or rather to let it rot in the barn, for under the law they are not allowed even to give it away.

Now, why should the farmer, I ask you, gentlemen, be restricted in selling his crop of tobacco any more than he would his crop of corn, or wheat, or any other crop that he raises? "Ah," say the revenue officials, "a revenue is derived from manufactured tobacco." Well, does not the Government derive a revenue from manufactured corn? When corn is manufactured and sold, it brings revenue to the Government; yet the farmer can sell his corn to whom he pleases. If this restriction in regard to tobacco be removed, the moment the farmer sells his tobacco to the country merchant it then passes under all the restrictions of the revenue laws and the Government derives the benefit of whatever tax may be imposed, for the purchaser can only sell it to a licensed dealer.

Under the existing law on this subject there have occurred some of the most outrageous hardships ever known in this country under any law enacted by Congress. Men living long distances from the Federal courts have been dragged from their homes from one hundred to three hundred miles to answer prosecutions for selling two or three pounds of tobacco to a neighbor, to be used as a cure for hog cholera or something else of that kind.

I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, a statement of a single instance which recently occurred in Saint Louis. It is copied from the Post-Dispatch of January 5, 1882. And this is not an extreme case. Hundreds like it have occurred in Missouri in the last two or three years.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUSTICE—IT THROWS AN OLD MAN ON A BEGGAR'S RESOURCES IN A STRANGE CITY.—"Well, here I am, an old man in a strange city, and without a cent of money in my pocket, and two hundred miles away from home," said Isaac Murray, as he stood in Jailer Ryan's office at the four courts this afternoon almost in despair, after serving thirty days in jail, a sentence pronounced by Judge Treat, for selling some leaf tobacco without license. "I live in Macon County in this State, and am a farmer by occupation. Nearly three months ago I was arrested by the United States marshal for selling a few strips of tobacco without a license. I have only one arm and I'm almost disabled. I'm now going on my sixty-sixth year. At my trial I admitted selling the tobacco for a few dollars, and was sent to the city jail for thirty days. The time expired this morning, and I was discharged, but Lord knows I wish I could stay there, for I'd get something to eat and a place to sleep at least. I don't know a soul in this city, and what am I going to do? I've been over to the mayor's office but he won't do anything for me. I was at the United States court, but the deputy marshal said he wouldn't let me see the judge, and God knows I don't know what to do when night comes on if I don't get assistance from some quarter. If I could get back to Macon County I would be all right, but it looks now as if I'd have to starve right here in the city's streets." He was advised to go to the United States marshal himself, and turning his coat collar up about his weather-beaten face he started out in the sleet.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBRELL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I think that on our side of the House there is some misunderstanding as to the effect of this proposed amendment of our revenue laws. I for one am opposed to adopting any measure which will destroy the revenue we are now receiving from the tax on tobacco. But this measure has not that object in view.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will not that be the result?

Mr. WHITE. No, sir; it will not have that result. The object of this measure has been clearly stated by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HATCH.] In remote parts of the country there is no such agent as is required by law, and the producer frequently has not enough tobacco to justify him in going fifty or one hundred miles to hunt up an agent. The result is a constant temptation to violate the law, which I may say in too many cases plays in the hands of these spies or informers, who are sustained by the miserable system of fees, which brings nothing to the Government; which is all the time a drain on the Treasury. Pass this bill, and you remove that incentive to violate the law. You give the producer what he is justly entitled to, the right to sell his product in open market. If the man who buys from the producer undertakes to traffic in this product he comes under another clause of the law, and is required to pay a license. This measure is not intended to relieve such traffickers from the procurement of license. It simply says to the producer, especially in remote parts of the country, who has a few pounds of tobacco to sell, that he may sell it to the actual consumer, or indeed to any purchaser, without hunting up an agent of the Government.

I appeal to my friends on the Republican side of the House not to vote against this bill, for it will not have the effect which they imagine. A gentleman sitting here asks how we limit the provisions of the bill. The bill simply provides that the man who produces the tobacco shall have the right to sell it without having paid the license tax now required.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. He has the right to sell now.

Mr. WHITE. He has no right to sell unless he himself or the man to whom he sells has paid this $300 tax.

Mr. McCOOK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. McCOOK. Has the gentleman any report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommending this change?

Mr. WHITE. I have not.

Mr. McCOOK. Does he recommend it?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. On the contrary, he said that such provision would practically strike down the collection of all revenue from tobacco.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say only one word in conclusion. It is not fair, it is not just, it is not in accordance with our ideas of free government that a man who happens to live one hundred miles from one of these agents shall be practically prohibited from selling his product.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBRELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. DIBRELL. I will reserve that until the other side has been heard.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a minute or two. I stopped this bill because on an important question of this kind it should not go through with a rush. If we understand it, and it is proper, it is time enough to pass it after we understand it, and not before. I will yield to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who knows all about these subjects. The bill is written for this occasion, and has not been referred to any committee, and consequently has not received the sanction of any committee. I may say, without reflection on any gentleman, it is in many parts very inartificially constructed, and would not work much reform. It proceeds to repeal so much of the sixth clause of a certain section as imposes a penalty, but the sixth clause imposes no penalty whatever. Therefore a large portion of the bill is of no account.

It has been said in argument on this bill the farmer may sell in open market, but if I read this bill right, and I think I can, "all farmers and others producing tobacco shall be allowed to sell their own or their tenant's production without any license or penalty whatever." It says nothing about open market.

I say at the outset—I presume gentlemen will make it plain—this opens the door to break down the tax on tobacco and gives almost unlimited occasion for fraud and imposition. Therefore, I say it should not, without the sanction of the Internal Revenue Bureau or without the approbation of the committee, be put through the House under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask the gentleman to allow me to make one suggestion. I perceive there is great misapprehension as to the scope of this bill. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the revenue derived from this tax that is proposed to be repealed by this bill for the last year was only $500 or $600. There are only five licensed leaf-dealers in the United States, and yet for the purpose of getting this amount of revenue we hamper the sale by every producer of tobacco in the country. That is altogether wrong.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I want to be as generous as possible, but the gentleman must not ask me to give him all my time. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have labored longer and harder for the repeal of this system than any other gentleman on this floor. On the 1st of June, 1868, I presented to this House the hardships inflicted by our internal-revenue laws on the growers of tobacco. In 1872 I took occasion, when discussing the question of the repeal of our internal-revenue taxes, to say:

> The bill also provides how the farmer may sell his crop, and in what quantities he may sell it; I mean the farmer who grows tobacco. What! has it come to this, that an American citizen may not sell his crop where he pleases and as he pleases? Yes, if you are going to perpetuate this anti-republican system of taxation you must, in order that the manufacturer of tobacco may be able to pay his taxes, provide that the farmers shall not sell unmanufactured tobacco to those who may smoke or chew it.

And there is the pith of the whole question.

Mr. Speaker, I have recently appealed to the public from the stand and through the press to relieve our industries from this system of restraint and necessary espionage. But this measure proposes to begin at the wrong end. This is to open a door for allowing your revenue, so far as tobacco is concerned, to be frittered away.

The gentleman says it will cost the Government $600 a year. This question is before the Committee on Ways and Means, and is receiving very grave consideration. I was present at the hearing of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before the sub-committee having it in charge, and when the question was put to him, upon the suggestion that it involved a loss of but $600, he said, That does not indicate the loss; you cannot estimate the loss. That provision is the manufacturer's protection, and if you allow farmers to sell, it will be bought in small quantities and converted by hand into little twists, and the manufacturer's stock will be depreciated in his hands from the time the law goes into effect.

Mr. HATCH. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KELLEY. I will co-operate with gentlemen on that side and on this in all just efforts to relieve the country of internal taxation. I have been instructed by the course of the patriots who organized the Government under the Constitution, the men who gave us our earliest law. I have seen how they struggled against internal taxation. I have seen how the people of my own State rose in armed rebellion against the supervision it required. I have read Jefferson's letter to Madison denouncing the excise system as an infernal one, that would destroy the liberties of the people. I have seen that such taxes were resorted to in the war of 1812, and were repealed by one of the first acts of Congress after the close of that war. But while you retain internal taxes you must, if you wish your people to pay the tax fully and honestly, protect those upon whom it is assessed. And to repeal this law, Mr. Speaker, would be, as I have said, to throw the whole tobacco trade open to the depreciation of the stock in the hands of every manufacturer from the hour your repeal went into effect.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to know if the cost of the execution of this law does not amount to more than the revenue which the Government derives from it?

Mr. KELLEY. I will answer the gentleman. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue laughed at the idea, and said that nobody could estimate the consequences that would follow if it was repealed. That matter of licenses, said he, is hardly worth taking into account. He seemed to think that to reduce the cost of the license would be a little matter; but he said no man can imagine the percentage of the tax upon tobacco that will be lost if the law allowing the farmer to sell his own stock is passed.

I am as anxious as any of you can be to get rid of the system of taxation which puts the whole process of the business of a particular class under cruel supervision, and subjects an ignorant man engaged in it to penalties, the provisions of which he has possibly never dreamed. But let us do it like legislators. Let us do it after inquiry. Let us do it on the report of a committee competent to investigate the subject, and anxious to win reputation by so modifying the tax laws of the country as to redound to the prosperity and the best interests of the Government and the people. But do not let us undertake in this manner to enter upon a system the end of which no man can see.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I would like to interrupt the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. The trouble is, if the gentleman will permit me, that your Committee on Ways and Means will never report a bill of that kind, favorably or otherwise. For the last six Congresses attempts have been made to secure just such legislation, but they have invariably failed to make any report on the bills. I offered several during the Forty-sixth Congress, and one during this——

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to know the source of the gentleman's prescience?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I speak from the records of this House. I judge of the future by the past.

Mr. KELLEY. You are referring to the records of the past. I point to the probabilities of the future. [Applause.]

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Many similar bills have been referred at this session and no report has been made.

Mr. KELLEY. I say to the gentleman that I believe the committee will, within a fortnight, bring in a bill reducing the internal revenue taxes from fifty to seventy-five millions of dollars; and when that is done it will be for us to see whether gentlemen will aid us in the good work of emancipating the South, for it is the South that is the largest sufferer by these laws.

Mr. HOUSE. Will the gentleman's committee report a bill at this session?

Mr. KELLEY. I will not help you to open the flood-gate by which your principal source of revenue to the Union will be lost. I will never consent to such hasty and inconsiderate legislation. I will go systematically to work with you to get rid of the whole system which Jefferson denounced as an infernal one, and which is now an unnecessary burden upon the people.

Mr. HATCH. Now, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HATCH. If this system is so bad as the gentleman admits that it is, why not open this flood-gate now, and give to the honest farmers of this country the right to protect themselves in their honest labors, even if the manufacturers are to lose a little by it? Why not give the farmers of the country the benefit?

Mr. KELLEY. My dear sir, this is a system which became necessary to provide for the raising of revenue when we were at war with the proudest, the bravest, and the ablest enemy with which the armies of any country ever had to contend. It was a system devised for the support and maintenance of the Government when we were expending millions of dollars a day in bringing the South back into the Union, and we had to establish——

Mr. HATCH. But the war ended eighteen years ago. It is certainly time now to modify an iniquitous system.

Mr. KELLEY. I say that it was a system established when the Government in support of its very existence was called upon to devise means to raise a revenue. And I, more than any southern man, have labored to emancipate you from it; but I ask that it be done decently and after proper consideration.

Mr. HATCH. Then if you want to do it, I ask you now to take off this galling yoke from the farmers of the country.

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir. I will not help you to perpetrate a fraud upon the dealers in manufactured tobacco.

Mr. HATCH. It is not a fraud. The only wrong is upon the farmers. The farmers of this country are not peddlers of tobacco. It will not affect the interests of the dealers to the amount of a single cent.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. KELLEY. Is there any time left on this side of the discussion?

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. WHITE. Then I hope the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. KELLEY. I cannot. Your time has expired. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the time (two minutes) allowed me for this discussion is too short to say something and too long to say nothing.

The system which this amendment proposes to change has been provided so as to insure the collection of the revenue tax upon tobacco, and I only desire to say to the House that in order to secure the collection of the tax imposed by law, it is necessary to trace the tobacco from the field where it grows, or rather from the hands of the producer to the manufacturer. Hence it is provided that he who raises tobacco may use it for himself if desired, but when he puts it upon the market to be sold, it will be purchased only by dealers who have paid the special tax, i. e., been licensed as dealers; and wherefore? Why, in order that the Government may trace that tobacco, and thereby collect the tax upon it. Otherwise it is impossible. If you permit every one who grows tobacco to sell it where he will and to whomsoever he will, the result will be that so far as the manufacturers are concerned, those who have built up their business under the present system will be stricken down, and it will be impossible to collect the tax as it is now done.

If gentlemen on the other side are pleased to co-operate with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in striking down the internal-revenue tax, so be it. I should oppose it. But if it be deemed well that it should be stricken down, let it be done, as the gentleman says, decently and in order. But to pass this bill and modify existing law, as is proposed, is only to defeat the collection of the tax. Not only that; it would ruin every tobacco manufacturer in the country; and for the reason I have suggested, every farmer becomes a quasi manufacturer, and one-half of the tobacco would pay no tax at all.

Mr. TUCKER. Let me suggest to my friend from Ohio that the language of the bill is that the producer may sell his raw product, not manufactured tobacco.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Exactly, and the man who buys it may use it; and experience has shown he sells it in the market, and each man who buys becomes a manufacturer, at least for his own use. That is the practical result.

So far as the alleged hardships on the producer are concerned, there is no hardship. He in fact loses nothing, while the Government is protected in collecting its tax.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] is entitled to two minutes.

Mr. SPEER. Agreeing as I do in the main in the opinions of the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means on this question of internal taxation, I regret, sir, that I cannot assent to his objections to this bill and to the reasons he gave for them. I know how hard is the operation of the law sought to be changed on the agricultural people whom I here in part represent. This bill is not to the injury of the manufacturer. There is no rule which requires the tobacco to be traced to the man who produces it, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] stated it. The manufacturer pays so much per pound on the manufactured article, and the tobacco is not traced to the producer, as the gentleman inaccurately states. [Mr. BUTTERWORTH rose.] I have not time to yield to the gentleman.

Sir, the farmer can sell without tax his cabbages raised on one patch or his potatoes raised on another; but he cannot sell his leaf tobacco from the next patch. These laws are oppressive, unequal, unrighteous. So iniquitous is this system that it was stated by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] before the Committee on Ways and Means that he knew of a farmer in his State who was indicted and prosecuted for manufacturing tobacco, he having simply twisted up the green leaves from his own field and put them under the corner of the rail fence to dry them.

It is this harsh, this vexatious system which the bill is in a measure intended to strike down. I ask it, we all ask it, for the relief of the agricultural people whom we represent all over the South and the West. At remote points from the railroads the small farmers can raise in the little rich coves on the sides of the mountains and in the fat bottoms of their branch lands small quantities of tobacco; and so far off are they from these licensed purchasers that it would cost the value of three loads to haul one load to market. And this bill simply asks that the farmer be permitted to sell the leaf tobacco, not the manufactured, to his neighbor or any other person who desires to purchase it. Sir, the hardship of this mischievous law is unbearable, and this Congress will strike it from the statutes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. DIBRELL. To test who are the friends of the farmer and the producer, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 113, nays 91, not voting 88; as follows:

Mr. CALDWELL. I am announced as paired with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.] I have voted for this bill, but did so after consultation with the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. ALDRICH.] I deem it due to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] and to myself to make this statement.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. HOUK,] but being informed that he would vote as I did, I have voted for this measure, and deem it proper to make this announcement.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to say that I was not in when my name was called. I am paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut. If I had been present and permitted to vote I would have voted "ay."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 80) in behalf of the American Company of Revisers of the New Testament for return and remission of duties.

DAVIS ISLAND DAM.

Mr. ERRETT. I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1514) appropriating $100,000 for continuing the work on Davis Island Dam, and to pass the same at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of continuing the work on the Davis Island Dam in the Ohio River, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and in anticipation of part of the appropriation for such purpose in the regular river and harbor act.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill which has just been read, and to pass the same.

Mr. ERRETT. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will demand a second, so that the report may be read.

Mr. PAGE. The report is a short one, and I hope there will be no objection to its being read.

The SPEAKER. It can be read by unanimous consent.

There was no objection, and the report was read, as follows:

The committee to whom was referred House bill No. 1514 report the same back and recommend its passage.

Your committee listened to statements made by representatives of boards of trade and chambers of commerce interested in the navigation of the Ohio River, together with members of the Ohio River commission and the engineer in charge of the work. Your committee also called for a report on the subject from the War Department, which was transmitted in accordance with the committee's request, in which report the Chief of Engineers states that "as contracts cannot by law be entered into in anticipation of appropriations, there is an absolute necessity for an early appropriation if the work in hand is to progress without interruption; otherwise its completion may be delayed a whole season or more."

In view of all the facts laid before your committee, and the vast amount of commerce of many different States affected by the present incomplete condition of the work, and the danger to navigation of the Ohio River by said incomplete condition of the work, your committee, after due consideration of its importance and the saving to the Government, deem an early appropriation absolutely necessary, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] insist upon his demand for a second?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not.

The question was then taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting special legislation, and to pass the same at this time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The Legislative power of the United States is limited to the enactment of laws general in their application and effect to all sections and persons within the jurisdiction of this Constitution. All laws, private or special enactments, hereby prohibited shall be null and void.

SEC. 2. All claims against the United States shall be adjudicated and determined by such tribunal or tribunals as Congress may establish for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the joint resolution which has just been read, and to pass the same at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I think that motion ought to have a second.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand a second?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. SPRINGER, and Mr. ROBINSON of Massachusetts, were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 31, noes 48.

So (no further count being called for) there was not a second.

UNCOMPAHGRE AND WHITE RIVER UTE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. BELFORD. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of House bill No. 4685 and that the same be passed at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill relating to certain lands in Colorado within the reservation lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians.

Whereas a strip of land not exceeding ten miles in width on the eastern side of and within that part of the Ute Indian reservation in the State of Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians was regarded by both the United States and said Indians as public lands lying outside said reservation, and was in part surveyed and to some extent occupied by settlers and for mining purposes; and

Whereas by the recent location on the ground of the line of the one hundred and seventh meridian of longitude west from Greenwich it is found that the said strip lies within said reservation: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That all duly qualified persons who have in good faith made entries, settlements, or locations, under any law of the United States, upon a strip of land extending northerly and southerly not exceeding ten miles in width within that part of the Ute Indian reservation in the State of Colorado lately occupied by the Umcompahgre and White River Ute Indians, and bounded on the east by the one hundred and seventh meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, are hereby authorized to continue in the possession of the land so entered, settled, or located in the same manner and to the same extent as if the lands were public lands of the United States; and upon the release of said lands from reservation such entries, settlements, or locations shall legally date from the time they were respectively made; and the rights of said persons shall be in all respects the same as if the lands had been legally subject to their claims when the same were initiated: Provided, however, That if homestead entries have been made on said strip, the lands so entered shall be paid for in cash, after proof which would be satisfactory under the pre-emption laws: And provided further, That none of said lands shall be disposed of for any consideration other than cash, nor for a less price than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

SEC. 2. That upon the completion of the allotments of lands to the Ute Indians as provided for in "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of the Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880, the President of the United States shall, by proclamation, declare that on and after a certain day, which day shall not be less than thirty nor more than sixty days subsequent to the date of such proclamation, all the lands within said reservation formerly occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Utes and not so allotted shall be open to settlement, occupation, and disposal as other public lands of the United States, subject only to the limitations of said act of June 15, 1880.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Colorado has agreed to permit an amendment in the nature of an additional section.

Mr. BELFORD. I have agreed to that.

The SPEAKER. The motion to amend is not in order, but the gentleman from Colorado can include the amendment in his motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Colorado has agreed to include it in his motion.

Mr. BELFORD. I would like to make a statement for a moment.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not now in order.

Mr. DUNNELL. Are not thirty minutes allowed for debate?

The SPEAKER. Not until the motion to suspend the rules has been seconded.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that by unanimous consent the motion be regarded as seconded, and the debate allowed to proceed.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that the motion be considered as seconded? The Chair hears no objection. Fifteen minutes will now be allowed for debate on each side; but before the debate proceeds the Chair would like to understand whether it is the wish of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] that the bill shall include the additional section suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. BELFORD. I have agreed with the gentleman from Illinois that he might offer the additional section.

The SPEAKER. But does the gentleman from Colorado accept this section as a part of the bill which he moves to pass under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. BELFORD. I do.

The SPEAKER. The additional section, which the gentleman from Colorado now includes as a part of the bill, will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The lands embraced in the second section of this act and which contain deposits of coal shall be withheld from location until surveyed and appraised under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and when so surveyed and appraised they may be offered for thirty days to the person who may have located any tract in good faith, not exceeding forty acres to each locater, at a price not less than the appraised value thereof. All tracts of such coal lands not so taken may be advertised for sale, from time to time, to the highest bidder, in lots not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, but shall not be sold at less than the appraised value; and the Secretary of the Interior shall make all necessary rules and regulations for such advertising and for carrying this act into effect as will best protect the interests of the United States.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to hear the report of the committee read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Colorado permit the reading of the report in his time?

Mr. BELFORD. I am willing it should be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be read in the time allowed to the gentleman from Colorado for debate.

Mr. PAGE. Will there be a separate vote on the bill and the amendment?

The SPEAKER. There is no amendment; there is but one proposition pending.

Mr. DUNNELL. The report of the committee will hardly be appropriate to the bill as now modified.

The SPEAKER. There is no amendment pending. The bill which the gentleman from Colorado asks to have passed under a suspension of the rules includes the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House will permit me to explain——

The SPEAKER. Debate is in order—fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to make a statement in reference to this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will defer my remarks till the gentleman from Colorado has been heard.

Mr. BELFORD. This bill, as reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, was prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, who sent it to the committee with a written recommendation that it be passed. In 1879, before the eastern boundary line of the Ute reservation was fixed, a large number of people of my State located on this ten-mile strip. They built a town called Irwin, which now has two thousand people, and another town called Gothic. Rich mines were discovered. The Indians did not claim this tract of ground. The Government in many cases issued patents to the citizens. After these locations were made a survey of the Ute reservation was ordered by the Interior Department; and it was then found that the locations were within the limits of the Ute reservation.

This bill provides that when the Ute reservation shall be opened up by virtue of the proclamation which the President of the United States is authorized to issue under an act of the last Congress, the Government shall recognize the rights of those persons who in good faith made locations on this ten-mile strip of ground.

Mr. SCALES. I wish to ask the gentleman how the Indians are to be compensated for the loss of this land?

Mr. BELFORD. They are to be paid under this bill. Whatever entries may be made are to be cash entries.

Mr. SCALES. By actual settlers?

Mr. BELFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCALES. Is the land to be appraised?

Mr. BELFORD. The land is to be appraised, and the title is to be acquired, I apprehend, just as any citizen acquires title as to the rest of the reservation. But it must be observed that these people entered upon this land under the sanction of the Government, in many cases before the passage of the bill removing the Utes from this reservation. The Government issued patents to a number of these citizens. It was then discovered that there had been a mistake in running the eastern line of the Ute reservation. These citizens who went there and made locations in good faith should not be required to suffer.

Mr. SCALES. I wish to inquire whether in the bill providing another reservation for the Utes there was not a provision that this land should be sold in order to compensate the Government for the land appropriated to the Utes in the new reservation?

Mr. BELFORD. That is correct. I desire to say that this strip of land ten miles in width was not understood by the Secretary of the Interior, was not understood by the Indians, was not understood by any citizen who located there, as forming a part of the Ute reservation.

Mr. SCALES. But it did, nevertheless.

Mr. BELFORD. It did, nevertheless. These people should not be allowed to suffer by reason of a location which was recognized by the Government of the United States, the mistake not having been disclosed until the second survey, made after they had acquired locations. The bill, as I said, was prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, and sent by him to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. DWIGHT. How much land is covered by this bill?

Mr. BELFORD. It includes the ten-mile strip. The original included 12,000,000 of acres, but this is a small fraction of it.

Mr. DWIGHT. This bill has never before been discussed in the House?

Mr. BELFORD. It never could have been discussed before in the House.

Mr. DWIGHT. Was it never up before this Congress?

Mr. BELFORD. No, not this specific bill. It has been made necessary by a resurvey ordered by the Government during the last year whereby this mistake was discovered.

Mr. DWIGHT. It is an important bill and we should understand it before we pass it. It certainly should not be passed in this hasty manner. It should have full discussion.

Mr. GUNTER. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. BELFORD. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GUNTER. I wish to ask whether the people relieved by this bill are actual settlers or speculators in these lands?

Mr. BELFORD. They are people who built homes and schools and churches upon these lands—men who have invested millions of dollars in developing them under the impression they had the right to acquire title to them. They were recognized by the Interior Department as having such a right, and in many instances patents were issued. The question was raised whether the eastern line of the Ute reservation had been correctly run. It was resurveyed, and then it was found these people had located inside that Ute reservation. This bill simply provides that when it is opened up under the proclamation of the President to settlement, then the title acquired by these people shall be respected. It is a just, meritorious, righteous bill.

Mr. GUNTER. I wish to know what price these actual settlers on this ten-mile strip are to pay for the lands?

Mr. BELFORD. On the Ute reservation proper?

Mr. GUNTER. No, the people on this ten-mile strip. Are they to pay $1.25 per acre, or can they homestead?

Mr. BELFORD. They cannot homestead or pre-empt. The bill simply provides that when the Ute reservation is opened to settlement under the act passed last session then the rights acquired by these parties shall be respected by the Interior Department under the regulations and conditions, as I take it, of that act passed last year.

Mr. GUNTER. They pay, then, $1.25 per acre as for other land.

Mr. BELFORD. I think so.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, there are three sections to this bill as it now stands; and if I can get the attention of the House I think I can explain them so every member will understand exactly their scope and effect.

The first section provides that a disputed strip of land, ten miles, more or less, on the eastern line of the Ute reservation in Colorado shall be subject, on that reservation being opened to settlement, to the claims and locations which have been made on that ten-mile disputed strip, precisely under the same conditions as if it had not been included in that reservation—homestead rights and all.

That is the first section, and, as the gentleman from Colorado has stated, there is justice in it from the fact that a mistake was made in the original survey. These people, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, supposed they were going upon public land then open to settlement under the general law applying to all public land.

The second section provides that all that part not included in the ten miles of disputed territory—that is, the whole of the Ute reservation in Colorado not allotted to the Ute Indians—shall be open at a certain day to settlement, occupation, and disposal as other public lands of the United States.

The third section, which was offered by me and accepted by the gentleman, and is a part of the bill, provides that in all the other parts of the Ute reservation outside this ten-mile disputed strip, where there was no dispute and every man has gone as a trespasser, knowing he was going upon an Indian reservation, where he had no right to go—that in that part of the Ute reservation the parties going there and taking coal lands have acquired no rights by virtue of said location, and that said coal lands shall be withheld from sale and location until they have been surveyed specially and appraised as to their value, and after being so surveyed and appraised the locator in good faith may take under the general law at the appraised value not exceeding forty acres on such location; but if he does not take that amount, and pay for it within thirty days, then it is the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to advertise from time to time these coal lands for sale to the highest bidder, but not to be sold at less than the appraised price.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to visit that part of Colorado during the last summer, and in the western part of Colorado I found in the section embraced in the Ute reservation vast deposits of coal, anthracite and bituminous, and among the most valuable in the United States. Settlers have gone on the Ute reservation and squatted there upon the coal lands, and now claim the right to hold them when this reservation shall be opened up to the public. Now the object of this third section is to preserve the valuable coal lands in that reservation from such illegal entries and location as have been made in this manner upon them, and that they shall be preserved for the benefit of the people of the United States. The amendment provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall advertise them for sale from time to time as coal lands, and in that manner protect the rights and interests of the people of the country generally against these parties who have gone there and illegally settled upon the lands.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask the gentleman why he provides that these lands shall be sold in any manner different from the other coal lands of the United States?

Mr. SPRINGER. For the reason that they have been embraced heretofore in a reservation into which it was illegal to go and settle. Now trespassers have gone in upon those coal lands, and this is in order to prevent them from continuing that trespass under the claim of a right to hold them when the lands are open for settlement.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman does not apprehend my question. I ask if these lands are restored to the public domain, then why is it necessary to provide that they shall be sold in a different manner from other lands of the same character?

Mr. SPRINGER. The object is because persons have gone there and settled illegally upon the lands, and have brought them into publice notice and exhibited their great value. Now, my object is that they shall not have the benefit of the law which gives these to the public, having gone there in the first instance in defiance of the law, and for that reason they are made an exception to the ordinary lands on which deposits of coal have been discovered. I think the gentleman from California will see the propriety of this amendment for the reason I have stated.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen who have spoken in support of the bill have alluded to a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in advocacy of it. I should be very glad to have read for the information of the House so much of that report as is made up of the letter of the Secretary referred to.

The SPEAKER. That portion of the report will be read.

Mr. BELFORD. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that I have this letter in one of the Senate reports. I have not got the letter incorporated in the House report; but if the gentleman will allow this to be read from the Senate report, it is identically the same matter.

Mr. SCALES. I would like to ask if the time for debate upon this bill has expired?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes have expired in advocacy of the bill. Fifteen minutes remain in opposition to it, and this report will be read in the fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. SCALES. I would like to be heard in reference to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The letter referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 6, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by reference from your committee with request for the opinion of the Department thereon, under date of 9th ultimo, of Senate bill No. 698, "relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians."

Reports have been called for both from the General Land Office and the Office of Indian Affairs, and I inclose herewith for your information copies of reply from each, dated, respectively, the 17th and 21st ultimo, in relation to the subject-matter of the bill.

Both before and soon after the commencement of the present session of Congress application was made to this Department to declare all that portion of the Ute reservation lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Utes to be public lands of the United States and subject to disposal as such, and the question whether this could be lawfully done was submitted to the Attorney-General.

It will be seen by his letter of the 17th ultimo, herewith, that in his opinion this cannot be done under existing law; hence, if it be done at all, additional legislation, such as is proposed in Senate bill No. 698, is necessary.

The facts bearing upon this question, so far as they are in the possession of this Department from official and unofficial sources, are substantially these: by reason of the time necessarily consumed by the Ute commission in examining lands in the reservation in Colorado to ascertain if such lands as are provided for in the agreement could be had therein for these Indians, and the time necessarily consumed in examining the lands in Utah when it was ascertained that suitable lands could not be found in their old reservation, and the time then necessarily consumed in removing them to their present location in Utah, it was impossible to make to them in Utah the allotments of land and to do for them during last year other things agreed to be done for them in consideration of the cession of the reservation in Colorado.

Before the east line of the Ute reservation in Colorado was established it was understood by both the Indians and the whites that that line would be some miles west of where it was subsequently ascertained to be. Many white settlers, acting on this understanding, and without objection on the part of the Indians, settled upon a strip of land which, when the true line was established, was found to be within the reservation. They made valuable improvements thereon, are still there, and are naturally very anxious to have the validity of their claims duly established. This information is derived mainly from unofficial sources, but is confirmed by the Senators from Colorado, who are familar with the facts.

The Uncompahgre and White River Indians, who have been recently removed to Utah, like people of all races newly settled in a strange country, are to some extent restless and dissatisfied; and the Department has information that evil-disposed men are tampering with them and increasing their discontent.

I feel constrained, therefore, to say that in this condition of affairs I seriously doubt the propriety of passing the proposed bill. Its passage, before the Indians shall have received all they are to receive as the consideration for the surrender of their former reservation, may tend to increase still further their present discontent, and may be used by mischievous men to that end.

I therefore suggest that, in lieu of the present bill, a substitute be offered and passed, the effect of which will be to secure to present settlers on the eastern portion of the reservation, formerly occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Utes, valid titles to their claims so soon as the United States shall have fully complied with the terms of the agreement with the Utes, and that in the mean time they shall be permitted to remain thereon unmolested.

A draft of a bill of the character above indicated is herewith presented for the consideration of the committee.

I also transmit herewith as bearing upon the case, and conveying further information upon the object of the bill, the full report of the Ute Commission, and copies of correspondence therewith during the year 1881.

Very respectfully,

S. J. KIRKWOOD, Secretary.

Hon. P. B. PLUMB,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

Mr. DUNNELL. This letter of the Secretary of the Interior was written apparently in support of the Senate bill. Now, I desire to know whether the substitute referred to in that letter, and which the Secretary recommended and forwarded, is the bill now before the House?

Mr. BELFORD. It is the bill exactly, without the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t in the way of a change.

Mr. DUNNELL. It is the substitute furnished by the Secretary?

Mr. BELFORD. It is the same identically, with the addition of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DUNNELL. One other question, and I will make no further delay in connection with this. How far does the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois affect the character of the substitute which the Secretary recommended?

Mr. BELFORD. It does not, in my judgment, affect the character of the substitute at all, so far as it relates to this strip of ground, this ten miles which have been referred to. When the Ute reservation is opened up under the treaty of last year this substitute provides that the coal lands should not be sold in quantities larger than forty acres, but does not affect the ten-mile strip at all.

Mr. DUNNELL. Does not the effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois materially alter or substantially defeat the substitute which the Secretary says he approves?

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me to answer the gentleman.

Mr. HAZELTON. It does affect it.

Mr. ATKINS. I want to ask the gentleman from Colorado if the Secretary of the Interior recommends the passage of the bill?

Mr. BELFORD. He does.

Mr. HAZELTON. Not with the amendment. The amendment has been put on and changed the whole thing.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the House will bear with me for a moment I will explain that I went to see Secretary Kirkwood and explained the provisions of the amendment which I proposed; and my understanding was, at the time, that he fully agreed with me as to the necessity for that kind of legislation.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, and it should not be passed through the House in hot haste without consideration.

When we made provision to put the Utes upon another reservation we added a provision to that bill that these lands were to be sold and the proceeds were to be used to reimburse the Government for the amount of money appropriated at that time and settle the Utes upon other lands. I do not know whether this bill is in harmony with that bill or not. For that reason, as it is a bill that ought to be closely and carefully considered, and with the view that the House shall have an opportunity of looking into it more thoroughly, as it is now nearly four o'clock, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. I will state that this side of the House propose to hold a caucus, and desire the Hall. I hope the other side of the House will agree to the adjournment.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RYAN. What will be the effect of an adjournment if it should now take place upon the pending proposition?

The SPEAKER. It will come up as the unfinished business on the first Monday of next month.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 100, noes 14.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn,

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 892) for the relief of Warren Hall; and

An act (S. No. 1233) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee."

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the commitee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE CHANGES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that at his own request Mr. BARBOUR, of Virginia, is relieved from further duty on the Committee on War Claims, and he is appointed to the Committee on the Census in place of Mr. WISE, of Virginia, relieved at his own request. Mr. WISE, of Virginia, is appointed on the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, for three days, to attend the funeral of a relative;

To Mr. WHITTHORNE, for ten days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. DUGRO, indefinitely, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the following cases:

To Mr. DIBRELL, papers in the case of William Bain.

To Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, papers in the claims of the following soldiers for horses lost in the service of the United States, no adverse report having been made thereon: John J. Elliott, Company A, First Kentucky Cavalry; William Girdle, Company L, First Kentucky Cavalry; J. B. Harper, Company L, First Kentucky Cavalry; D. A. Jones, Company L, First Kentucky Cavalry; J. E. King, Company A, First Kentucky Cavalry; and J. W. Williamson, Company G, First Kentucky Cavalry.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES OF 1876.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and calling attention to the fact that the statement for the fiscal year 1875, transmitted May 25, 1878, has not yet been printed; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of Beaver Farmers' Alliance, of Kansas, for legislation to regulate charges for railway transportation—to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 7, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of Captain A. Mackenzie, Corps of Engineers, of a survey for a harbor of refuge in Lake Pepin, at Stockholm, Wisconsin, and Lake City, Minnesota, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McDILL. I present a memorial and joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, in relation to the improvement of the Missouri River, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

MEMORIAL.

To our Senators and Representatives in Congress:

We, the members of the nineteenth General Assembly of the State of Iowa, and now assembled at Des Moines in a legislative capacity, speaking for and representing the wish and imperative demand of the whole population of the State, would most respectfully represent:

That there is no question in which all our people have so great and vital an interest as that of cheaper transportation for their products to the markets of the world; that Iowa is and must ever remain an agricultural State; that success in agricultural pursuits depends not only on the amount produced but also largely on the price realized by the producer, and this is governed mainly by his means of transportation; that our products have so far outgrown our means of transportation that fully one-half of the price of all we produce is consumed in the form of freights, as fixed and regulated by corporations who have full control of our present means of transportation; that the Missouri River, if properly improved from Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, to its confluence with the Mississippi in the State of Missouri, would afford a cheap, safe, and speedy means of transportation for the four great grain-producing States, namely, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. These States had, as shown by the latest official report, an aggregate population of 5,198,103 inhabitants, and produced in the year 1880 586,000,000 bushels of corn, or more than one-third of that of the whole United States. Of this Iowa alone produced 276,000,000 bushels. In the year last named these four States produced of cereals the fabulous quantity of 780,000,000 bushels, or more than double that of the sixteen Atlantic States. An increase in the price of these vast products of ten cents on the bushel for a single year would raise a sum ten times greater than is necessary, if properly expended, to secure a uniform channel-depth of twelve feet at low water from Sioux City, in Iowa, to Saint Charles, in Missouri, and thereby lessen the cost of transportation at least 50 per cent., and save to the producers of these four great States fully $100,000,000 per annum, and to the farmers of Iowa not less than $30,000,000 each year. That Major C. R. Suter, an able and efficient civil engineer, was duly commissioned by the Government to survey and report upon the practicability of so improving the Missouri River as to make its navigation safe and at all times reliable, and has within the two years last past completed said survey, and reported to Congress last winter that the Missouri can be so improved as to secure a uniform depth of twelve feet at low water from its mouth to Sioux City, in Iowa, and at a cost not exceeding $10,000 per mile, and in the aggregate not exceeding $7,820,000. (See Senate document, Forty-sixth Congress, third session.) Your memorialists are aware that large sums of money have from time to time and at almost every session of Congress been appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors in the Eastern and older States ever since the formation of our Government, whereas the Middle and more Western States have received but little or no encouragement by way of appropriations for a similar purpose, notwithstanding they have constantly been heavily taxed, and have responded cheerfully and liberally to every demand made by the General Government. They have now grown weary and restive under and by reason of this unequal and unjust disbursement of the public funds, and therefore properly and earnestly demand such an appropriation for the improvement of their large rivers as may be necessary to secure to them a cheaper and more reliable means of transporting their vast and yearly increasing products to the marts of the world, and thereby secure to them a just reward for their industry and enterprise: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested and instructed to take early, earnest and persistent action by way of securing an appropriation of not less than $7,000,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River between Sioux City, in the State of Iowa, and Saint Charles, in the State of Missouri, and that they secure such other national legislation as may be necessary to insure the faithful and honest application and disbursement of the money so appropriated, to the end that the work may be commenced as early as possible and completed without unnecessary delay.

Second. That this memorial be printed, properly authenticated, and a copy sent by the secretary of state to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, also one to each Senator and Representative now in Congress from the States of Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska.

Approved February 25, 1882.

STATE OF IOWA,
Office of Secretary of State.

I, J. A. T. Hull, secretary of state of the State of Iowa, hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct copy of a joint resolution of the nineteenth General Assembly on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State at Des Moines this 3d day of March, A. D. 1882.

[SEAL.] J. A. T. HULL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. McDILL. I also present a joint resolution and memorial of the General Assembly of Iowa, relating to the Des Moines River lands, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is the custom of the Senate to print memorials in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But this is the joint resolution of a State Legislature.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it is all right, so it is not an ordinary memorial.

The joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Joint resolution and memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, relating to the Des Moines River lands.

Whereas the settlers upon what is known as the lands granted to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company believe that no action has ever been taken relating to these lands in which the United States and the interest of the United States have been fairly, properly, and adequately represented in court; and

Whereas the said settlers desire that the United States may be fairly and fully represented in the court: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Iowa, the senate concurring, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be earnestly requested to exert themselves to secure the prompt passage of a bill which shall in some way provide that the Attorney-General of the United States shall immediately institute proceedings, or cause such proceedings to be commenced at once, by action either in equity or at law, as may be deemed best, and appear in the name of the United States, so as to remove all claims from the title of said lands, and that in such action or actions to be instituted, as aforesaid, any person or persons in the possession of or claiming title to any land or lands under the United States involved in such action or actions may, at his or her expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of said action or actions for the purpose of forever settling the title or titles of the person or persons claiming said lands.

Approved March 3, 1882.

STATE OF IOWA,
Office Secretary of State.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of joint resolution No. 5, of the acts of the nineteenth General Assembly, on file in this office.

Witness my hand officially and the great seal of the State, March 3, 1882.

[SEAL.] J. A. T. HULL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of E. D. Smith and 60 others, citizens of Menasha, Wisconsin, praying for the passage of a law for the suppression of polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PUGH presented a petition of citizens of Alabama, praying for legislation regulating charges for railroad transportation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of officers of the Twenty-first Infantry, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1475) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER. I have in my hand the resolutions of a large mass meeting of citizens of Colorado, residing in the neighborhood of the Ute Indian reservation, in reference to that reservation. The paper is not in the exact form that it ought to be to be presented to the Senate as a memorial; and yet I have no doubt that when the people adopted the resolutions they supposed they would be in a proper shape for presentation here. If there is no objection I should like to have the paper printed, inasmuch as it relates to a matter that will come before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator present it as a memorial?

Mr. TELLER. I present it in that character, although I want to state that it is irregular as a memorial, and I did not feel at liberty myself to change the form of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be the judge whether it was intended to be a memorial. Although it be not in the strict form, if it was intended as a memorial to Congress it does not matter what shape the words are in.

Mr. TELLER. I judge from the letter I received with the paper that they expected it to be for the use of the Senate when the bill came before us.

Mr. ALLISON. What bill?

Mr. TELLER. The bill (S. No. 698) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians, which is now pending, and which provides for opening the Ute reservation to settlement. The bill was reported to the Senate by the Committee on Public Lands. I only ask that the memorial may be printed so that it may be used in the discussion. It contains some information that will be of value.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator does not desire it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. TELLER. I do not ask to have it printed in the RECORD, but printed so as to be laid on our tables.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the memorial will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented several memorials from citizens of California, protesting against the passage of the bill (S. No. 463) to provide for setting apart a certain tract of land in the State of California as a public park; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BECK. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (S. No. 976) to punish the unlawful certification of checks by officers of national banks, with an amendment. I desire an amendment that I propose to offer to the amendment of the committee to be printed along with the bill, which I now send up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. All the amendments will be printed, including the committee amendment and the amendment offered just now by the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be printed with the bill, and the amendment of the committee will be printed under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1400) to provide for the conversion or redemption of ten-dollar refunding certificates; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 368) to grant arrears of pension to the widow of Peter W. Farley, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 48) to increase the pension of Mrs. Margaret R. Jones, widow of Colonel James H. Jones, late of the United States Marine Corps, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 949) making pension certificate No. 190198 payable to Samuel Bell, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 165) granting a pension to Mrs. Rose M. Wood, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of S. P. Cheney and others, citizens of Dorset, Vermont, praying that a pension be granted to Elizabeth Gray, widow of Paddock Gray, who was a soldier in the war of 1812, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1401) granting a pension to Elizabeth Gray. The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 656) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. There is a minority report, which I ask leave to submit, and that it be printed with the majority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be printed as desired, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1150) for the relief of J. L. Whitaker, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1303) to cheapen transportation on railways, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1045) to accept and ratify an agreement with the Crow Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in the Territory of Montana required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1234) to regulate the licenses of vessels engaged in the coasting trade and fisheries, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1195) granting a pension to William Hazelit, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 629) granting a pension to Lemuel Adams, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 921) granting a pension to Mary A. Mitchell, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

RELIEF OF AMERICAN SHIPPING.

Mr. FRYE. I ask leave to introduce a bill, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I call its attention, and especially the attention of the Committee on Commerce, to the subject-matter of the bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1402) for the relief of shipping; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, besides presenting this bill to-day I presented one three or four days ago and had it referred to the Committee on Commerce, asking that certain laws touching the regulation of ships engaged in the passenger trade should be made to apply to foreign vessels sailing from our ports as well as to home vessels; and it is within my knowledge that a similar bill has been referred to the Committee on Commerce heretofore quite a number of times, and that nothing has ever been done.

There is no reason on earth why an English steamer engaged in carrying our passengers—and they do carry 95 per cent. of them—should not be held to the same laws and the same regulations with our own steamships of the same capacity. We are held to comply with every English law. Let a vessel from our ports sail from Liverpool, and she is compelled to comply with the English laws touching the carrying of passengers. They will send their board of trade on board of her; they will inspect her; they will discharge a surgeon if they please, no matter what certificates or diplomas he may have, no matter what his capacity is, and they will inspect the cabins and the saloons, and order any repairs they please. I remember the American steamship Ohio, in coming down the Delaware a year or two ago, struck. She was not much injured. She arrived at Liverpool. The news was conveyed to the board of trade that she had struck on her passage out. They inspected that steamship. They ordered her hauled up at a cost of $500. They then ordered a portion of her keel removed, and it was removed at an expense of $20,000; and yet that keel after it was removed was found to be as sound as a dollar—sounder than our American dollar, at any rate.

England compelling the ships of all the world to do that, why should we not compel the ships of the world doing our carrying and passenger trade to comply with our laws, which are made for the safety, convenience, and comfort of our passengers? Let me illustrate. An English steamship of 3,000 tons is required by English law to have eight life-boats, and only eight life-boats. Now, it is apparent to any man who has been on an English ocean-going steamer that eight life-boats in trouble will not save any more than the officers and the cabin passengers; the crew and the steerage passengers may go to the bottom. Our law, which I have here in the statute-book, compels an American steamship of the same tonnage to have ten life-boats and ten life-rafts, each life-raft with more carrying capacity or floating capacity than a life-boat. It provides, further, that those boats and rafts shall all be provisioned, shall be supplied with water, shall be supplied with nautical instruments, and that they shall be inspected every three days; that the provisions and water shall be renewed, and the nautical instruments, if they are lost.

The whole expenses under the law for a 3,000-ton American steamer carrying passengers is at least $50,000 for the outfit of life-boats, life-rafts, housings, and gear, and the cost annually by wear and loss is at least 30 per cent. of that amount; and the English steamer, sailing from New York with 95 per cent. of our passengers, is only compelled to take eight life-boats.

I do not complain that our law requires too much. It very likely requires no more than is sufficient for the safety, comfort, and convenience of the passengers. What I complain of is that our American Congress allows that discrimination in favor of foreign ships, when it is clearly within our power to compel them, carrying our passengers, to comply with our law.

I wish now to call the attention of the Senate to the bill which I present to-day relieving our vessels engaged in the coastwise trade from certain burdens. The increase of fee required of a coaster within the last twenty years is at least ten times, and yet the burdens upon coasters beyond that have increased and the profits have decreased. Let me illustrate. Here is a coaster of 112 tons, the Louise A. Boardman; she wants to sail from one of our ports to Calais, and then across the river a quarter of a mile to St. Stephen's in the provinces. We have quite a large trade with the Dominion of Canada, in which our vessels are engaged, as their vessels are engaged in sailing from their ports to ours. Now, what is that Louise A. Boardman compelled under our law to pay? First, new vessel 112 tons, enrollment and bond, $1.10; license, $1.20; admeasurement, $15—making $17.80. For clearance—register and bond, $2.25; certified list of crew and bond, 65 cents; certified shipping papers, 20 cents; entry, $2.50; blanks, 40 cents—making $6 more. Then for entry—entry, $2.50; hospital money, five men, one month, $2. A little schooner of 112 tons paying $24 a year hospital tax, while the English tax is only 2 cents a month, and they have as good hospitals as we do.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. The fees he is reading, I understand, are exacted under the laws of the United States?

Mr. FRYE. Under the laws of the United States. Tonnage, 112 tons at 30 cents a ton, making this little schooner pay $33.60 every time, if she happens to go from Calais across to St. Stephen's. That was nothing but a war tax, never imposed before the war, and still Congress permits it to be kept on these coasting vessels. Further, for permit to land, 20 cents; protections, 20 cents; bill of health, with report, 20 cents; blanks, 10 cents, making in all $38.80. Again, charge to enrollment and license: Enrollment and bond, $1.10; license, $1.20; making $2.30. That American schooner of 112 tons burden is obliged to pay under our laws all those immense and burdensome taxes; and the attention of Congress has been called to it again and again, and yet no relief has been offered.

There has been talk in the Congress of the United States for ten years about relieving American commerce and restoring it to its old ground. I admit it has been nothing but talk. Nothing has been done, but there is hope that this Congress will, by paying at least half as much to American steamers for carrying United States mails across the ocean as we pay to the stages that carry the mails across the prairies, or to little steamers to carry them down the Mississippi River; I say there is some hope that Congress may do something for their relief in that direction. But that does not touch our coasting trade at all, nor does it help our sailing vessels.

What does the Louise A. Boardman have to pay if she gets out papers over in St. Stephen's instead of Calais? She would be compelled to pay two cents a month for a hospital tax per man and two dollars for admeasurement, and no other namable tax whatever. Where a schooner made ten or twelve voyages from our ports to Canadian ports in a year I have known her under our law to be compelled to pay one-tenth of her whole value for United States taxes.

Mr. President, I ask the Senate why a coasting vessel shall pay a hospital tax of forty cents a month a man? It was formerly only twenty cents a month. There is hardly a sailor to be found on an American coasting vessel who is not an American sailor with a home. If he is taken sick or is wounded he goes to his home; and out of a thousand of these sailors you will not find ten going to the hospitals when they are sick. Our vessels engaged in the foreign service, on the contrary, are manned almost entirely by foreigners, without any homes to go to, and there is reason in their paying the hospital tax; but there is no reason that can be given why a little coaster of 112 tons shall pay $28 a year for hospital tax, and there is no reason why any American sailor should pay forty cents a month for a hospital tax. It only goes to build up magnificent erections near your great cities and support high-toned superintendents and learned surgeons looking continually for higher salaries. That is what becomes of the money. I say the sailor should be relieved from every cent of that hospital tax. I say again they should be relieved from that tonnage tax. There is no propriety or sense in imposing either upon them. The owners of course pay them, and the burden falls upon the vessel.

Why do you not tax the railroads? There is the European and North American Railroad, the inter-colonial railroad, making its two voyages every day between Bangor and St. John's. Do you impose any tax upon that? Not one cent of any kind. Do you require any papers? Not a paper that can be named; and yet that line competes with these very coasters of ours doing business with St. John's and the Dominion of Canada, and you by law compel them to pay about one-tenth of their value annually if they make a dozen voyages in that time.

I have a letter here from one of our United States customs collectors, who knows entirely what he is talking about, and he gives me the old fees as compared with these new fees. The old fee for measuring was 50 cents a ton for a vessel of 5 tons and less than 20. If 20 tons and not over 70, it was 75 cents; if 70 tons and not over 100, $1, and if over 100 tons it was $1.50; and yet the Louise A. Boardman under your laws imposed since the war was compelled to pay $15 for that admeasurement instead of $1.50. Yet, while Congress is talking about reviving American commerce and building up American shipbuilding, it takes not one step to repeal that enormous and burdensome tax! For enrollment under the old law 50 cents; now $2.25. For license under the old law 25 cents not over 20 tons, 50 cents where the vessel is 100 tons and not under 20, over 100 tons $1. He says of this hospital tax:

It is too much to try for, but there is no sense in the hospital tax. The true way is to treat seamen as men, collect nothing from them, and make no hospital provision for them. The great portion of the fund is used up in maintaining costly buildings and large salaries, and like everything else the Marine Hospital Department is steadily laboring to enlarge its powers and the influence of its head.

I have a letter from the collector of the port of Saint Andrews, which is a port on the Canadian side. I desire to read a few words of it touching fees, showing the distinction between theirs and ours. Remember, their coasters have the privilege of coming to our ports continually. They bring lumber and granite and coal and all the heavy freights over into our ports; and see what they are subjected to. He says:

I am glad to know that at least a movement is about to be made to get the "tonnage tax" off vessels running between the Dominion and America, (or rather United States ports.)

I here inclose official papers which answer your first question for measuring vessels. There is no charge for furnishing papers or for registry of the same.

Answer to second question: There is no charge for entering vessels. There is a charge of two cents for sick mariners; that is, hospital dues. Vessels under 100 tons pay this but once in a year; over a hundred tons, three times—

While ours pay forty cents a man every month—

no matter how many times such vessel arrives and departs to or from any port in the Dominion. Vessels over 100 tons pay three times in each year two cents per ton each time, no matter how many times such vessel arrives and departs to or from any port in the Dominion. Those charges apply to all vessels alike, ours as well as foreign. If a vessel over 100 tons comes in the Dominion but once in the year, she only pays two cents per ton to this fund; the second time that she arrives two cents per ton more is collected; and the third time two cents per ton more is collected. Under any circumstances no more than six cents can be collected from any vessel over 100 tons, and no more than two cents from vessels under 100 tons.

Our customs act does not require a consular certificate when a vessel arrives from any of your ports—Dominion or United States vessels.

I read from a letter which I have here from another English consul, the consul at St. Stephen's, across from Calais:

In answer to your inquiry as to the amount of dues or custom-house fees exacted from vessels arriving from ports in the United States or elsewhere in ports in the Dominion, I beg leave to inform you that the only dues or fees to which they are subject is two cents per ton, register tonnage; this is payable only once per year on vessels under 100 tons, and three times per year on all vessels over 100 tons register. These dues are called the sick mariner's fund, and go to the support of hospitals for sick seamen; and all vessels paying these dues, no matter what their nationality, are entitled to send their sick seamen to the hospital to be cared for.

As an example of the requirements under our laws I may give you that of the United States schooner L. A. Boardman—

The very one that I named as paying the enormous tax of $50 or $60 a year when sailing from our port to hers—which entered here July 10, 1881; register 112 tons, at two cents, $2.24. This was all the dues required, except twenty-five cents for furnishing blanks. When these are furnished by the vessel no charge is made for blanks.

Two dollars and twenty-five cents in place of about $60 that under our laws we charge that same Louise A. Boardman.

Mr. President, I believe fully and entirely that it is the duty of Congress to do something for the revival of American commerce. I believe that it should do something that shall favor American steamship lines. I believe that it is our duty first, at any rate, to examine our own laws touching sailing-vessels, and see where relief can be brought to them. I believe further that it is our duty to examine the laws, onerous as they are, affecting these coastwise vessels. They being the nurseries entirely of American seamen to-day, being run entirely by American seamen, and the only ships or vessels that are run by them, it is the duty of Congress to inspect carefully the laws which are burdens to them and repeal them so far as safety will allow.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion there? It is beyond our reach, but I am told by men engaged in the business that a very large share of their burdens is imposed by State taxation, whereas the British Government taxes its vessels only as they shall make a profit; a vessel lying idle and making nothing is taxed nothing, while our State taxation along the coast varies, running up as high as 2 per cent. sometimes. I am told by a commercial company largely engaged in the West India trade that the total of their State and Federal charges amounts to 4 per cent. upon their capital.

Mr. BECK. The Congress of the United States, by a little persuasion, when we sought to register all our foreign-going ships at the port of Washington, succeeded by that movement in great part in inducing the State of New York to take off the 2½ per cent. tax on her ships; and we may by some like persuasion induce other States to do the same thing or remove other burdens. I hope Congress will exercise all the power it has to lighten these burdens, whatever they may be.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] touches upon the question of State and municipal tax on vessels. I have not a shadow of doubt that it is in the power of the Congress of the United States to relieve vessels engaged in foreign commerce from all taxation, State or municipal. I do, however, myself have a serious doubt whether that is a possible or the best method for relief for these coastwise vessels. Take, for instance, my own district. There is the city of Bath, which builds more wooden ships than any city in the United States, and builds as many now as it ever built. It built thirty-six thousand tons last year. It owns very largely in ships engaged in foreign commerce, and also in these smaller and coastwise vessels.

If we should relieve these vessels from all State and municipal taxation, it might be placing a tremendous burden upon the city of Bath, which would not be an equally-borne burden by interior cities and towns. That tax does not weigh so heavy as some of the taxes to which I have called attention, which are utterly unnecessary, doing no one any good, the Treasury of the United States not needing them at all, for to-day it is looking around to see where it can cut down and reduce the revenue.

Mr. President, I ask the pardon of the Senate for occupying so much time. I did it, because somehow or other the Committee on Commerce has not seemed to investigate this subject.

I ask that committee to examine with care this bill and the accompanying papers, which I will send to the Chair.

Mr. BECK. I am not sure that I am correctly informed, but I received a letter the other day from a gentleman in New York who said the coastwise trading vessels had a right to carry their own pilots into the port of New York; that is, a ship from Maine going to New Orleans and returning can sail into the port of New York with her own pilot, but if she goes to Cuba and brings a load from Cuba she is compelled to take a pilot at an expense of from $100 to $150, although the pilot who takes her into any other port is on board and can take her in just as well when she comes from Cuba as when she comes from New Orleans. If that is true, something ought to be done to prevent that very burdensome tax upon her.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, a bill to repeal or to regulate the pilotage laws of New York has been before the Congress of the United States for ten years within my certain knowledge. There have been hearings after hearings before the Committee on Commerce on the part of the House. The pilots of New York are a body of immense power. They unite; they send their delegates here to Washington; they make their desperate fight to retain their privilege of piracy—for it is nothing on earth but a privilege of piracy—and they still keep those burdens on our commerce and compel our captains of schooners, as the Senator says, clearing from Cuba, who know every inch of the harbor of New York just as well as the Senator from Kentucky and I know the way to the United States Senate—compel them to pay $100 or $150 for a New York pilot to escort them into the harbor. That is still existing; that is still an imposition; and I thank the Senator from Kentucky for reminding me of it. It is still another thing that the Committee on Commerce should look at.

I do not object to their looking abroad and seeing what can be done about our American steamships. I ask the Committee on Commerce to take these papers that I have, to take the suggestion which the Senator from Kentucky has made, and to examine with care to see if there is not infinite relief which we can under our laws afford to our people without doing any harm to the Treasury or inflicting any wrong upon any one.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, in the line of what has been said by the Senator from Maine, I would suggest to him that there was at the last session of Congress an amendment to an appropriation bill adopted at the instance of the Committee on Finance, offered by me as the agent of that committee, which instructed the Secretary of the Treasury to inform Congress at the present session what was the aggregate amount of fees imposed by law for license, for measurement, tonnage dues—all the fees, or I may speak of them more properly as all the burdens imposed now by law upon American shipping under the laws of the United States. An appropriation of a thousand dollars was made to enable the Secretary to employ a clerk to obtain so far as practicable from State authorities the list of fees and their amount, and the taxation imposed by law whether under the form of fees or under the form of direct assessment of value upon American shipping.

I hold that such information is a necessary precedent to action in the way of relief to American shipping, which I am most desirous to see effected. I say this much because I proposed to draw the attention of the Treasury Department to the fact that no response, so far as I am aware, has been made to the direction of the Senate and to the meaning and effect of the amendment to the appropriation bill of last year.

As to the discrimination of local fees and charges upon English-owned or foreign-owned ships and our own, that is capable of a remedy only in part, because of course, except by treaty stipulation and by the principles of comity between friendly nations, we cannot interfere with the laws of local taxation upon vessels owned or vessels coming from a distant port within the jurisdiction of the taxing power. It struck me, however, as the Senator from Kentucky suggests, and I concur with him in that, that while my friend from Maine was declaring that the United States laws exacted from passenger-carrying ships much larger and more expensive equipments in the shape of life-saving boats than did the English, it is a question whether the wisdom lay with them or with us, as to whether we should require our vessels to carry this, as they term it, excessive equipment in the way of life-saving apparatus. Certain it is that the more expense you put, no matter with what view, upon the vessel-owner the more he must charge for the transportation of individuals or merchandise. That is clear. The more you reduce the burdens upon him the cheaper he can carry. You cannot have one without the other.

But I am very anxious to see, in what I consider a legitimate manner and not by a system of enforced bounties from the Treasury, the burdens upon American shipping so relieved that the flag of the United States shall be restored to its proper place upon the great highway of nations, and any steps that will assist in that will find in me a most hearty coadjutor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. I now ask leave, in connection with the bill I have introduced, to present the memorial of Hon. F. A. Pike, of Maine, in support of the bill, and also the accompanying papers. I ask that the memorial and accompany papers may be printed, not in the RECORD, but for the use of the committee, and referred with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition and accompanying papers will be received and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. GEORGE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 45) to authorize the Secretary of War to use hospital tents for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River.

The Acting Secretary read the resolution at length, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to use the hospital tents now possessed by the War Department, so far as may be necessary, to furnish temporary shelter to the destitute people who have been driven from their homes by the present overflow of the Mississippi River.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the telegram from the Secretary of War, which I send to the desk, be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., March 7, 1882.

Hon. J. Z. GEORGE, U. S. Senate:

I have telegram from Governor Lowry, asking for one hundred (100) tents to be sent to Greenville, Mississippi. Many whites and blacks congregated there and no shelter, the telegram stating that you will explain situation. I have no authority to issue tents. We have no tents not in use, except about twelve hundred (1,200) hospital tents, of a capacity for sixteen (16) people each, nearly all at Philadelphia depot. Some of these could be issued if Congress gives authority.

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

The joint resolution was read twice by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi whether it is proposed that these tents shall be used by the War Department itself?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the care of Army officers?

Mr. GEORGE. Of Army officers.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to put in the words "in his discretion" after the word "authorized."

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1403) for the relief of George W. Graffam; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1404) to establish a port of delivery at Omaha, in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALDRICH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1405) granting a pension to Penelope T. Heald; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1406) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1407) to determine the local rank of the governor of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1408) granting public lands for the relief of certain citizens of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1409) for the relief of Mrs. Jennie S. Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROLLINS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1410) for the relief of Albert T. Whiting; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1411) to authorize the Duluth and Winnipeg Railroad Company to extend its line through certain Indian reservations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FRYE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1412) to provide for the establishment of fast ocean steamship mail service between the United States and Great Britain, and to secure to the Government the use of the vessels employed therein for postal, naval, and other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GARLAND asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 44) authorizing the payment of a portion of the Virginius indemnity fund to the mother of General W. A. C. Ryan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT TO BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 55) to regulate the promotion of midshipmen and cadet engineers, and to establish the grade of sub-assistant engineer in the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DISMEMBERMENT OF PERU.

Mr. CALL. I offer a resolution, to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate whether there has been any representation made by the diplomatic representative of the United States at Chili that the United States would regard with indifference or consent to the dismemberment of Peru by the cession of any part of her territory to Chili under existing circumstances, and whether any authority has been given by the Government to such representative to make such a statement.

The resolution was ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Florida has omitted the words "if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words will be considered as put in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 578) to authorize the erection of a statue of Chief-Justice Marshall.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2127) granting a pension to James F. Rose;

A bill (H. R. No. 3831) to create a district for the inspection of hulls and boilers of steam-vessels; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 132) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the Department of Pennsylvania on the battle-field of Gettysburgh, in July, 1882.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of one has arrived and the morning business is closed. Proceedings under the Anthony rule are now in order. The bill (S. No. 230) granting a pension to Angus McAuley was under consideration at the close of the business under the Anthony rule yesterday, and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] can, if he desires it, have his bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic considered after that.

Mr. INGALLS. I think, with great deference, that the ruling of the Chair is wrong; that there is no unfinished business under the Anthony rule nor of the morning hour, but that all business falls at the expiration of the time fixed by the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the first bill on the Calendar, and it was partly considered yesterday. That is all.

Mr. INGALLS. But the fact that it was partly considered yesterday gives it no precedence to-day; and if the Senator from Michigan desires to call up his bill he has a prior right to do so under the practice of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it has been usual when a bill under the Anthony rule has been partly considered to get through with it before anything else is taken up. That has been the usage of the Senate. The McAuley bill was reached yesterday, and the Chair supposes it will not take five minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. CONGER. I desire that the bill to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic should be called up and acted on to-day. We have had that subject long under consideration. For years, as I am informed, it has been in Congress. I will not detain the Senate myself with any remarks upon it, but ask, if others are prepared to take a vote on the bill, that we act on it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the bill which was partly considered yesterday is the unfinished business under the Anthony rule.

Mr. INGALLS. Then, in order that that may be settled, I will ask the opinion of the Senate whether there is any unfinished business under the Anthony rule in the morning hour.

Mr. ALLISON. How can you test the sense of the Senate?

Mr. INGALLS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I get the sense of the Senate in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decided that a bill which was half considered yesterday was the first in order this morning under the Anthony rule.

Mr. INGALLS. It was not half considered; only about a third.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read. The Senator from Kansas appeals from that decision.

Mr. COCKRELL. I rise for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. No. 230) granting a pension to Angus McAuley was read yesterday, and the hour of half past one then arrived.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, the bill was reached in its regular call upon the Calendar under the Anthony rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the bill granting a pension to Angus McAuley; and while it was being considered and before any disposition had been made of it, the morning hour expired, and it now stands as the first uncalled case on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it not true that the bill of the Senator from Michigan and a number of other bills have been passed over by unanimous consent, retaining their place at the head of the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the statement of the Senator from Missouri is not, strictly speaking, correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the case. All bills that have been passed over without prejudice are not taken up unless they are asked to be taken up. The Chair commenced at the point last reached, and the Chair to-day called the Calendar at the point that was last reached. He then stated to the Senator from Michigan that he could call up his bill afterward; but the Chair calls the McAuley case as the first case.

Mr. COCKRELL. And that is the regular order.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to know if the bill called up by the Senator from Michigan is a bill that stands upon the Calendar prior to the one designated by the Chair, and if it was passed over without prejudice, and he now, at the beginning of the call of the Calendar, wishes to call it up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; the Chair announced that the McAuley case was first in order.

Mr. HARRIS. So I understand. I am satisfied myself that there is technically no unfinished business in the morning hour or under the Anthony rule, and I shall, if bound to vote on the appeal of the Senator from Kansas, vote that there is no unfinished business, and at this hour, notwithstanding that the Chair has announced that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair called this case first under the rule.

Mr. HARRIS. Very properly; but when the Senator from Michigan calls up a case that has been passed over without prejudice before the case called by the Chair had been taken up, my judgment is that the Senator from Michigan had a right to call up his case, and is entitled to priority of hearing. I do not think there is any unfinished business in the morning hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. This question is not a very important one except as a matter of precedent. It seems to me that it is the duty of the Chair when calling the Calendar, after the usual morning business is over, to take up first that which was pending at the close of the previous session under the Anthony rule. That is the logical, natural order of business, and every person who has sat in that chair administering the Anthony rule would naturally present first that business which was pending at the time of the last call.

I hope we shall not waste the morning hour in the discussion of this question; but I shall certainly vote to sustain the decision of the Chair. That is the natural, logical order of business, to complete that which we were partly considering, and then if the Senator from Michigan chooses afterward to call up a case that has been passed over without prejudice, it will be proper for him to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the appeal taken by the Senator from Kansas from the decision of the Chair. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The question was decided in the affirmative; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MCDILL it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of S. H. Maer be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ANGUS M'AULEY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 230) granting a pension to Angus McAuley.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are certain amendments proposed to that bill in the report accompanying it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL on the 24th of January:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 230) granting a pension to Angus McAuley, have examined the same and report:

That a similar bill was reported favorably in the last Congress, as appears by the report, a part of which is as follows:

"Angus McAuley was a soldier in the Seminole and Creek Indian war, and was pensioned at $2 per month from February 7, 1859. He was dropped from the rolls by reason of his residence within the limits of the insurrectionary States. He asks that he may be restored, and files evidence that he did not perform military service in the confederate army."

In addition to the facts found in said report, in which finding your committee concur, it appears that said Angus McAuley was opposed to secession, and was loyal to the Government of the United States during the war of the southern rebellion.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: In line 4 strike out the words "place on" and insert the words "restore to;" in line 7, before "war," insert the words "Creek Indian," and strike out the words "of 1812" in the same line. Amend the title to read as follows: "A bill to restore Angus McAuley to the pension roll."

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 4, after the word "to," to strike out "place on" and insert "restore to;" in line 7, before the word "war," to insert

"Creek Indian," and in the same line to strike out "of 1812;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Angus McAuley, of Suwanee County, Florida, a soldier of the Creek Indian war, and pay him his pension from the time when he was dropped from the rolls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this bill brings plainly before the Senate the question whether a resident of the confederate States during the rebellion, and who was dropped from the pension-rolls under the provisions of the statute upon that subject, shall be restored by act of Congress without any evidence that would satisfy the Pension Bureau as to his loyalty or as to his right to restoration to the rolls. If the beneficiary of this bill was, as he says, loyal to the Government during the rebellion, and was dropped by reason merely of his residence within the insurrectionary States, he had the opportunity to be restored by presenting those facts to the Pension Commissioner. I understand the facts to be in this case that Mr. McAuley was unwilling to make the oath and unwilling to set forth the facts required and swear to them, under which he would have been allowed to be restored by the Commissioner of Pensions, and that having failed to present this testimony before the Commissioner, he now comes to Congress and asks to be restored without this evidence being given by him.

The bill I think has twice heretofore been before the Senate without action. I was unwilling that the Senate should vote to-day without a full understanding of this case, because it was before the committee when I was chairman of it, and I am quite familiar with the facts affecting the relation of Mr. McAuley to the confederate government.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me to make a statement I may refresh his recollection. I will state for the Senator's information that he made a report himself in this case favorable at the last Congress, and I make a quotation in this report from the report then made by him.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator is entirely mistaken. I did not make that report. A report was made, but it was not made by me.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. INGALLS. If it was so reported it was a mistake, for I had uniformly opposed the bill, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] well knows.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can verify my recollection by the RECORD. If my statement is incorrect, I beg the Senator's pardon. I have sent for a copy of the Senator's report. However, since the case was then considered, other evidence has been furnished, the affidavits of a number of citizens residing near Angus McAuley, who all testify that he not only did not enter into the rebellion but that his sympathies were with the Union throughout the whole war, and that he expressed himself on many occasions in that way. So that now the committee has no doubt at all as to the propriety of restoring him to the roll. The only question that was ever in doubt in the mind of the committee was whether they ought to allow the pension to relate back to the time when he was stricken from the rolls. I supposed when the Senator from Kansas rose that he was about to make an objection on that point, as in the report which he made he allowed the pension to begin only from the time when under the general law it would commence; that is, from the time of restoration to the pension-roll. But in this case the committee thought the evidence was so clear, the man was so old, the amount ($2 a month) was so small, that we would allow the pension to relate back to the time when we think he was unjustly stricken from the rolls.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I am well acquainted with this case and I am well acquainted with the subject of the bill, Mr. McAuley. It is notorious in the State of Florida in the community where he lived that this poor old man, disabled in the Creek and Seminole war in the service of the United States, was a Union man, earnestly opposing at every step the secession of the State, and continuing loyal to the Union after the war had actually occurred. He was never in the confederate service. He was a marked man in his community because of his devotion to the Government and the flag of the United States. He had been a pensioner for years. He was disabled, deaf, lame, and almost blind, and he is now an old man, I suppose nearly, if not more than, eighty years of age, and without adequate means of support. I do not know why he did not take this oath. I know that he could have taken it. The evidence is conclusive upon the subject, the evidence of all his acquaintances in the community in which he lived, and I myself say to the Senate here that I know it was a notorious fact that this man was loyal to the Government of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, he asks that his pension shall be paid to him from the time he was dropped from the roll, a poor, disabled, loyal citizen and pensioner of the United States. He may not have known until this notice was served upon him that he could be restored on taking the oath, or he may have felt that the oath was something more than merely swearing that he had always been in favor of the Union and the preservation of the integrity of the States. He may have believed as I have known men and officers of the Union Army who fought all through the war to feel. I have seen them in the courts refuse to take the iron-clad oath, upon the ground that, in their opinion, it required them to swear that they had no sympathy or kind feeling for any of the individuals who were concerned in the war on the confederate side. What scruples of conscience this old man had I do not know, but I say there is no reason in the proposition that a man who was true to the Government, who rendered no service to the confederate States, who opposed secession in his opinions, who gave his moral influence entirely to the cause of the Union, and was a marked man because of it, should be dropped from the pension-rolls and never restored again. Why, sir, there is no law to justify it. The law was simply that during the war people within the territorial limits of the confederacy should not draw money from the United States, and the resolution afterward passed was simply for the purpose of requiring evidence to ascertain the fact of their loyalty. Now this man comes here and presents the evidence. I am very glad to hear the Senator from Pennsylvania speak so kindly and so liberally of this bill. I hope it will be passed, and passed without objection.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas, unless by unanimous consent, cannot proceed.

Mr. INGALLS. I will not ask unanimous consent; I will move that the bill be indefinitely postponed, and on that motion I believe I have five minutes, and I shall not want more than two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a new question.

Mr. INGALLS. The Chair rules that my motion is a new question, and I shall then be entitled to speak once upon it. That being the case, I will merely reply to the Senator from Florida by saying that if the facts that he sets forth are true, there never has been a moment since the close of the war in 1865 when Mr. Angus McAuley could not have been restored to the pension-roll by setting forth those matters in an affidavit and filing it with the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir; if the Chair will not hold that by yielding I lose my right to the floor.

Mr. CALL. It was in evidence before the committee, as the Senator will well remember, that this man did apply after the war, some time afterward, before he came to Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. And was refused because he would not make oath to those facts. That is why he was refused.

Mr. CALL. No, sir; the Senator will allow me; he was refused because he would not take the iron-clad oath, the test oath; not because of the facts I have stated.

Mr. INGALLS. The test oath never contained anything more than the facts which the Senator from Florida has said this man could prove with regard to his own relation to the confederate States during the war; and when Mr. McAuley made his application to the Pension Office for restoration and was refused, it was because he was unwilling or unable to swear to those facts which the Senator from Florida says he can now substantiate.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator if he is not aware of the fact that a Senator from a loyal State during the war and a man of high standing refused to take that oath and resigned his seat in the Senate because he thought it was unconstitutional? Now does the Senator say that because this man refused to take that oath he could not take it?

Mr. INGALLS. That is a question of casuistry. It is a question of fact that he did not, and therefore he could not hold his seat. Now, the question is whether Mr. McAuley, refusing to prove these facts before the Pension Office, because they were at that time to his belief not true, shall be allowed to come to Congress and get sixteen years' back pension?

I heard the Senator from Pennsylvania say that new evidence had been filed in this matter. He also alluded to the fact that I, on a previous occasion, had reported in favor of this bill. I did so because I was overruled by the Committee on Pensions, of which the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] was then a member. I entertained the same opinion then that I entertain now; but I was overruled by the committee in consequence of the importunities of the Senator from Florida, and only consented at last that the bill might be reported with an amendment restoring him to the pension-roll and entitling him to draw a pension from the time of his restoration. This bill goes much further than that. It says that he shall not only be restored, but for that period of time during which he was dropped from the rolls, because he refused to offer the necessary evidence before the Commissioner of Pensions, he shall be paid.

Now, if the Senate desire to establish that precedent, if they think it is wise or prudent, while that statute stands upon the statute-book, to allow a man who will not make the necessary evidence before an officer of this Government to come here and upon ex parte statements by his neighbors and by his friends relieve his own conscience from the necessity of making an oath—for he makes none in this matter himself—to be restored to the rolls and obtain the money which he might have obtained if he could have brought himself within the provisions of law, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this bill is not very important so far as the amount of money is concerned. It may be important as establishing a principle. It appears that this man was a loyal man opposed to secession, and that he remained loyal during the entire war. Now, to say that the man might not have sympathized sometimes with his neighbors and friends who were engaged in a conflict of this kind would be going a great way; and yet he could have done that and still have been a loyal man. The committee was satisfied that this man did not participate in the rebellion; that he had not given it aid and comfort in the manner provided by the statute.

Mr. INGALLS. The report does not say so.

Mr. TELLER. That was the finding of the committee at all events, no matter what the report may state, because the matter was very thoroughly considered upon that point in committee; and I do not understand that there was any difference of opinion as to that in the committee.

Now, Mr. President, if this man was a loyal man, if he did not participate in the rebellion, he was dropped from the rolls simply by a construction which is given to the law which said that every man in the State of Florida was a disloyal person. That was a fiction of the law. It was not true, we know, in many respects. We know that in Florida there were many men who never did participate in the rebellion, and who had no part or lot in it; and yet when we come to treat of the naked question according to what the law says, every man within the boundaries of that State was a disloyal man, and that presumption remains although he may have gone into the United States Army. It can be rebutted of course, but this was a sweeping statute that swept off from the pension-rolls every man who was in the States that were in rebellion. It was an exceedingly harsh law, to begin with; it was a law that never could have been passed at any other time except when the people were excited in this country. It did great injustice to many men in this country, and here is an old man who comes here now and says "I desire to be put back." It is not much money, and it is very evident the man does not want to be put on the rolls simply for the $2 a month. It is quite apparent that he is hurt because his loyalty is brought into question, and he says: "I want to be put where I ought to have been left. I never was a disloyal citizen of the United States, and I do not want to be so charged."

Mr. INGALLS. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask him if there is any affidavit, or if there has been any affidavit among the papers on file in this case from Mr. McAuley, setting forth that he was loyal during the war?

Mr. TELLER. I was not a member of the sub-committee.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me, I can answer that.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are three brief affidavits now here, the additional evidence that make that point clear. I have not changed my recollection that the Senator from Kansas did, as he now admits, make a report in favor of this bill without that evidence.

Mr. TELLER. I was going to say that I did not myself examine personally these papers. It is an impossible thing for every member to examine all the papers that come before the Pension Committee. We submit these questions to sub-committees, and when a Senator comes to us and says that a certain fact is fairly proved, we believe it to be true and we report it. I am in favor of this bill, and I am in favor of every other case that is presented of a like character.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, in regard to this bill, for which I voted in committee and in favor of the passage of which I am now, I wish to say that I think perhaps somewhat broader views actuated some members of the committee than the question whether this man could prove by his own affidavit that he was absolutely and most strictly loyal all the way through the war.

As has been observed during the debates that have already taken place in the Senate this session, there is a strong and growing disposition, which has been enunciated by many Senators, and by many upon this side of the Chamber, where old, disabled, and needy soldiers were pensioners of the United States and their names have been stricken from the roll by reason possibly of their participation in the rebellion, to restore them by reason of their necessity to the pension-roll. Here is a man who would come within the line of that declaration if any one whatever of all those whose names have been stricken from the roll who resided in the South during the rebellion would be embraced within that line.

For one, I believe that it is a proper case to which we may well extend the friendly feeling of the Government, its charity if you please, by his restoration to the roll. He was a soldier before the war of the rebellion; he was disabled; he was placed on the pension-roll. Being loyal, but residing within the insurrectionary districts, his name was dropped from the roll. His loyalty has been proved to the satisfaction of the committee, although he may have said nothing in regard to it himself; but however that may be, he comes now, old, poor, in needy circumstances, and I think he should be restored to the pension-roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has been reached, and the bill goes over.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2127) granting a pension to James F. Rose was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. No. 3831) to create a district for the inspection of hulls and boilers of steam-vessels was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 132) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the Department of Pennsylvania on the battle-field of Gettysburgh in July, 1882, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. INGALLS to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations in section 1, line 4, after "of," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CALL. I had given notice that I would, in accordance with the custom of the Senate, move to take up the resolution that I submitted on the subject of Peru and Chili, for the purpose of making some remarks to-day; but I will, at the request of the Senator from California who has this bill in charge, not do so now, and I give notice that to-morrow morning I will ask the Senate to lay aside the pending business and take up that resolution, in order that I may be enabled to address the Senate on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor on this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, on Saturday last there were several mass-meetings held in the State of California to give expression by that people to their sentiments on this question. There was one meeting, which was most extraordinary, held in the city of San Francisco, said to have been the largest public meeting ever held in that city, numbering over thirty thousand people. I desire to have read by the Secretary certain dispatches containing resolutions adopted at that mass-meeting.

There were mass-meetings held at San Francisco, Stockton, Nevada City, Los Angeles, Vallejo, Placerville, Santa Cruz, Napa, Sonora, Grass Valley, Merced, Martinez, Fresno, and Oroville.

I ask that at least some of these dispatches be read and that they all be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The dispatches will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Hon. JNO. F. MILLER or Hon. JAS. T. FARLEY,
United States Senators, Washington, D. C.:

The day has been observed all over the State as a holiday under governor's proclamation. Large and enthusiastic meetings held in Sacramento, San José, Stockton, Petaluma, San Andreas, Grass Valley, Martinez, Benicia, Napa, Gilroy, and other large cities, and also in Nevada. The meeting here the largest ever held in the State. Platt's Hall crowded. Mayor Blake presided. Thousands of people in the streets, addressed from three stands. Speeches and exercises earnest and enthusiastic; all parties a unit. The following resolutions unanimously adopted:

Whereas the continued and rapidly-increasing influx of Chinese immigration into the port of San Francisco calls for immediate and emphatic expression of public opinion, to the end that the Congress of the United States may be informed that this invading and destructive evil is actively increasing in magnitude and each succeeding day is casting a deeper shadow over the industry of this coast; and

Whereas it is not deemed necessary on this occasion to recite the ruinous consequences that have resulted from this unwelcome invasion or attempt to predict those that will surely follow if it is allowed to continue unrestrained; nevertheless, a duty we owe our brethren in the East requires that we should say that the banishment of capital from a country rich in all material resources to more inviting fields of enterprise and profit, and the driving of free white labor to maintain with almost despairing courage an unequal fight for existence are but storm-signals warning the whole country of imminent danger and disaster to all its industry if this Mongolian flood is not averted. The people of San Francisco, in general mass assembled, do therefore solemnly reiterate and reaffirm the unanswered and unanswerable arguments heretofore made in their previous petitions to Congress for relief, and they further respectfully urge that time and experience have but confirmed their apprehensions as to the grave dangers that would arise from unrestrained Chinese immigration: It is, therefore,

Resolved, That, laying aside all social and political distinctions, we unite as one man, as one people, as law-abiding citizens of the Republic and urge upon Congress legislation according to the terms of the recent treaty with China restricting and controlling Chinese immigration.

Be it further resolved, That our Senators and Representatives from this coast have our entire approval and hearty and united support in their efforts to present this great question to the country as of vital importance and deserving immediate and favorable action on the part of the Federal Government.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be telegraphed to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Please furnish copies of this to our members.

J. S. TABOR.
W. D. ENGLISH.
W. W. MORROW.

STOCKTON, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To our Representatives in Congress,
(Care F. S. MILLER, Senator, Washington:)

A large meeting held to-day. Sentiment unanimously in favor of Senate bill for restriction of Chinese immigration. Gratitude of entire community tendered to our Senators and Representatives for untiring efforts for passage of said bill.

E. E. THRIFT,
J. K. DOAK,
Committee.
H. O. SOUTHWORTH,
Chairman.

NEVADA, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senators MILLER and FARLEY, Washington, D. C.:

Urge the adoption of bill restricting Chinese immigration by all honorable means in your power. We are a unit in favor of such action.

Mass-meeting, Nevada City, Cal.

LOS ANGELES, March 4, 1882.

To Hon. JNO. T. MILLER, Washington D. C.:

Immense mass-meeting just closed. Three to five thousand persons present. Resolution adopted indorsing the action of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and urging to renewed and continuous efforts on behalf of Chinese-restriction bill.

JNO. G. DOWNEY.
P. W. DOONEN.

VALLEJO, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senators JOHN F. MILLER and J. T. FARLEY,
Washington, D. C.:

A mass-meeting of the citizens of Vallejo, called by the chairmen of both political parties and presided over by the mayor, was held to-day, at which the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas Chinese immigration is a positive injury to the best interests of California, as it has introduced among us a class of people who, unlike those of other nationalities, remain aliens, neither conforming to the institutions, habits, or customs of the country; and

Whereas this oriental race in the cheap mode of living to which it has been accustomed can work for less than pauper wages, and are rapidly absorbing the labor market, and also entering into a dangerous rivalry in manufacturing and other business enterprises, thus driving out a large number of our own people, a desirable population, who have sought here to make homes, but owing to this competition cannot find remunerative employment or be successful in business pursuits:

Be it therefore resolved, That as citizens of Vallejo interested in the prosperity of the State we earnestly ask of Congress protection from this Mongolian invasion, believing as we do that if not checked California will before long become but little better than a Chinese province. Asiatic and American civilization cannot exist together on the same soil, there being an irrepressible conflict between them which must eventually end in the giving way of one or the other.

Resolved, That while it has been the traditional policy of the Government to welcome all those that come from foreign lands to make this country their home, it was clearly never the intention of the founders of our institutions that an invasion should be permitted of immense armies of people who bring their nationality with them and will never become absorbed in our civilization.

Resolved, That as a matter of protection to our workingmen, our manufacturing enterprises, and all our industrial pursuits, we earnestly ask the passage of the bill now pending in Congress to restrict Chinese immigration to this country.

Resolved, That a copy of the proceedings of this meeting be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress as expressive of the unanimous wish of the citizens of Vallejo, including all our commercial, business, and laboring classes.

A. J. McPIKE,
Chairman Democratic County Committee, Solano County.
S. G. HELBORN,
Chairman Republican Committee.

PLACERVILLE, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Hon. J. T. FARLEY and JOHN MILLER,
Washington, D. C.:

Monster meeting in progress here. Speeches by Carpenter, Blanchard, Irwin, and others. Strong resolutions against Chinese immigration, and imploring Congress to pass pending bill.

W. A. SELKIRK.

SANTA CRUZ, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senator MILLER and colleagues,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the people of the State of California are to-day assembling at their respective homes to give expression to their sentiments on the serious danger threatening the industrial and social relations of our State and country by the reason of the great influx of Chinese laborers, and to urge Congress to immediate action on this subject: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the people of the city and county of Santa Cruz in mass-meeting assembled, irrespective of party, sincerely and earnestly recommend and urge the immediate passage of the anti-Chinese bill of Senator MILLER.

J. D. CHASE, Chairman.
A. A. TAYLOR, Secretary.

NAPA, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senator J. F. MILLER, Washington, D. C.:

This entire community has assembled and unanimously expressed themselves, urging the passage of the bill restricting Chinese immigration. This coast would never recover should the bill fail to pass. Business is suspended.

DAVID L. HAAS,
Chairman Rep. Co. Com.
DENNIS SPENCER,
Chairman Dem. Co. Com.

SONORA, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senators MILLER and FARLEY, Washington, D. C.:

Mass-meeting held; Tuolumne County is a unit in favor of the suppression of Chinese immigration, and we respectfully urge Congress to pass the pending Chinese bill for our relief.

MARK E. HUGHES,
Chairman Dem. Co. Com.
CHAS. B. CUTTING,
Chairman Rep. Co. Com.
W. A. DUCHON, Secretary.

GRASS VALLEY, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senators MILLER and FARLEY, Washington:

Grand mass-meeting. People Grass Valley, California, unanimously resolved: We heartily indorse the Miller bill now before the United States Senate, and urgently demand that the Congress shall adopt the same or other suitable enactment of a like character, with the amendment offered by Senator FARLEY.

HENRY DAVIS, Chairman.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., March 2, 1882.

To Hon. J. F. MILLER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the mayor has this day at our request sent to this board a special message in regard to the question of Chinese immigration; and

Whereas said message accords with our views: Therefore,

Resolved, That we fully approve and indorse the views and statements in said message contained as to the disastrous and blighting effect of unrestricted Chinese immigration to this State.

Resolved, That we respectfully and earnestly petition Congress to enact the most stringent laws which our treaties with China will permit for the prevention of Chinese immigration.

Resolved, That we heartily approve the action of our Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure proper and efficient Congressional action for the prevention of Chinese immigration, and tender them our warmest thanks for the same.

Resolved, That these resolutions are not prompted in the slightest degree by any unkind feeling toward the Chinese residents of this city and State, whose persons and property we believe should be fully protected, but by the deepest conviction that what we ask for is essential to the peace, prosperity, and material interests of our people.

Resolved, That his honor the mayor be, and he is hereby, requested to telegraph to Hon. J. F. MILLER a copy of these resolutions in board of supervisors, San Francisco, March 2, 1882.

Adopted unanimously by full board.

JNO. A. RUSSELL, Clerk.

The resolutions are sent as per request.

M. C. BLAKE, Mayor.

MERCEDE, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senators FARLEY and MILLER, Washington, D. C.:

A great mass-meeting is being held here to-day. The excitement on the delay of the Chinese bill is intense. Vigorous speakers of high social standing are addressing the people, and ringing resolutions, approving the course of our Representatives and calling national attention to the danger of delay in suppressing Chinese immigration to California, have been adopted.

CHAS. H. MARKS, President.

E. F. DIXON, Secretary.

MARTINEZ, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senators FARLEY and MILLER, Washington, D. C.:

Universal sentiment in favor of passage of the Chinese bill.

PAUL SHIRLEY,
Chairman Democratic County Committee.
P. LOUCKS,
Chairman Republican County Committee.

FRESNO., CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senators MILLER and FARLEY, Washington, D. C.:

A grand anti-Chinese demonstration held here to-night. Unbounded enthusiasm for your bill. We bid you God speed. All depends upon its passage.

SECRETARY OF MEETING.

OROVILLE, CAL., March 6, 1882.

To General JOHN F. MILLER, United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.:

The largest public meeting ever held in this place was held on Saturday evening in support of your Chinese bill.

WILLIAM SHARKEY,
Chairman Meeting.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President, I have a large number of dispatches in reference to the same subject-matter, which were sent to my colleague and myself jointly, all of which are embraced, except three, in the dispatches which he has sent up. The resolutions of Sacramento City, Ukiah, and Oakland are of a similar import to those dispatches which have just been read, and I ask that the dispatches from Ukiah and Oakland be put in the RECORD with those just read at the suggestion of my colleague. The resolutions are similar.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

UKIAH, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Senator FARLEY, Senate Chamber, Washington:

The people of Mendocino County met in mass-meeting at court-house in this place this afternoon and, after being addressed by a number of leading citizens, adopted a series of resolutions, demanded early Congressional relief from the influx of Chinese upon our shores, and requesting you to use best endeavors for passage by Congress of bill now before Senate. Also beseeching your associates in Congress from localities where the evil is not felt to vote for the passage of said bill.

J. H. SEWELL, President.

OAKLAND, CAL., March 4, 1882.

To Hon. J. T. FARLEY and Hon. J. F. MILLER, Washington:

The following resolutions were adopted at a large meeting in Oakland:

Whereas the civil institutions of the nation are the outgrowth of race, education, and religion, and the American governmental and social institutions are the product of freedom-loving, energetic people, deriving their religions from the writings of the Old and the New Testaments, constituting the Holy Bible; and

Whereas the Chinese character has been developed by centuries of despotism and under religions teachings monstrous in forms and ceremonies, and if not inculcating vice, at least allowing the most revolting practices without protest; and

Whereas in America the development of character depends upon the nobility of labor and its ability to open the way to the highest stations and honors, and under the Chinese systems labor is degraded and degrading, contented with bare subsistence and fuel to feed the flames of vice: Therefore,

Resolved, That after a careful observation of the results of Chinese immigration upon American soil, our deliberate and dispassionate judgment is that an irreconcilable and fundamental difference of character, habits, and religion exists between the two people which is slowly but surely undermining that which is noblest and best in our national character, rendering our youths idle and dissipated, and depriving years of the sustaining hope of the just rewards and the repose of an industrious, moral, and frugal life. That so far from being an idle sentiment it has become a conviction actuating all classes, high and low, rich and poor, and based upon positive demonstration.

Resolved, That the evil complained of is present and pressing, and that the people of the Pacific coast will be content with nothing less than the passage of the bill now before Congress restricting farther Chinese immigration.

J. C. SULLIVAN, Secretary.

Mr. FAIR. Mr. President, I have a dispatch from the governor of Nevada, Hon. John H. Kinkead, expressing the wishes of the people of that State. I should like to have it read for the information of the body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair.) The dispatch will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

CARSON, NEVADA, March 4, 1882.

To Senators JONES and FAIR, Washington, D. C.:

Mass-meetings are being held to-night in our prominent towns, and are unanimous in urging the speedy passage of Senator MILLER's bill restricting Chinese immigration.

JNO. H. KINKEAD,
Governor of Nevada.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I am aware that the friends of this measure are impatient for a vote, and that in their opinion the debate is exhausted. I cannot therefore expect, however courteous they may be, to receive a very attentive hearing from them; but, sir, believing that in nothing are the friends of this measure more mistaken than in the belief that they have exhausted and ended the debate upon the questions which they have raised by this measure, however little I may be able to contribute to that debate, I am compelled by a sense of duty to utter what I may, as briefly as under the circumstances it is possible for me, in protest against this measure.

There is some advantage as well as disadvantage in looking at the subject-matter of this debate at a distance. If one does not feel so keenly the evils out of which this legislation has sprung, and fails to be affected by the prejudice and passion and feeling that control those more closely in contact with it, nevertheless a clearer vision of the character of the proposed remedy and a calmer judgment upon its nature and its consequences are some compensation to those who look at it from a distance.

Mr. President, it is confessed upon the record here by supporters of this legislation that it "is invoked under the influence of overmastering passions. Whether justly or unjustly, public opinion upon the Pacific slope, by importunate and inflammatory appeals, has been wrought to that heat of passion that we are not at this time," in the opinion of such supporters, "capable of taking an entirely unbiased and unprejudiced view of what the social and economical requirements of the country in regard to this question are."

If this confession of supporters of the measure itself were not furnished us in debate here as the lesson, what we have witnessed this morning sent here over the wires from California and Nevada, and Oregon, I believe, furnishes ample proof of the statement. There can be no doubt that what the supporters of the bill call a white heat pervades that people; whether, as is said, rightly or wrongly, its existence cannot be ignored and its effect upon our deliberations cannot be disregarded. What should it teach us? Hasty, unquestioned acquiescence in demands made under the impulse of overmastering passion, or calm, considerate delay, not diminished, if not increased, as one sees that all reason or judgment upon existing facts in the locality that invokes this legislation at our hands is swallowed up in a blind and furious darkening passion. And yet what are we told by such supporters of this measure is the lesson, on the other hand, to be taught us as a duty here in this Senate Chamber from the voice that comes up from out of the heat of an overmastering passion? Such supporters tell us that they are not disposed at this time "to dwell upon what seem" to their minds to be "the economical and what may be called the sentimental objections to this legislation." They tell you, sir, when making the very confession to which I have called your attention, that their "instincts revolt at it," and that they would "as soon think of destroying all the mules or all the domestic animals in the country, or of destroying all the engines and labor-saving machinery in the country, as to either expel or repel a class of docile, patient, obedient, frugal, and industrious laborers, whether skilled or unskilled."

Mr. MILLER, of California. Will the Senator allow me to ask whom he is quoting from?

Mr. DAWES. Quoting from a Senator here in his seat, declaring that he would vote for this measure.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What Senator was it?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] The same Senator further instructs us as to our duty out of this measure and out of the circumstances under which it comes into existence here before this body.

"But," says he, "I pass that, because"—hear this!

Because conceding to other localities the same rights that I demand for my own, and resting upon the maxims and dogmas of local self-government and home rule, I am prepared to say that the communities upon the Pacific coast—

"Whom I have described as at this moment under an overmastering passion"— have a right to judge for themselves as to the propriety in an economical sense of this immigration, and when they have spoken through their authorized representatives, with their declaration I shall be content.

The only condition upon which such supporters of this legislation have declared that their support shall be given to it, from which their very instincts revolt, is that they shall not be required to stand it over ten years.

Mr. TELLER. I would ask the Senator by what authority he says that no one supports the bill except upon that theory? Did he not hear me distinctly announce that I did not support it upon any such theory?

Mr. DAWES. I have not forgotten the ground the Senator from Colorado took, but I should like to inquire of the Senator what he put that question to me for?

Mr. TELLER. I put it because the Senator has made the assertion, to go to the country, that nobody supports this bill in this Senate except because the people of California want it. That I understand to be his position.

Mr. DAWES. I regret exceedingly that the Senator did so understand me, because I did not say so. I said the only condition that such supporters of this measure demanded was that they were not required to endure that at which their very instincts revolted longer than ten years. I am aware that the Senator from Colorado put his support of this bill upon an entirely different and it seems to me quite as indefensible a ground, which I hope that I may not forget before I get through.

Mr. TELLER. I hope not.

Mr. DAWES. So, sir, the voice of these States thus expressed is our command. The basis, the ground for this legislation is stated in the bill itself. Those who framed it have chosen in their frankness, for which I commend them, to tell the world what necessity there is for it; and it is in these brief words:

Whereas in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers the good order of certain localities within the territory thereof: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c.

"In the opinion of the Government of the United States." We are told by Senators that instead of taking their own instincts as their guide to their duty here as Senators of the United States they are to take an expression of it from a locality controlled by an overmastering passion. My friend on my right [Mr. JONES, of Nevada] inquires how I know it is a fact. The Senator did not hear me read the confession of supporters of this bill, to which I would add and did add the evidence which Senators have themselves produced here this morning of a legal holiday enacted on the Pacific coast for the purpose of gathering together whatever could be put into the form of a testimony here, and telegraphed to the Senate of the United States as instructions to them upon their duty.

Mr. President, the whole basis of this legislation is that the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers good order in certain localities. It is not that Chinese laborers are here; that Chinese laborers are working evil in the midst of any locality in these United States; it is not that any evil has grown out of their coming here in the past, for all who have come here, by express provision of this bill, up to the time it shall take effect are to remain here unmolested, to work out such effect upon our institutions, social and political, as they may, undisturbed; but it is the coming of Chinese laborers here that endangers good order. No one has told us how the coming of Chinese laborers here endangers good order; nor does any one tell us whether they endanger good order by being themselves the disturbers of order, or whether they endanger good order merely by being the temptation to some sand-lot irrepressible to cast a stone at inoffensive and docile human beings. That is not explained. I have never known produced here as evidence of the disturbance of good order in any of these communities that any of these docile laborers have ever assaulted any one or committed a breach of the peace against any individual; but I have heard everywhere that they have been the occasion of other people committing breaches of the peace and disturbing good order, and it is on that account that they must be removed, upon the principle that the justice fined Mr. Jones for getting Mr. Smith so mad in court that Mr. Smith insulted the court. [Laughter.] They have no business to be where any irrepressible community, disregarding the peace and good order, are tempted by their presence to disturb it.

Therefore, as the basis of this bill, the coming of Chinese laborers here gives somebody an opportunity to disturb the peace, and they must be stopped and the temptation removed—a liberal construction of the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation!"

But, sir, the authority to enter into this legislation in order that the community into which a Chinese laborer may come will not hereafter be tempted to commit a breach of the peace upon him is derived, if anywhere, from this clause of a treaty we have made with China:

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein—

You will see that this bill is entirely based upon their coming—affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of such immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

This legislation, if authorized under the treaty, must not conflict with any of several elements. It may limit as to numbers or time; it may regulate as to mode or manner or number; but it must not absolutely prohibit. If any one can tell us how to limit or regulate and not absolutely prohibit, except you limit as to number or as to time of coming of certain numbers without absolutely prohibiting, he has better skill in the definition of words than I have. We have promised that if we undertake to legislate we will legislate by some reasonable limitation of the manner of importing Chinamen, but we will not absolutely prohibit it, and we say in the treaty that we will do it without contravening the spirit of the old treaty. The difficulty with the spirit of the old treaty was that it declared in so many words that they should come without limit, and not only should come without limit, but should be protected here in the enjoyment of every right that any citizen of the United States could claim of protection under the laws and the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SLATER. I should like to call the Senator's attention, if he will permit me, to the fact that the limitation in the Burlingame treaty was that they were to enjoy in the United States all those rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel and residence alone. Those are the restrictive words, and they are found in no other treaty.

Mr. DAWES. That, I think, includes about all that a man could desire, short of political privileges and rights. He shall be protected in his home, in his residence, which shall be his castle, and in going to and fro whenever he listeth throughout the United States. But the Senator will go along with me a little further. We have told them, we have solemnly covenanted, as I said, that while we may put reasonable limitations and regulations upon immigration, we will not absolutely prohibit it. In this bill we do not absolutely prohibit, for twenty years, any Chinese labor from coming; we only declare that if he does come he shall go to the penitentiary. That is all. We do not absolutely prohibit, from and after this bill takes effect, a Chinese laborer coming to the United States; we only declare that if he does come he shall go to the penitentiary. That is all. I knew a man once who told his son, "I do not absolutely prohibit you from going to the circus to-day, but I tell you that if you do I will horsewhip you." That is all. That is legislation in the spirit of the Burlingame treaty. No, we will not absolutely prohibit you, but if one of you puts his foot upon the soil of free America, though innocent of guile as a saint, with purpose as praiseworthy as ever actuated an immigrant to these shores, though you come with a sincere desire to identify yourself with our institutions and obey our laws and make a home for yourself and for your children, if you undertake to do it with the labor of your own hands, you shall find yourself in the penitentiary.

That is the spirit of the Burlingame treaty! And that, these gentleman say, is, whether it be of the Burlingame treaty or not, the spirit and the letter of the law we are called upon this day to record our votes in favor of. I do not wonder the Senator from Kansas said that his very instincts revolted from it. I only wonder that he could find it consistent with his duty afterward to say that he would be willing to take it if he were not required to endure it longer than ten years.

Sir, one thing more. It is "Chinese laborers" that disturb the good order of certain localities in the United States. It is not Chinese per se. If a Chinaman will come here and only pledge himself to be idle, if he come here clothed in "purple and fine linen," if he bring with him an army of adherents, he may travel throughout the length and breadth of the land; if he will agree to keep a gambling shop, though it be under the very shadow of the sanctuary, though he and his followers darken the sun with the rabble that come and occupy their dens where they smoke in idleness their opium and play cards and gamble and toss up upon the venture of the die; though they bring vile women with them, provided they do not work for a living, they may come. Yes, as is suggested by my colleague, they can even join the band of saints in California that throw stones at Chinese laborers, saying: None of this; procul, O procul este, profani! get behind me ye hordes of Satan; let the godly people of Massachusetts and Rhode Island and the other States of this Union enjoy the elevating influence and pious association of all other Chinese; but do not let them be contaminated by one who is vile enough to earn his living by labor!

That is this bill. Is there not as much danger to society, to social and political institutions in this land, from the arrival of an idle, worthless, dissipated Mongolian, as there is from the humble, docile laborer who earns his daily bread by the sweat of his brow and uses those earnings for what he consumes and what he wears?

Mr. SLATER. I should like to ask the Senator, if it would not be an interruption to him, if the condition he depicts is not the condition the treaty itself affixes upon the coming of the Chinaman? The law is only following the treaty.

Mr. DAWES. I know it. Our friends made the treaty and then they make the law, and there is no more virtue in the treaty they made in this respect than there is in the law they propose. They were satisfied; they sang hosannas when the treaty was made which enabled them to put their foot upon a laborer and exalt an idle dissipated Chinaman, if one could be found. They hold mass-meetings to-day, their Legislatures enact a legal holiday that all of them can come together and shout "Pass a law that will enable us to trample with the iron heel of power every man of Chinese birth who has the presumption in this land of liberty to earn his daily bread by the sweat of his brow!" And we are called upon to do this and we resolve to do this (so says the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Delaware, and others) because these localities are of one mind demanding it. But suppose some other locality should demand the opposite; suppose some State engaged in great public works, desirous of carrying them through, should demand that public order among them required that no such bill as this should be enacted, are they not entitled to the same hearing and to the same consideration as these localities? Is not our duty something else than to yield an implicit and unquestioned obedience to the demand of any locality? While it is incumbent on us as Senators of the United States to listen to and weigh well the demands and the petitions to the enacting power of any locality, they should be weighed by the standard of the whole Union. We are not here to legislate for New England nor for California. We are here——

Mr. FARLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question only? Is not the Senator, and are not most of the Representatives from the portion of the country he hails from, asking continually for protection against European cheap labor? Does the Senator propose to bring Asiatic cheap labor here to compete with the laborers of this country?

Mr. DAWES. I propose, as well as I may know how, to govern my action here upon every bill by such a policy as will benefit the whole country, whether it be a bill for protection eo nomine or a bill like this, evoked from an overmastering passion kindled and led by European foreigners against Asiatic foreigners. The same communities who now implore deliverance from Asiatic foreigners have surrendered and put themselves under the lead of European foreigners, who have led them out onto the sand-lots and harangued them until the good and order-loving people of those communities were unable to be heard; until the fire-brand and the torch and the bloody weapon rules those communities in spite of the calm, order-loving people, such as their Representatives and Senators here are. And, sir, this is a vain attempt to bring peace there by a surrender of principle and good order to the behests of those who commanded those communities within the last three years who were themselves foreigners.

Mr. SLATER. Will the honorable Senator allow me a moment? I wish to enter my statement here that the condition of the opposition to Chinese labor in the States of California and Oregon and the Pacific States generally does not warrant the statement that this opposition is led or engendered by foreign elements. There is no division of sentiment there, and the opposition is essentially American in every particular.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator could not have forgotten that scarcely a dozen years have passed since that treaty was ratified which opened China to our trade and our shores to all Chinamen, under which every Chinaman that has come to this country has come with the pledge and welcome of a treaty-covenanting, not a treaty-keeping, Government, and that the author of that treaty was received upon the Pacific coast with open arms, with shouts and plaudits and welcomes.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I should like to correct the Senator in that. The universal sentiment on the Pacific coast when the Burlingame treaty was ratified was against it, and while the Republican party was in a majority of 20,000 in California when the election took place in 1867, the fact that the nominee for governor of that party had been in favor of Chinese immigration beat him by 10,000 votes at the next election. In 1867 Mr. Haight was elected, and from the very fact that he sat at dinner and in a speech welcomed the Chinese and welcomed this treaty that Mr. Burlingame had made, Mr. Burlingame being on a sort of junketing tour with the Chinese showing them around, when Mr. Haight was renominated in 1872 he was defeated by thousands of votes by one who was opposed to Chinese immigration. The California people have never ceased their opposition to Chinese immigration from the earliest times until now. And yet we hear here, sir, that it is an overmastering passion just engendered to-day! It is their calm judgment that it is against the interest of the people of the United States, and more especially against the interest of the people of that coast, that Chinese should come here, and there is no passion about it. It is a feeling that pervades all sections of the community and all classes of the community, the church member, the foreigner, the native, and all alike. The Senator does injustice to the Pacific States when he says it is an overmastering passion led by foreigners alone.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I did not say it was an overmastering passion, though I believe it is.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. It was so said, and the Senator indorsed it.

Mr. DAWES. No doubt about it; and I read it from the supporters of the bill as stating, in stronger language than I was capable of stating, what its purpose was. It may be that the Burlingame treaty was never popular in California, and that its author was unpopular there, but they had a strange way of showing it. They banqueted him in San Francisco, all their officials and all their dignitaries being there, at such a banquet as, equal to Belshazzar's, was never before seen in this country. Other Belshazzars will find before they get through with this method of legislation that their doom will be written on the wall. Those of them who undertake to maintain under the Constitution and the laws of the United States such a sort of doctrine as underlies this bill, will see Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin upon the wall. They bought for him a great estate in California, large enough for a duke or an earl, and they held it for him until he could come back from his tour of treaty-making around the world. We, here in Washington, invited him and his associate embassadors to an official reception in the Halls of Congress, and we marched to and fro, with our officers at our head, in their presence to pay our respects to men who had achieved so much in breaking down the barriers that had existed to commercial intercourse and trade and emigration throughout the world. A strange way, sir, to manifest their hostility to what he had done!

I have called your attention, Mr. President, to the class of men that give such offense. I have shown you that it is not the character of the men, it is not the fact that they are Chinamen that gives offense; it is not the fact that they are barbarians, as my friend at the right, [Mr. JONES, of Nevada,] prompting me so well, helps me to say, because a barbarian in "purple and fine linen," with abundance of money, and no necessity to toil, with a retinue equal to that of the Sultan and his harem, can come and go hither and thither where he will, without offense to this law. So it is not that they are barbarians, it is because, as this bill says in so many words, and which I intend to repeat so that the American people shall know what it is—it is because the poor victim of it is compelled to earn his living by his daily toil, and this people will have none of that kind of barbarians among them!

But, sir, that is not all. If any merchant vessel of the British Government, or of any other, shall unluckily have on board a Chinese cook, and shall approach the coast of the United States anywhere from Eastport, Maine, to the Rio Grande, or from the Gulf of California to the furthermost cape of the Aleutian Islands, within a marine league of the shore, the master of the vessel and his poor, unlucky cook fall a sacrifice to good order and go to the penitentiary, and the vessel and all on board are covered into the Treasury. They are not to wait till he comes into a harbor even. If, in traversing the broad ocean in the lawful pursuit of commerce he approach the coast where not a solitary human being may live to be disturbed, within a marine league of it, he falls a victim and goes to the penitentiary, and his vessel is confiscated. Sir, I am quite sure there would never but one such case arise. The State Department of this Government would have business enough on its hands when that should come, and the balance of the Geneva award would be distributed without any further trouble. Let me put upon the record the evidence of what I say. The second section of the bill provides—

That any master of any vessel, of whatever nationality, who shall on such vessel bring within the jurisdiction of the United States any Chinese laborer from any foreign port or place shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of $500 for each and every such Chinese laborer so brought, and may be also imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

And again:

SEC. 11. That every vessel whose master shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed forfeited to the United States, and shall be liable to seizure and condemnation in any district of the United States into which such vessel may enter or in which she may be found.

Sir, I should like to hear from the authors of this bill why they do not attempt to provide against the evils arising from those Chinese who are here; why they have not secured such provision in the treaty as would enable them to protect themselves, if protection be needed, against the Chinese who are here. They made their treaty; they prescribed its terms; the Chinese embassadors struggled against it, but struggled in vain. They were told that the limitation should be reasonable; that the prohibition should not be absolute; that no legislation should be indulged in that was not in the very spirit of the Burlingame treaty, and they trusted; and forthwith we tell them that what we meant by those honeyed words was that while we do not absolutely prohibit, we only tell them they shall go to the penitentiary if they come. My distinguished friend on my right [Mr. JONES, of Nevada] says that is right. Out of that spirit so graphically described by a supporter of this bill comes the announcement that it is right to tell a Chinaman that story and supplement it by this legislation. Sir, let it go on the record to be disposed of hereafter, when the storm shall have subsided, and when men shall judge our acts not in the white heat of passion, but by the calm, deliberate consideration of that moral law which requires us to do unto others as we would have them do unto us.

Not only that, while we say in this bill that we will not touch a Chinaman who is here, although he may commit the offense of doing manual labor, yet we tell him that if he departs from this country, in the opinion of any official of the United States, contrary to law, he shall go to the penitentiary. If he wishes to go out of the country contrary to law what has he got to do to conform to this bill, although it be in non-conformity to the treaty? He has got to do this: he shall "before such departure" cause himself "to be duly registered at a custom-house in the United States." That is all he has got to do. Another section says that when he goes to register, "if any consular officer, on examination of the claims and identity of any Chinese proposing to depart from the United States, shall be satisfied that such person seeks so to do in violation of this act," when he is registering, which is all the act calls on him to do, if he is satisfied that this man is registering contrary to this act he shall not let him go at all. So that, whether a man who has come here before this law takes effect can ever get out of the country depends not upon his innocence but upon the opinion of an official stationed where the people around him are laboring under an overmastering passion.

He is in a pretty bad fix, Mr. President. Nobody can come here without going to the penitentiary, and nobody can get out of here without going there. "We have got him anyhow," my distinguished friend on my right keeps helping me to say. They have got him anyhow! The free people of the United States, a government of constitution and of law, which till now boasted that the humblest of all under the flag that floats over this country was as safe in his home and in his pursuits as the most powerful in the land, are told here in the Senate, in the language of my distinguished friend voicing that locality now reeling in that overmastering passion, that "we have got him anyhow."

My distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said that if the Chinaman would only come here to be a citizen and to work and to cast his lot among us, he would welcome him, but this bill says he shall not.

Mr. TELLER. I did not quite say that, as I recollect. I said that if he fled from oppression and tyranny and intended to better his condition by coming here with reference to his liberty, &c., I would not close the door against him, no matter what might be his color.

Mr. DAWES. This bill says that if my friend from Colorado should induce a Chinaman to come here even for that purpose, a laboring Chinaman, he would get into the penitentiary too.

Mr. TELLER. There is no danger of any such thing.

Mr. DAWES. No; I do not think there is the slightest danger of his doing it, notwithstanding what the Senator said yesterday. So when you come to probe it all, it is hatred of a Chinaman (not universally of Chinamen, but of a class of Chinamen) who so degrades himself in the eyes of those who apply this rule to him as to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow.

This bill fails to provide how you shall distinguish between a Chinese laborer and a Chinese aristocrat. When they appear here upon the shore of the United States they have got to prove themselves, I suppose.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator must certainly have overlooked one of the material parts of this bill. As was said yesterday, the whole subject is left to the Chinese Government to say what the man is. Nothing could be more fair. We had a right to claim that right ourselves; we had a right to say, "We will apply the test; we will say whether he is a laborer;" but we said on the contrary, "If your government certifies that you are not a laborer, then the case is yours and the burden is upon us to show that you are a laborer."

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator call my attention to that wise provision of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that under the bill a Chinaman who comes here brings a passport which is viséd by our officer and that is all we have to do with it.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator put it on record, so that we may look at it? Will the Senator read the clause upon which he relies for the protection of that class of Chinamen toward whom he has hatred?

Mr. TELLER. I cannot undertake to go through a long bill of this kind in a moment; but when the Senator attacks a bill on that ground he ought to know what is in the bill. I will call his attention to the provision, I think it is in section 5, but I am not certain. I will find it in a moment.

Mr. SLATER. If the Senator will allow me, it is the provision commencing on the last line of page 11 and proceeding on page 12.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Section 5.

Mr. TELLER. Beginning in line 6 of section 5, on page 11, I read:

Or who shall have come within the United States within sixty days next after the passage of this act, shall obtain the permission of the Chinese Government in each case, to be evidenced by a passport issued by said government, which passport shall be in the English language, &c.

The treaty gives us authority to keep them out; but when the Chinese Government says that a man does not come within the provisions of the treaty, the bill allows him to come.

Mr. DAWES. How delusive all this is!

Mr. TELLER. I should say so, Mr. President.

Mr. DAWES. A Chinaman who has been here and after returning to China comes back, can take care of himself, if he can get the passport required. A Chinaman who does not have to work for a living is the only other Chinaman who is allowed to come anyhow. So there is no such thing as a Chinese laborer coming over with a passport except the Chinese laborer who has been here before.

Mr. TELLER. Of course; I never stated that there was. The object of this bill is to see that the Chinese laborer does not come. There can be no misunderstanding about that.

Mr. DAWES. Exactly. When a man is found in the streets of San Francisco or Detroit, bearing evidence in his physiognomy that he is a Chinaman, I suppose he has got to prove himself, or else he cannot walk the streets of Detroit, or of San Francisco, or Boston, any longer.

Mr. TELLER. Oh! there is nothing in the bill of that kind.

Mr. DAWES. There is nothing in the bill that requires him to prove himself, but there is something in the spirit which made the bill that would require him—the spirit which haunts a Chinaman, which caused the peaceful and law-abiding citizens of San Francisco the other day (when 30,000 people were assembled to cry out, "Put down the Chinaman!") to tremble for the safety of those Chinamen in their quarters. That is the spirit which haunts a Chinaman; and all the rules of law are to be reversed or a Chinaman will go to the penitentiary. He has got to prove his right to remain here against the accusation of any European foreigner like Kearney who may spring up in San Francisco, in Detroit, or in any other place near the boundary lines of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. When the Senator makes an attack, not upon the principle of the bill but upon the details of the bill, he ought to show wherein there is anything in the bill that justifies him in making such an assertion. There is nothing that requires a Chinaman to prove, when he walks the streets of San Francisco, that he has come in under the provisions of this bill. When he attempts to land is the time when he is asked for his passport. If he is a laborer it is supposed that he has not got it, if the Chinese Government has kept faith with us with respect to this treaty. If he has a passport it is declared in the bill that he shall be admitted without any further examination. The presumption is in his favor. When he has landed on our soil his right under the bill is equal to that of any other man to travel all over the country. He need not stay in the communities where he is not wanted; he can go to the communities where he is desired.

When the Senator says that this bill is drawn in a spirit of hatred, and when he intimates that it should be understood that the Senators who support this bill are actuated by the same sentiments that actuate the sand-lotters of San Francisco, he does us injustice. I am for the protection of every Chinaman by every means known to the law. I would give him the same trial by jury and the same protection at the expense of the Government that I would give the best citizen of Massachusetts or any other man who lives in this land. It is not quite fair for the Senator to attempt to make it appear that we, who believe that there is an impending evil and are anxious by the processes of law to restrict this immigration, are joining with a class of people, exceedingly few in numbers, who are disposed to do personal violence to the Chinese in this country.

Mr. DAWES. The champion of this bill from Colorado is uneasy at the position he took yesterday.

Mr. TELLER. Not a bit of it.

Mr. DAWES. It would do him credit if he was. Although the Senator yesterday was willing to admit that our civilization was superior to that of the Chinese, that the civilization of the nineteenth century was superior to that of the sixth, that the Caucasian was superior to anybody else on God's footstool, yet he turned around and said that unless we came with a statute and drove off one hundred and two thousand Chinamen from fifty million Caucasians it was all day with the latter. He was not afraid to avow here that there was a superior and an inferior race in this country, and that the superior must have control by legislative guards and protections or they would be sure to surrender to the inferior. I should be uneasy if I were in his place at the announcement of such a proposition.

Mr. TELLER. I can hardly allow the honorable Senator to make that statement without contradiction. I made no such statement, and the Senator ought to know it, because my speech is in the RECORD exactly as I delivered it, without any corrections whatever. I never said that we were in danger of these 102,000 people. I spoke of the vast hordes that might come, and I spoke not of their physical control over this country. I made no such statement as he mentions now.

Mr. DAWES. I will not have any controversy with the Senator. Of course he has a right to put upon the record what he intended to say.

Mr. TELLER. I will stand by what I said.

Mr. DAWES. I will put upon the record as an answer what I find in the RECORD. The Senator said this, or is reported to have said it——

Mr. TELLER. I said it, there is no donbt.

Mr. DAWES. I read his language from the RECORD. He said:

> The Anglo-Saxon, the Caucasian race has a right, considering its superiority of intellectual force and mental vigor, to look down upon every other branch of the human family; a portion of the Anglo-Saxon race has claimed for itself the right to look down upon a portion of the Caucasian race because of their intellectual and moral superiority. All this may be nice in theory, but it is not true in fact, and when you come to make the application it does not work worth a cent. We are the superior race to-day. We are superior to the Chinese, though they go back with their three or four or five thousand years of civilization. As stated by some Senator the other day on the floor of the Senate, the civilization of the Chinese has not proceeded one whit, except as it has gathered some things from contact with us in the last few years, from what it was twenty-five hundred years ago. It has stood still or it has retrograded, and it has not gone on; and for that people there is not, as supposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, any future.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator think that will improve his speech? If so, I have no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I think it establishes my position.

Mr. TELLER. Not at all.

Mr. DAWES. I leave the statement of the Senator, because I would not do him any injustice. He says now that he is perfectly content with what he said yesterday.

Mr. TELLER. I am.

Mr. DAWES. And I am content with the argument I have made on it. If he is able to stand upon all the deductions which follow from this statement, then of course the Senator will maintain himself, to his own satisfaction, at least in the position he takes.

Mr. President, this is not a new feature in legislation. It is an application of an old feature of legislation to a new case. The language of this bill to carry out the principle in its application to the Chinese is familiar to those who recollect the history of the country in the past. It is evoked from the dead past. It is evoked from a system of legislation in disregard of human rights, to which large portions of this people once adhered, and whose consequences have been deep and lasting upon the history of the country and the character of her institutions. I had hoped that it would have remained in the dead past. I for one, having some recollection of the commotions and disturbances bred of it in times now happily gone, hoped we might never hear of it again; but I do not choose that this revival of it shall go into history without there going along with it the source from whence it comes. There have been times in the history of this country when her people have attempted the same thing about other races, and in language so like this that the provisions of this bill could almost be seen by one familiar with laws that have been, but which have been swept away by an omnipotent public opinion and doomed to that oblivion in which sooner or later this is as sure to be consigned as that the eternal principles upon which this Government is founded will survive.

Let me put upon record by the side of this proposed legislation what others heretofore have vainly attempted to do, and see how like it is in principle and almost in language. A half century ago a State of this Union enacted "An act for the better regulation of free negroes and persons of color, and for other purposes," which provided:

> That if any vessel shall come into any port or harbor of this State, from any other State or foreign port, having on board any free negroes or persons of color, as cooks, stewards, or mariners, or in any other employment on board of said vessel, such free negroes or persons of color shall be liable to be seized and confined in jail until such vessels shall clear out and depart from this State; and that when said vessel is ready to sail, the captain of said vessel shall be bound to carry away the said free negro or free persons of color, and to pay the expenses of his detention; and, in case of his neglect or refusal so to do, he shall be liable to be indicted, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than two months; and such free negroes or persons of color shall be deemed and taken as absolute slaves, and sold in conformity to the provisions of the act, &c.

The impotence of this law having been demonstrated, the makers of it rallied again some twenty years afterward and enacted:

> That from and after the passing of this act, it shall not be lawful for any free negro or person of color to migrate into this State, or be brought or introduced into its limits, under any pretext whatever, by land or by water. And in case any free negro or person of color (not being a seaman on board any vessel arriving in this State) shall migrate into, or be introduced into, this State, contrary to this act, it shall and may be lawful for any white person to seize and convey him or her before any magistrate of the district or parish where he or she may be taken; and it shall be the duty of the sheriff or any constable in the parish or district in which said entry shall be made, and of the city marshals in the city of Charleston, should entry be made in Charleston, upon information of the migration or introduction of any such free negro or person of color, to arrest and bring before some magistrate of the district or parish where the said free negro or person of color shall be taken; which magistrate is by this act empowered to commit to prison, or, at his discretion, to hold to bail, such free negro or person of color, and to summon three freeholders and form a court, as the law directs for the trial of persons of color, and examine such free negro or person of color, within six days after his or her arrest, and, on conviction, to order him or her to leave the State, and to commit such free negro or person of color so convicted, to close prison, until such time as he or she can leave the State; or to release him or her on sufficient bail, for any time not exceeding fifteen days, at the discretion of the magistrate. And every free negro or person of color so bailed, and ordered to leave the State, as aforesaid, who shall not have left the State within the time for which he or she shall have been released on bail, or who, having left the State after conviction as aforesaid, shall return into the same, shall be arrested and committed to close prison aforesaid; and upon proof before a court, to be constituted as this act directs, of his or her having failed to leave the State as aforesaid, or of his or her having returned into the State after having left the same as aforesaid, he or she shall be subjected to such corporal punishment as the said court in their discretion shall think fit to order. And if, after said sentence or punishment, such free negro or person of color shall still remain in the State longer than the time allowed, or having left the State, shall thereafter return to the same, upon proof and conviction thereof, before a court to be constituted as hereinbefore directed, he or she shall be sold at public sale as a slave; and the proceeds of such sale shall be appropriated and applied, one-half thereof to the use of the State, and the other half to the use of the informer.

Then further on in the same act is the source of the penalty upon a poor Chinaman who comes back here unwittingly after he has once got out of the country:

> And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall not be lawful for any free negro or person of color who has left the State at any time previous to the passing of this act, or for those who may hereafter leave the State, ever to return again into the same, without being subject to the penalties of the first section of this act as fully as if they had never resided therein.

Sir, within my own service here, a free State of this Union undertook the same impotent assault upon human rights and incorporated the provision which I shall read into a constitution, the adoption of which in Congress rent political parties asunder and contributed its full share to the accomplishment of those great events which planted in the fu damental law of this land the inalienable right of all men to life, lil erty, and the pursuit of happiness. The constitution of Oregon fired its volley at the free negro in these words:

> No free negro or mulatto, not residing in this State at the time of the adoption of this constitution, shall ever come, reside, or be within this State, or hold any real estate, or make any contract or maintain any suit therein; and the Legislative Assembly shall provide by penal laws for the removal by public officers of all such free negroes and mulattoes, and for their effectual exclusion from the State, and for the punishment of persons who shall bring them into the State, or employ or harbor them therein.

It proposed to punish with penal laws any man who should give the free negro found in the State of Oregon a crust of bread! Sir, I had hoped that these things had passed away. I had hoped that with the fire and conflict of war this people had been taught that there were human rights as broad as the human family, and that the glory of this nation was that it was an asylum for the oppressed of all lands. It is, however, for this day and this bill to evoke from the tomb of the past the spirit which animated those who looked into the face of man rather than into his heart for the standard by which he was to be measured and respected by the laws of the land.

We are told that all this comes from what seems to me to be the most alarming of all doctrines, that the people of the United States are to surrender their convictions to the demand of locality, and that when any particular locality shall determine what is to be the character and the standard by which men in this country are to be measured and their rights guaranteed, all other parts of the country by a general law are to surrender to their view. The logic of all this was seen very clearly by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] yesterday. He took care to take a pledge from the advocates of this bill as to the condition upon which he would support it. He saw clearly that if the people of California could determine for the Congress of the United States who should live among them and enjoy the rights guaranteed by the Constitution to them, the people of Mississippi could in their good time determine for the people of the United States what should be the political character and condition of those who live among them. There is no concealment in the Senator from Mississippi. He not only follows the logic of this bill to its conclusion, but he publicly avows it, so that they who support this bill do it with their eyes and their ears open, and know that they are supporting a principle which leads to the determination of the political rights of those who live in Mississippi, when Mississippi shall so decide.

I desire to put again upon the record what the Senator from Mississippi put there yesterday, and ask my friends here if they are prepared to accept his pledge and commit themselves by support of this bill to the doctrine the Senator from Mississippi announced yesterday.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not know that I clearly understand the doctrine imputed to me by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. If he desires to put on the record any position which I took yesterday upon this question, I will say that it would be fair to me and fair to those whom I represent, as my language was carefully guarded, to read what I said, and not to indulge in what the Senator is pleased to call logical deductions from my remarks.

If the gentleman means to impute to me the expression of an opinion or of a wish to assume for the people of Mississippi or for the people of any other State the power or right to determine for themselves the political status of any portion of the citizens of the United States, he imputes to me an opinion which I do not entertain and which I did not express.

I did not say yesterday that the people of the Pacific States had a right to determine this question for themselves. Dealing with foreigners, dealing with persons who had no rights in this country, except such as we, the people of this country, see proper to concede to them, I did say that upon that question, so far as it concerned the Chinese who were in their midst, their opinion as to the evils of Chinese immigration should have great weight in our deliberations; that I preferred the experience, the trial, which these people had had with the Chinese immigrants to the speculations of persons who knew nothing about it; and that is as far as I went on that subject. That is all I want to say.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Mississippi saw me about to read what he did say, and sprang to his feet to explain or expound his own language.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not see that you were about to read what I did say.

Mr. DAWES. Just before the Senator got on his feet I had told him that I desired to put him on record again. I do not intend to misrepresent the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think you do. I did not impute such an intention on your part.

Mr. DAWES. I do not. I admire the Senator's boldness. I knew that he wrote out his remarks with care, and I knew that he was not a Senator to shrink from the consequences of what he said. I proposed to request those who were asking me to vote for this bill to listen to what the Senator from Mississippi said were its logical consequences, and I shall now read what he said. The Senator, if he chooses, may look over me.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no doubt you will read it correctly, sir.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Mississippi said yesterday:

> And now, Mr. President, before I take my seat I wish to congratulate the Senators from the Pacific States on the skill—
>
> That is the first thing—
> and moderation—
>
> Which is very commendable—
> with which they have discussed the relations of the American people with this inferior race. For once, sir, this subject has been discussed in a calm and philosophical spirit without exciting sectional animosities or rekindling the passions engendered by past contests and dissensions. The time may come—it is not here now—when the relations of another race to American citizenship must be, as all other questions ought to be, discussed in the like spirit.

Just as these Senators have discussed the Chinese question:

> In the mean time, while discharging our duty freely in educating that race into a proper discharge of their duties as American citizens, advancing them to their full capacity, it will also be our duty to observe with care and impartiality the experiment of African citizenship. No man shall strive harder than I will to make the experiment successful, and no man will be more rejoiced if in the end it shall be all that those who initiated it shall desire. All that I ask for the white people of the South on this subject is what I am willing to grant and I believe a majority of this body is willing to grant to the white people of the Pacific States—

What I ask for the white people of Mississippi is what we are granting to the white people of the Pacific States—> that their testimony, their experience, and their judgment shall not be discredited in a matter so deeply affecting their welfare.

> The Constitution was ordained and established by white men, as they themselves declared in its preamble, "to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves (ourselves) and their (our) posterity," and I cannot doubt that this great pledge thus solemnly given will be as fully redeemed in favor of the white people of the South, should occasion for action arise, as I intend on my part and on their behalf to redeem it this day in favor of the white people of the Pacific States, by my vote to protect them against a degrading and destructive association with the inferior race now threatening to overrun them.

Sir, that is the logic of the bill. "The time may come." It is not safe to say it has come now, but "the time may come."

Mr. GEORGE. That is the wrong word, to say it is not safe. That seems to imply that I would say so if I had what the gentleman imputed to me a few moments ago—the courage to say it.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator understood me as intimating that he used that word——

Mr. GEORGE. You said "it was not safe to say it had come now."

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir; it is not safe.

Mr. GEORGE. I said the time had not come now, not from any considerations of safety or policy, but I simply announced an existing fact, that it had not come now.

Mr. DAWES. I quoted the Senator, not to intimate that the Senator would fail in his duty, as he indicates it there, to contribute all in his power to make African citizenship a success. I do not impute any such thing. I do not impute to the Senator any desire that African citizenship in his State shall fail. I do not intend to do the Senator any injustice, or to leave him dissatisfied with anything, save what he has himself said.

Mr. GEORGE. I am perfectly content to rest upon what I have said.

Mr. DAWES. Of what I know the Senator will not be dissatisfied. I mean to say that the Senator says "the time may come;" and I am willing to add, if the Senator desires it, that he hopes it never will come; but when, in the opinion of his people, it has come——

Mr. GEORGE. I think the gentleman imputes to me there an opinion not expressed. I did not say that the coming of the time was to be determined by the opinions of the people of Mississippi.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to know what the Senator did mean in what he said.

Mr. GEORGE. I meant exactly what I said.

Mr. DAWES. So I supposed.

Mr. GEORGE. I will read that part of my remarks:

> The time may come—
>
> Not "will"—
> it is not here now—when the relations of another race to American citizenship must be, as all other questions ought to be, discussed in the like spirit.

There is nothing there to suggest that I make the people of Mississippi or of the South the arbiters of the time.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him if he did not say when he uttered his speech "but it will come;" and whether that is not to that extent an erroneous report in the RECORD of what he actually uttered?

Mr. GEORGE. It is a verbatim report.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the question for my own satisfaction. Did not the Senator from Mississippi when he said the time has not arrived, utter the words, "but it will come?" I saw the manuscript, I will state to the Senator, which was in the possession of the Reporter. Perhaps I am stating from an entirely erroneous recollection, but I thought he said "but it will come."

Mr. GEORGE. I said "it may come."

Mr. HOAR. Very well, the Senator undoubtedly states it correctly.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, it is not worth while for the Senator from Mississippi and myself to undertake to argue between ourselves what is the true interpretation of the language which is put upon the record where the people of the United States can judge for themselves whether the interpretation which I put upon it is the correct one or not. According to my judgment, if that statement means anything, it means (and the people of these United States will put that interpretation upon it) that the Senator has announced here upon the floor that the doctrine of the pending bill, carried to its logical end, can be availed of by any community of people in the United States to invoke the general law of the land to eliminate from its social and political existence such element as it shall determine is unsafe. That is the interpretation I put upon the words; the words themselves I have put upon the record to justify it; and I leave this discussion here with that indorsement of it.

I call the attention of the American people to the fact that we have evoked from the dead past to apply to this people doctrines and provisions of law which the irresistible logic of events had trodden into oblivion amid the fire and smoke and conflict of war. We are indebted to this movement for an invitation to embark anew upon a vain and futile attempt to establish under the flag of the United States and the Constitution that shall govern us the right to distinguish between those who live here, who come here to obey our laws and abide by our destinies, and say to some, "You may remain," but to others, "You are outcasts, and shall choose between the penitentiary and banishment."

Sir, we have gone too far to take that retrograde step. However our friends may succeed for the moment, I tell them again that the debate is not exhausted. It will not die. It will live, an active, moving principle, stirring the liberty-loving and law-abiding people of this broad land to the very depths, till every human being who treads our soil and breathes our air can appeal to our laws and our Constitution for protection and for peace.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the substitute reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the amendment to the amendment be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In section 1, line 4, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

That from and after the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of ten years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended.

Mr. TELLER. I intend to vote for the amendment, not because I think twenty years is too long, but because I understand some Senators think if we make it ten they could quiet their consciences and vote for the bill. I believe the practical effect would be the same as to fix the time at twenty years, and if it will remove any objection to the bill, I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I shall vote in favor of this amendment because I think it brings the bill within the spirit of the treaty. I do not think that a suspension for twenty years is within the fair spirit of the treaty, which the bill recognizes and is intended to exercise the rights granted by. Of course, the right of the United States, like that of every other country that has been recognized from the foundation of civilization, to decide what persons shall come into it, cannot be doubted fairly. The only difficulty hitherto as to the Chinese question concerning legislation has been the circumstance of the Burlingame treaty, which bound us to receive people from that country under the circumstances named. The recent treaty relieves us from that obligation and enables us, without violation of any understanding with the Empire of China, to exercise that political will concerning immigration which every civilized country, everywhere on the face of the globe, from the earliest of times, (including as a civilized country China herself,) has always exercised.

There is no book of public law, there is no writer upon natural law, that does not affirm and has not always affirmed the right of every people in their political character to determine the conditions upon which and the circumstances under which immigrants from other countries are to be received; and it goes upon the principle which is perhaps, in this modern and highly too-utterly-utter kind of an idea, out of fashion, that every nation is a family, that it has the rights of a family, and that for its own protection and its own well-being it is entitled to determine who shall become members of its own family. If you go off into the broad modern civilization that free-traders, and free-thinkers, and free-lovers, and free-everybodies maintain, of course you must say that all mankind are of one kin, that they are of one nature, that they are of one destiny, that they are of one sympathy, and that they can be poured into one common receptacle everywhere, with mutual advantage to every one of the human beings who is thus brought into contact and amalgamation with other societies and human beings; but the misfortune about it is that the common sense, the common information, and the common observation of everybody has demonstrated that that is not true.

We defend the right of the colored man to be a man born in our country, to have equal rights not as a slave but as a citizen. We do not defend it, I think—I do not—upon the ground that it is necessary to the right of the colored man or the colored woman that he or she should amalgamate with the white man or the white woman, either by intermarriage or by any social relations that do not grow out of things entirely beyond law and behind law, with which law has nothing to do.

I doubt whether the people of Massachusetts, whom you, Mr. President, [Mr. DAWES in the chair,] and your colleague so honorably represent, would desire that immigration of the people of Africa to that great and noble old commonwealth should be encouraged. The people of Massachusetts (I speak of them ab extra, although as a Senator of the United States I have a right to speak of them if not for them) I do not think would be hungry for an irruption of a million of the inhabitants of the continent of Africa to-day, or to-morrow, or next year, not because the people of Massachusetts have any hostility to the African, not because they do not desire his development, his growth, his education, every amelioration that may belong to him, but because they believe by instinct or by education that it is not good for the two races to be brought into that kind of contact in that place.

Perhaps I overstate it. Perhaps my honorable friends from Massachusetts, speaking for that great Commonwealth, will say that after providing for the war-premium men, the one thing which the people of Massachusetts are hungering for is a very large African immigration. I do not think that can be so. Speaking in part for the people of Vermont, I am sure that it is not so as to them. It is not based, I repeat, on any hostility to the African; it is not based upon any want of good-will to the African; it is based upon the belief that nations and races, as they have been constituted by the God of nature and by political and geographical divisions and arrangements, get on better as separate families with their separate independence and their separate institutions than they do amalgamated together; unless their origin, their race, their tendency, their nature, is such that being put together they assimilate and become one perfect, homogeneous, and prosperous mass.

I think that is the ground upon which this bill stands. It is the opinion of those who have promoted this bill, and I share in it, that it is not useful either to the people of the United States or to the people of the Chinese Empire, that an enlarged and growing and increasing immigration from that country to this should take place. The race, the religion, the habits, the modes of thought, the developments of the two nations are entirely different; and when I say they are entirely different, I do not mean to say that the Chinese race, the Chinese religion, the Chinese development is not better than the Anglo-Saxon, nor do I mean to say that it is; I merely mean to say that that does not touch the question at all. I do not say that it is better or is worse for the purpose of this argument. I say that their developments in all these respects are not and cannot be congenial. There is no common ground of assimilation. If that be so, is it not within the competence of the United States, as it has been within the competence of the Chinese Empire itself and is to this day largely, to say, in every spirit of friendship and good-will, it is not wise at present that this immigration should further proceed until we have time to test what now, at the best, seems so very doubtful, whether the immigrants already here are capable of assimilating in political form, in social development, and social communion with the people of the United States, or, to state it the other way, (which is the same proposition,) whether we are capable of entering into such an assimilation as to make a homogeneous republic in the State of California, in the State of Oregon, and in the State of Nevada, and wherever else over this great Republic of ours these people may come; for I do not need to call the attention of Senators to that fundamental principle of domestic government, that in order to success, that just success which produces happiness to its people, no republic can succeed that has not a homogeneous population. That was what was for so long a time the curse of our Southern sister States. It was the want of homogeneity that they thought was mitigated and helped out by the fact that the different races occupied different positions, one dominant, the other servile. It did not accomplish it then, as they will all tell you now, Mr. President; and the one great evil there now is, not that the white man is better than the black man, or the black man better than or equal to the white man, but it is that there has not yet been time enough, if ever there may be, that in the real and best sense of a homogeneous order in a republic, these two peoples can assimilate and coalesce so as to make such a democratic State as I am speaking of.

All this, Mr. President, is fundamental in the long reaches of historic observation everywhere. My learned friends from Massachusetts may begin with Aristotle and come down to Webster, and they will find everywhere over that long reach of human experience that the fundamental idea of a prosperous republic must be the homogeneity of its people. Now, we are not homogeneous with the Chinaman; it does not very presently appear that we can be; and reducing this bill within the spirit of the treaty to say ten years, it is only saying not that we deny the equality of the Chinaman, not that we deny his high civilization, if he has it, but simply that we will suspend this experiment of attempted assimilation, with the elements that we already have of one hundred thousand or more in this country, until we see how it works. How should that shock humanity? How should that touch up the moral sense of any man who loves this Republic or who loves the empire of China? It is the simple co-ordinated arrangement of these two nations that they will not further proceed in what must be considered an experiment, until with the elements we have we are able to see whether it will work or not. Where is the ground of criticism upon such a proposition? I am not able to see.

The right of expatriation is one thing; the duty of a people to receive those who have expatriated themselves or wish to do so from another people, is quite another thing. They are two entirely distinct and different propositions both in morals and, in my humble judgment, with great respect to those who differ with me, upon principles of public law that have often, not everywhere, been recognized, because many nations hold that the right of expatriation is a merely conventional right. The people of my little State have always held from the beginning that the right of expatriation was one that its own constitution should and must recognize, but always with the provision that is declared in our bill of rights for more than one hundred years, that that right of expatriation was dependent upon the willingness of the people to whom the persons expatriating themselves desired to go to receive them. That is the point.

This immigration has promoted discontent, it has promoted, according to the just, I have no doubt, statements of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] who addressed the Senate two or three days ago, extreme cruelty and injury to the Chinese themselves; it has promoted political discord and discontent among our own fellow-citizens upon that coast, and why should we not, under such circumstances, exercising the just power of the nation conceded, revoking the former treaty by the Emperor of China, to suspend it for a little while? And if within that little while it turns out that the people of that country who are now with us are able to assimilate with our institutions and we with them, it will be easy then again to open the door and say "come in;" but if it should turn out that the nature of the two peoples, their ideas, their habits, their thoughts are incompatible to that firm concord and unity which must characterize a republic, I repeat then we have done no wrong either to them or to ourselves, but good to both.

That is the way it seems to me. And so, Mr. President, I shall vote to reduce this period, as I think it ought to be reduced within the spirit of this treaty, to ten years; but I wish to repeat that without this treaty and without the Burlingame treaty, if we were free from conventional obligations, I do affirm with all the emphasis of which I am capable that it belongs to every people to determine upon its own considerations of its own welfare what other people it will receive into its society.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I understood a little while ago that the honorable Senator from Connecticut was not in very strong health this afternoon, and I desire to ask him if he wishes to conclude his remarks to-night or prefers to go on to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. I will yield to any motion that the Senator desires to make. I understand that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] also desires to address the Senate on this subject, and whether we can conclude the bill this evening or not depends on how late we shall sit.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FARLEY. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion a moment.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. FARLEY. It is very important that this bill be acted on to-day. We have been engaged in its discussion for four or five days; and I notice that it has frequently been the case in the Senate that Senators have urged the passage of a bill and determined to pass it in one day. Now we have run along here four or five days over this bill, and it seems to me that from now until six o'clock we can finish up the bill. I suppose that most Senators have spoken who intend to speak upon the question. It is important that action should be had at once, if we can possibly have it on this bill to-day.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I concur with the honorable Senator from California that it is desirable to vote upon this question as soon as possible; and while there will be no Senator more opposed to the passage of the bill, the Senator may be assured that there will be no Senator who is more desirous than myself to have the question taken at an early day. I have no doubt we can finish the bill to-morrow; but I do not know whether the Senator heard what I said before—in the first place that several Senators desired to speak, and next that the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT,] who has the floor, was not in a condition of health which made it agreeable to him to speak this afternoon, and for that reason I interposed the motion.

Mr. FARLEY. If the Senator from Connecticut puts it upon that ground, that he is not able to proceed with his remarks this evening, as a matter of course I would not oppose an adjournment; but we all know the importance of early action on this bill. Those people are coming to the Pacific coast by every steamer by the hundred, and unless we can have early action the chances are that the benefits we expect to derive from this bill will to a very great extent be lost.

Mr. PLATT. I will hardly say that I am unable to speak this afternoon. I should probably speak with much greater ease and comfort to myself to-morrow morning; but if the Senate desire that I should proceed at this time, I will endeavor to say what I propose to say, though it will be in somewhat a disconnected and desultory manner.

Mr. HOAR. If it is agreeable to the Senator from California, I will myself very cheerfully unite in a unanimous consent to take the vote at a time fixed to-morrow, which will enable the Senator from Connecticut to proceed in the morning as he prefers—say four o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. FARLEY. With that suggestion by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, if that agreement can be made so that it will be binding on the Senate, I shall consent. I know that Senators cannot be bound by such agreements as a rule, but we have often made such arrangements that have been carried out; and if it will be understood that we will to-morrow, by four or five o'clock, come to a final vote on this bill. As a matter of course I suppose my colleague and myself, taking into consideration the condition of the Senator from Connecticut who desires to speak, will both agree to that arrangement.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am not prepared to say that I will consent to that agreement. I do not think that these agreements are very profitable. I think that a question of this kind should be open to discussion as long as it may fairly and reasonably be discussed. I understand there are other Senators who desire to discuss this question, and I do not wish for one to cut off any Senator from expressing his views upon such a subject. I may not desire to address the Senate myself; I think I shall not; but there are others who do. I think this bill should take the usual course of ordinary questions, and when the discussion is fairly exhausted then have the vote taken.

Mr. FARLEY. While my colleague has the charge of this bill, having reported it from the committee, if he fails to give notice I will give the notice now after the suggestion made by some Senators on the other side of the Chamber who are opposed to the bill, we will to-morrow continue the session until final action is taken on the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What was the notice?

Mr. FARLEY. Senators can take notice of it and govern themselves accordingly. It has been uniformly the rule that such arrangements have been made. I remember on a bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] it was finally agreed that we would sit it out and have action on that bill upon a certain day; so also of a bill of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I found no Senators here opposing these arrangements. This bill has been thoroughly discussed. To-morrow those of us who favor the bill will endeavor to have final action. I give that notice.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I would prefer to sit it out to-night.

Mr. FARLEY. So would I.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the majority of the Senate is in favor of sitting out the bill, of course it can be done. It is not likely to be done otherwise.

Mr. HOAR. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 7, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I ask that by unanimous consent the Clerk in reading the Journal of yesterday omit so much of it as relates to the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference.

There was no objection.

The Journal of yesterday was then read and approved.

INSPECTION OF HULLS AND BOILERS OF STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. NEAL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3831) to create a district for the inspection of hulls and boilers for steam-vessels be taken from the House Calendar; and that it be put upon its passage. Let the bill be read for information. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the bill be read, the right of objection being reserved.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the inspection of hulls and boilers of steam-vessels, there is hereby created a local board of inspectors to be located at Gallipolis, Ohio, in which there shall be one inspector of hulls and one inspector of boilers, one of whom shall be transferred from the office of the local board of inspectors at Cincinnati, Ohio, and one from the office of the local board of inspectors at Wheeling, West Virginia, each of whom shall receive per annum the same compensation he may be receiving at the time of the passage of this act; and thereafter in case of a vacancy in the office of inspector of hulls or in the office of inspector of boilers such vacancy shall be filled in the manner provided in section 4415 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WARD. I desire to ask if it has been reported from any committee?

Mr. NEAL. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARD. Of the House committee?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir; of the House committee. It will cost nothing. It simply proposes that two of the steamboat inspectors on the Ohio River shall be stationed at the mouth of the Kanawha, one coming from the Wheeling district and one from the Cincinnati district. It is approved by all the boatmen of that district.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it recommended by the Department?

Mr. NEAL. It is recommended by General Dumont, supervising inspector-general of steamboats.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that any official communication on the subject be read before the objection is waived.

Mr. NEAL. The report which shows the recommendation of the Department may be read.

Mr. KENNA. There is no doubt about the very urgent demand for this measure.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the report requested?

Mr. HAWK. I request the reading of the report.

Mr. ALDRICH. The right to object being reserved after the report shall have been read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3831) to create a district for the inspection of hulls and boilers of steam-vessels, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

The committee find, on examination of the bill, and from an answer to a letter addressed by Hon. HENRY S. NEAL to James A. Dumont, supervising inspector-general of steamboats, that it is not necessary in the new district to employ additional inspectors, as one can be detailed from the Cincinnati district, and one from the Wheeling district. They therefore recommend that the bill be amended in the following particulars, and as amended it does not create any new offices nor incur any additional expense to the Government:

Amend by striking out, in line 4, all after the word "created" to the word "in," after the word "Gallipolis," in line 8, and inserting the following:

"A local board of inspectors, to be located at Gallipolis, Ohio."

Amend further by striking out all after the word "boilers," in line 10, and inserting the following:

"One of whom shall be transferred from the office of the local board of inspectors at Cincinnati, Ohio, and one from the office of the local board of inspectors at Wheeling, West Virginia, each of whom shall receive per annum the same compensation he may receive at the passage of this act, and thereafter, in case of a vacancy in the office of inspector of hulls, or in the office of inspector of boilers, such vacancy shall be filled in the manner provided in section 4415, Revised Statutes."

As thus amended, your committee are of the opinion that the enactment of this law will be for the benefit of the service, and from petitions received, numerously signed by steamboat men and others engaged in the river trade, they are satisfied that the creation of this new district is necessary for the convenience of the steamboat men.

They therefore recommend that the bill as amended be passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would like to inquire if the bill has been amended as suggested in the report?

Mr. NEAL. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] that the bill as read by the Clerk is exactly in the form recommended by the committee, and is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. HAWK. Does the bill as read embrace the amendments as recommended in the report of the committee?

Mr. NEAL. It does.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the House Calendar, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to give notice to the House that I shall offer a substitute for the bill in relation to the Agricultural Department, which is a special order for a future day; and for the information of the House I ask that the proposed substitute may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

Substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 4429) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That there shall be at the seat of Government an Executive Department to be known as the department of industries, and a secretary of industries, who shall be the head thereof.

SEC. 2. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of agriculture and, to superintend said division, a commissioner of agriculture, who shall be a practical agriculturist, and who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of collecting and disseminating all important and useful information concerning agriculture, and also concerning such scientific matters and industrial pursuits as relate to the interests of agriculture, the secretary of industries shall organize the following bureaus in the division of agriculture, namely:

First. The bureau of agricultural products, which shall include divisions of botany, entomology, and chemistry, and the chief of which bureau, who shall be a practical agriculturist, shall investigate the modes of farming in the several States and Territories, and shall report such practical information as shall tend to increase the profits of the farmer respecting the various methods; the crops most profitable in the several sections; the preferable varieties of seeds, vines, plants, and fruits; fertilizers; implements; buildings; and similar matters.

Second. The bureau of animal industry, to be in charge of a competent veterinary surgeon, who shall investigate and report upon the number, value, and condition of the domestic animals of the United States; their protection, growth, and uses; the causes, prevention, or cure of contagious, communicable, or other diseases; and the kinds, races, or breeds best adapted to the several sections for profitable raising.

Third. The bureau of lands, the chief of which shall investigate and report upon the resources or capabilities of the public or other lands for farming, stock-raising, timber, manufacturing, mining, or other industrial uses. And all powers and duties vested in the commission now known as the Geological Survey, together with all clerks, employés, and agents, and all instruments, records, books, papers, &c., are hereby transferred to the department of industries, and the secretary may, through said bureau, in connection with the Bureau of Statistics, institute such investigations and collect such information, facts, and statistics relative to the mines and mining of the United States, and facilities for their ventilation and general operation, as may be deemed of value and importance.

SEC. 4. In addition to the duties imposed by chapter 10, title 7 of the Revised Statutes the Bureau of Statistics shall collect and report the agricultural statistics of the United States; and, in addition, all important information or statistics relating to industrial education and agricultural colleges; to labor and demands and prices therefor in this and other countries; to markets and prices; to modes and cost of transporting agricultural products and live stock to their final market; to the demand, supply, and prices in foreign markets; to the location, number, and products of manufacturing establishments of whatever sort, their sources of raw material, methods, markets, cost of transportation, and prices; to such commercial or other conditions as may affect the market value of farm products or the interests of the industrial classes of the United States. And the secretary is hereby authorized to establish such divisions in this bureau, and to make such monthly or other reports, as he shall deem most effective for the prompt dissemination of such reliable information respecting crops and domestic and foreign markets as will be of service to the farmers, miners, mechanics, laborers, or other industrialists of the United States.

SEC. 5. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of commerce, and to superintend said division a commissioner of commerce, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 6. That all divisions and subdivisions, bureaus, or parts thereof heretofore attaching to the Treasury Department by virtue of the provisions of chapter 10 of title 7 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the Bureau of Statistics; title 48, relating to commerce and navigation; title 49, relating to the regulation of vessels in foreign commerce; title 50, relating to the regulation of vessels in domestic commerce; title 52, relating to the regulation of steam-vessels; title 56, relating to the Coast Survey, or by virtue of any law amendatory of said several provisions or regulations in pursuance thereof, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be parts of the division of commerce in the department of industries.

SEC. 7. That all duties devolving upon the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of the several provisions mentioned in the preceding section shall from and after the passage of this act be performed by the secretary of industries; the authority conferred and the duties imposed by said several provisions upon the Register of the Treasury shall, from and after the passage of this act, be exercised and discharged by the commissioner of commerce. All bonds authorized by any of the provisions aforesaid to be made payable to the Register of the Treasury shall, from and after the passage of this act, be made payable to the commissioner of commerce.

SEC. 8. That section 158, title 4 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to add at the end thereof the words, "eighth, the department of industries."

SEC. 9. That this act shall not be construed to interfere with the present organization of the various departments, divisions, subdivisions, and bureaus embraced herein, except with reference to the transfer thereof to the department of industries, subject to the general provisions of law relating to regulations in the various Departments of the Government and appointments to office therein.

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

BATTLE OF GETTYSBURGH.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution H R. No. 132, and that it be passed at this time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the Department of Pennsylvania on the battlefield of Gettysburgh in July, 1882.

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient fort or arsenal, to be used at the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the Department of Pennsylvania upon the battle-field of Gettysburgh in the month of July, 1882, such cannon, tents, muskets, &c., as can be conveniently spared; said cannon, tents, muskets, &c., to be returned after the holding of said encampment in as like good condition as when received: Provided, That all transportation of said articles to and from the place of encampment to the fort or arsenal shall be without expense to the Government: Provided further, That the adjutant-general of the State of Pennsylvania or other proper accounting officer shall receipt for said arms, ammunition, and camp equipage in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State against its quota.

There being no objection, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and the same was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STATUE OF CHIEF-JUSTICE JOHN MARSHALL.

Mr. GEDDES. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 578, to authorize the erection of a statue to the memory of Chief-Justice John Marshall, be taken from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time. I believe the bill received the unanimous approval of the Senate, and I think all who are acquainted with the history of Chief-Justice Marshall will have no objection to the passage of the bill at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives do appoint a joint committee of three Senators and three Representatives, with authority to contract for and erect a statue to the memory of Chief-Justice John Marshall, formerly of the Supreme Court of the United States; that said statue shall be placed in a suitable public reservation, to be designated by said joint committee, in the city of Washington; and for said purpose the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to say with regard to that bill that while everybody will assent to the purpose contemplated by it I have knowledge of certain facts which may have some influence upon the action of members.

Thirty years ago the bar of the city of Philadelphia started a subscription to raise money to erect a statue to John Marshall at some place in the city of Washington. That subscription was entered into, at the suggestion of the bar of the city of Philadelphia, by members of the bar of almost all the States. The money so obtained, in the hands of careful and zealous trustees, although not much at first, now amounts to $20,000.

Within the last month the representatives of that fund, appointed by the court at Philadelphia on the application of the Bar Association, have written to the Attorney-General of the United States asking him to bring before Congress a proposition from them, stating that they had the money ready and were prepared to erect a statue to the memory of the great judge whenever Congress would assign a place in Washington for it. Those papers are now in the hands of the Attorney-General, and he has communicated with certain members of Congress upon the subject, informing them that the money is ready and waiting only for such order as Congress may take on the application of the highest law officer of the Government.

Now, I think it would be well that we act in this matter in such manner as would not only testify the appreciation of our country and of our people of the glorious memory of that greatest of our judges, but at the same time would show that we appreciate the liberality of those gentlemen who, thirty years ago, started the subscription for this great object and with great care and solicitude have nursed it until it is now large enough to carry it out as originally contemplated.

I would have preferred to have had the opportunity to make this statement to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] and to his committee before he submitted his proposition. I make it now in order, if possible, to induce him to let this bill lie over until we can come to a full understanding and perfect a bill to accomplish both objects, to which there certainly will be no objection from any one.

Mr. GEDDES. I feel greatly indebted to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] for placing before the House the facts stated by him. I was myself personally informed of them, and they were submitted to our committee. But I did not feel at liberty, nor did I think it advisable, to make a statement of them here in connection with this application for an appropriation to erect a statue to the memory of Chief-Justice Marshall.

The proposition to which the gentleman refers has not been put in definite form. The money may and doubtless will be turned over for this purpose, but if in consequence of some accident or other intervening cause we should not be able to obtain it, then in that event I do not want this action to be dependent entirely upon the liberality of the citizens who gave that fund. I am satisfied, however, that the fund has been carefully kept for this purpose and that it will be honestly applied. No injustice can be done to the Government and no wrong to any one by passing the bill in the form in which it comes to us from the Senate, because it allows a discretion to the committee that is to be appointed to take charge of this matter. I hope, therefore, there will be no delay in the passage of this bill, while I desire all credit may be given to the parties who raised and have so carefully preserved the fund for this commendable purpose. Their liberality is recognized, and full credit will be awarded them for what they have done in this work of commemorating the victories of peace. For no more striking illustration can be found in our history of what has been done for constitutional government than is presented in the life of John Marshall, Chief-Justice of the United States. From his exalted position at the head of the judiciary department of the Government he inspired universal admiration for his great qualities of head and heart, his giant intellect, and incorruptible integrity.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the sum of $20,000 has been raised by private individuals, I see no reason why Congress should not avail itself of their liberality and accept this fund, providing the machinery for carrying the object into execution. With the view to this, and desiring the accomplishment of the purpose contemplated, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Library, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. GEDDES. I hope the bill will not be committed. If the gentleman will look carefully at the measure as it comes from the Senate, he will see that a reference is not necessary to accomplish the object. The bill provides only for the appropriation of so much money as may be necessary to accomplish this object. The Joint Committee on the Library, as well as the Senate, had in view, and we may take into consideration, the fact that this money referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey, carefully husbanded for this purpose, will be applied to this end. The committee to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House will be vested with a discretion in the matter, and will undoubtedly carefully see to the application of the fund, and will only apply so much of the appropriation as may be necessary for the accomplishment of the object.

It does seem to me that it is due to the memory of this Chief-Justice, who served the country for a third of a century and who has left on record constitutional opinions which will be valued as safeguards of the Government for generations, that there should be no delay, no hesitancy, no commitment of the bill, but that it should be passed at once by the House unanimously.

Mr. SPRINGER. That would undoubtedly be done were it not for the fact that a fund sufficient for this purpose has already been subscribed by private individuals, and is tendered to Congress. Let us accept that fund. Let us recognize the munificence of these private individuals; and let us not unnecessarily put our hands into the public Treasury for the accomplishment of this object.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER to refer the bill to the Committee on the Library with leave to report at any time, there were—ayes 44, noes 64.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not agreed to. The question is now on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for tellers. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the call for tellers comes rather late.

Mr. SPRINGER. I called for tellers as soon as I heard the announcement of the result.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist upon the call for tellers?

Mr. SPRINGER. I only want the House to understand the question.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEDDES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4440) to establish a railway bridge across the Mississippi River, extending from a point between Wabasha and Read's Landing, in Minnesota, to a point below the mouth of the Chippewa River, in Wisconsin, and that the same be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce. The recommitment is desired in order that the bill may be amended.

There being no objection, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

SUFFERERS BY MISSISSIPPI FLOODS.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to consider and report what, if any, are the measures of relief that should be extended to the sufferers by the present floods of the Mississippi River and tributaries, and to report by bill or otherwise as speedily as possible.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk for present consideration Senate bill No. 1004.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not the bill at hand.

JAMES F. ROSE.

Mr. McCOOK. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 2127, and that it be put on its passage. It is a bill granting a pension to a man who served as a soldier and is now totally blind.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2127) granting a pension to James F. Rose.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James F. Rose, late a private in Company E, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Where does this bill come from?

Mr. McCOOK. From the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I am sure the gentleman will not object when I state that a bill of similar purport was reported favorably in the Forty-sixth Congress; that this bill has been reported favorably, and is now upon the Calendar; that this soldier, who is a resident of New York City, is totally blind and has a wife and two or three children.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will not object in this case, but will "go it blind." I give notice, however, that I will keep my eyes open hereafter, and that no private bills shall pass unless they are taken up in regular order. If we have a Calendar, we might as well adhere to it.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCOOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CELEBRATION OF DISCOVERY OF MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to make a report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom were referred the following preamble and resolution, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report the same to the House, with amendments, and recommend their adoption, as amended, namely:

Whereas the chambers of commerce, cotton and produce exchanges, and other commercial associations, the historical and literary and scientific societies and municipal governments in the Valley of the Mississippi have invited the Congress of the United States to be represented at the celebration to be held by them in the city of New Orleans on April 9, 1882, of the two hundredth anniversary of the first voyage down the Mississippi River to the sea and the discovery of its mouth by Robert Cavelier de la Salle:

Now, therefore, in order to commemorate an event so memorable alike in the history of our country and of civilization, and to testify on behalf of the people of the whole Union their appreciation of the services of Robert Cavelier de la Salle, and their respect for his memory,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a committee of fourteen members, five from the Senate and nine from the House of Representatives, shall be appointed by the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, to attend the said celebration on April 9, 1882, in the city of New Orleans.

Mr. ROBESON. The Committee on Rules were not fully satisfied of their jurisdiction over this matter, but as it was referred to them by the House they have agreed to report it favorably, because they think it their duty to submit for the action of the Congress anything which may tend to remind us that we have a common country, with common interests, associations, progress, and destiny.

I yield for fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would not intrude upon the attention of the House but for the request of the gentlemen in charge of this subject. I hope we have not yet been so far immersed in appropriations and such mercenary matters that we cannot respond to this invitation. It is not necessary that the committee should visit New Orleans if our legislative convenience should forbid. It is enough to respond courteously to the invitation.

Mr. Speaker, happy is that country which has no annals. This has been said of lands like our own. We have few annals. But such as we have should be cherished. There is no history so wonderful in all our annals of marvels as the discovery, exploration, and settlement of Louisiana. Its area was an empire. It was worthy of the Grand Monarch who gave it name and prestige. It is worthy of our imperial Republic. On the east it had the Rio Perdito; on the west, the Rio del Norte; and in its extent it had no boundary but the Pacific Ocean. It covered Oregon, not alone because contiguous, for its very title was that of contiguity as well as of discovery. While our mother country was in the throes of contests about prerogative and privilege, as early as 1663, the good Father Marquette and his companion had discovered our Father of Waters—the great river Colbert, as it was then called. He explored it as far as where its child, the Arkansas, paid it filial tribute. But the discovery seemed to end by his peaceful death amid the Algonquins on the banks of a stream which now bears his name and sings his requiem.

It was reserved for La Salle to complete this wondrous discovery. While our States in the North and in the East were being settled by the sturdy emigrants from England, this hero was in the depths of our Lake wilderness, forming plans of continental proportions. Under the patronage of the great Louis he had discovered the magnitude of our inland seas. Returning to France he enlisted men of influence, like Monseigneur Colbert, in his plans—among these plans a chain of forts to connect Canada with our new teeming West.

Ten years before the abdication of James II in England the great Louis issued a patent to the Cavelier de La Salle. It authorized him to find the western boundary of New France and a road to the riches of Mexico.

It was in the winter of 1682 that La Salle set out to find the mouths of the Mississippi. He began on the 7th of April, and in two months he had traversed from the land of snows to the land where the orange blooms in the air of midwinter—from the pine forests of the North to the magnolia and live-oak of the South; in two brief months he had given to France what his companion, Father Hennepin, called the delight and terrestrial paradise of America, an empire which now feeds the world—an empire powerful and fruitful. In that winter of 1682 he was at the extremity of Lake Michigan. He entered the Chicago River. He followed the old line of Father Marquette, and, reaching the Mississippi, began its descent. He gave up the idea of sailing down in a ship. On the 6th of February he began his expedition in three canoes. He had companions; invariably a Catholic father as chaplain. He had Indians as guides and hunters. Passing the muddy Missouri, which held future empire in solution; passing deserted villages of the red men; then the Ohio; moving amid warcries of Indian enemies, he reached the limit of Joliet's voyage! Here he planted the cross of our religion. Along with it fluttered in the breeze the lilies of France. On the 17th he passed other Arkansas towns. Next came the Natchez. Again the cross of Christ was lifted! Sixty-two days from the Illinois to the Gulf! Then amid hymns, Te Deums, and salvos, he took possession of this vast domain!

After many vicissitudes he discovers three of the channels of the great river. Nine miles from its mouth, upon "a dry place," a column and a cross were erected. On it was an inscription of honor to the Great King. Te Deum, the Exaudiat, and Dominire salvum fac Regum were chanted. Arms were fired in salutation. In the name of the mighty and invincible prince, Louis the Great, the land was taken. Shouts of "Vive le Roi!" echoed the salutation.

It should not be forgotten that there was something more than empire intended by this exploration. The Catholic faith was first, safe ports for French vessels on the Gulf were next, and peace and trade with the Indians and a way to the rich mines of Mexico were last. This triple motive made this enterprise grand and successful.

After La Salle's return to France he had full powers accorded to him; and with a ship and two hundred and eighty emigrants he sailed again for the Mississippi. After much difficulty he returned to Louisiana, and at the point now known as Matagorda, Texas, he built a fort. He was aloof from all Spanish settlements. No French settlement was nearer than Illinois. In 1667 he set out for Canada, leaving a colony at Fort Saint Louis. On the 20th of March he was assassinated. His accompanying priest describes him as a wise conductor, constant in adversity, intrepid, generous, skillful, and capable of every endeavor. Equal commendation is bestowed upon him by Sparks, our own historian, who places him in a prominent niche "among those who adorn the history of civilization in the New World."

He is the pioneer of our great valley, which he traced from source to mouth.

We cannot be insensible to the appeal made to us from the city of New Orleans and this valley of the Mississippi, of which it is the entrepôt. A discoverer and colonist in the ancient days received apotheosis. Hercules is fabled to have made the historic realm of the Mediterranean instinct with the brawn and brain of colonization.

Do we appreciate the glory of this grand enterprise which we inherit from the courage of La Salle? If we do not our ancestors did, in the acquisition of this domain from France. Compare this valley as it was two hundred years ago with what it is to-day! Its sources almost shake hands with Lake Superior in the North, and at the South our sugar and cotton help to swell the product of the corn and wheat of the North.

Arkansas, with her eight hundred thousand; Illinois, with her three million; Iowa, over a million and a half, and Kentucky more than her equal; Louisiana, with nearly a million; Minnesota so increasing as to have reached near a million since our census; Mississippi, with a million and a third, and cotton lands enough to clothe the world; Missouri, an empire in embryo, having over two million, where two hundred years ago a little fort left by La Salle was the only sign of white civilization; Tennessee, with a million and a half, and Wisconsin, rivaling Tennessee in numbers—nearly fourteen millions of people living in States washed by this superb river. And what could be said for the States whose streams swell the same great current! There are thirty-five millions who live upon this stream and its confluents. Spenser has sung of the rivers of Britain in their union with the sea. The classics are musical with Scamander and Cephissus—little brooklets which genius has enlarged and which time has dried up. What muse can ever fitly sing the grandeur of our Mississippi?

Mr. Speaker, its material grandeur we know. It is a part of our daily discussions here. But we forget what the historic muse says in a very pronounced voice, that its early colonial polity intended this grand valley as the home of a confederation of free cantons, upon the Swiss models. Our fathers were not ready to recognize this immense land as a dependency of Havana, with Moro castle as their doom. They were ready to seize it from Spain, when France reacquired it. During the discussion of secession in this House I remarked upon the Mississippi as an irrefragable bond of union, and that every drop of its waters was instinct with the idea of indestructible patriotism. When General Cass read my remarks he called to see me, and presented me with a paper, not published, describing the efforts of our people upon the Monongahela, Allegheny, and Ohio, who, believing the value of their domain involved the holding of the mouth of the Mississippi, were ready and equipped to move down the river to Fort Deposit and seize this point from Spain. When many of the boats were ready at Marietta, news came that Spain had transferred it to France; and then the hopes of annexation arose, and then we began to negotiate. We succeeded.

It was intended to be the home of liberty and independence. It has none of the glamour of the Puritans of New England, the Dutch of New York, or Cavaliers of Virginia; but if it be rich as it is in the glitter and glory of martial expedition, it is also opulent in the more enduring riches of popular aspiration. What Virgil said of ancient Latium is still more apposite applied to the valley of the Mississippi: Potens armis atque uberæ glebæ.

Now, in this year 1882, with our millions of people and wealth upon this splendid realm, and a limitless resource for a nation of a hundred millions before three more decades shall expire, we, as the representatives of this proud nation, are invited to celebrate the glory and deeds of these discoveries. So long as this river rolls to the Gulf, and the Gulf with its warmth even tempers the boreal realms of Europe, so long will the example of these States in this river of rivers be potential, and the name of its discoverer, Robert Cavelier de la Salle, be held aloft among the heroes of our kind. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBESON. I yield now three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WASHBURN. Representing as I do a district in which the Mississippi finds its source, it is appropriate that I should say a word in favor of the resolution, and especially as I hold in my hand a memorial from the Historical Society of my State, asking that Congress shall identify itself with this anniversary, which is to occur in New Orleans on the 9th of April, in commemoration of one of the greatest events which ever happened on this continent—that is, the discovery of the mouth of the Mississippi by La Salle. We have celebrated in the last two or three years the two hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the Falls of Saint Anthony by Father Hennepin. We have celebrated, too, recently the discovery of the Straits of Mackinaw by the great explorer Marquette, and we are now called upon to celebrate the discovery of the mouth of the Mississippi by one of the greatest of all explorers and one of the greatest men who is entitled to the consideration of this age, La Salle. It seems to me, sir, eminently fit and proper that we as a Congress of the nation, and representing the people of this country, shall identify ourselves with an event of this magnitude and importance.

My attention is called in this memorial to the fact that fifteen States of this Union are washed by the waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries. I think twenty three millions of our people reside in States the borders of which are washed by its waters. Taking all of this into consideration, I repeat that it seems eminently proper and eminently appropriate that the Government of the country shall identify itself with this great event.

Mr. ROBESON. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. LORD.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask if this is a privileged report from the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. It is now too late to make objection to its consideration, the Chair thinks, even if it were not a privileged report.

Mr. BLOUNT. My object in asking the question is not to obstruct the consideration of this report, because I apprehend from what has already taken place that there is a manifest desire to dispose of it now by the House; but I make the inquiry simply in order that we may understand whether this committee is privileged to report upon any subject at any time; and whether its powers have been enlarged so as to enable it to bring in any subject-matter that it may choose to bring before the House for its consideration at any time.

The SPEAKER. The committee have been instructed by a resolution of the House to report at any time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Upon any matters?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say in response to the gentleman from Georgia that he has not been called upon to investigate in detail the matter to which he refers, and feels like declining to answer what seems to be in the nature of a mere abstract question. We are now in the consideration of this report, and no matter how the Chair might hold the Chair thinks it is too late to prevent the House from proceeding with its consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. I only want to get at the extent of the right conferred upon this committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LORD] has the floor.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, representing in part, as I do, a State on the shore of whose inland seas Pére Marquette lies buried, recognizing his revered name as one among the most enterprising of the early discoverers of the great lakes and rivers of the continent, I call to mind the circumstances of his death in the midst of one of his wonderful voyages, and the long line of his devoted Indians in five hundred bark canoes, that with pine boughs for sails bore his body to its final rest, just where Lakes Huron and Michigan meet for everlasting requiem over his grave; and calling to mind his labors, as they stand recorded in history, forever associated with the discovery of the Mississippi, I yield to the propriety of this proposed celebration at New Orleans. It is proposed two centuries after the impressive burial to which I have referred, and two thousand miles away, the intervening country meantime becoming thickly populated and marvelously fruitful. This long intervening way was traversed with weary labor in the midst of great perils by those early explorers of the great lakes and the Mississippi, and with prophetic eye they beheld in the future the immense civilization that now proposes to do them honor and recall their names and services with pious and patriotic observance.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.]

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether at any time it will be proper for any member opposed to this measure to say one single word, or to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it does not control the time of the consideration of this resolution, and therefore it is not a parliamentary inquiry. But the Chair will state for the information of the gentleman that if there is an opportunity for him to be recognized an amendment may be in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have an amendment which I wish to offer some time when in order, and I will offer it now if it be in order.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman will have an opportunity to offer it. I have now yielded for five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.]

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be pardoned if I say a single word that will grate harshly on any ear, but I submit it to the sober second judgment of this House if the proceedings this morning and the subject-matter of this resolution are not a travesty on our system of legislation? Here we stand with our Calendars clogged with the public business, declaring in the presence of the country it is impossible for us to listen to the demands of our constituents for lack of time, with a bill from the Ways and Means Committee pending this morning, and a subject of special order; and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this injection, however beautiful it may be, of a mere mass of poetry into such a volume of plain prose as the House of Representatives ought to be, is out of place and out of order. I submit there are people enough in the United States to celebrate all the grand events which have passed into our history without delegating men from this House to attend upon junketing expeditions anywhere and under any circumstances. I submit it is wiser and cheaper and better for this House to gather up those magnificent tributes that have been uttered by the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and other members on this floor and carefully and elaborately engross them and keep our membership here at our work.

I do not say this to antagonize the kindly spirit of the members from Louisiana who present this proposition, but I submit that the Senate of the United States has already acted adversely upon this proposition, and acted most wisely, and the thing for us to do now is to follow in their footsteps, vote down the proposition, and attend to the legitimate business we are sent here to do.

Mr. ROBESON. How long does the gentleman from Ohio want?

Mr. TAYLOR. Just long enough to have this amendment passed to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submits the following amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. And while it is going up I wish to say I am opposed to taking away from this Congress any members for the purpose indicated in the resolution during the time it is necessary to transact the public business.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman gives notice of that amendment to be voted on.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "April 9, 1882," insert the following: "Provided, That Congress has by that time finally adjourned for this session."

Mr. ROBESON. I now yield for fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON.]

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, the Spaniards discovered the Mississippi River. In 1528, a century before the French reached its upper tributaries, or the English landed at Jamestown, Cabega de Vaca passed near the mouth of the great river, but his vessel was tossed away by the strong current aided by a wind from the east, yet he and his companions first tasted and remembered "its sweet waters." Another gallant Spaniard, Fernando de Soto, who had been the companion of Pizarro in the conquest of Peru, with a band of faithful followers, courtiers and artisans, priests and soldiers, like Cortez, bidding adieu to his ships, penetrated the southern forests, and, after three years of adventurous wanderings, full of hard struggles and bitter disappointments, in the spring of the year 1541 first planted the banners of Spain and of the Christian church upon the banks of the Mississippi River, beneath whose turbid waves he found a grave for himself, his ambitions, and his hopes.

More than a century after this—a century and a half—in 1673, the meek and illustrious Father Marquette, the brave chief Joliet, and Father Hennepin entered the Valley of the Mississippi. The latter explored it northward nearly to its headwaters and the former navigated it with fearless intrepidity as far south as the Arkansas.

But brilliant as these exploits were they have not obscured the luster that surrounds the name of La Salle, for it was his happy fortune to excel all his predecessors in the boldness and the extent of his wonderful and successful discoveries. Baffled by no disappointments, surmounting all obstacles by his own indomitable will, and supplying all deficiencies from the resources of his own matchless genius, the equal of Cæsar in fixedness of purpose, and not inferior to Columbus in self-reliance, without supplies or equipments, attended by a band of compatriots few in numbers but equally ardent in the bold and hazardous enterprise, these heroic Frenchmen, coming into the valley by way of the northern lakes, embarked upon the great river, not knowing whither they might be borne by its majestic and ceaseless current, until at length, having mastered the perils of hostile tribes and the still greater perils of the treacherous and relentless floods, on the 6th day of April, 1682, they were greeted by the sight of the dancing white caps, and they heard the soft murmurs of the southern sea.

With loyal and pious hearts at the head of the passes near the mouth of the river, in acknowledgment of their successful discovery on the 9th April, 1682, they erected a cross and a column, on which were affixed the arms of France, around which they chanted a hymn that from the seventh century was heard in lonely cloisters, in stately cathedrals, and in every land and on every sea from the lips of the zealous and holy missionaries of the Christain church sent forth to the remotest ends of the earth, inspiring the children of the Christian faith with kindling fervor and the sacrifice of self in the work of the Divine Master.

Vexilla Regis prodeunt,
Fulgit crucis mysterium.
The banners of Heaven's King advance,
The mystery of the Cross shine forth.

La Salle afterward returned to France to fit out an expedition to enter the Mississippi River by way of the Gulf of Mexico, but by mistake entered Matagorda Bay in Texas and took possession of the country in the name of his king, and thus Texas became properly a part of that vast empire that under the name of Louisiana in a later age was added to the dominions of the Republic. Born in Rouen, France, it was his destiny to have his life terminated, stricken down by conspirators among his own followers, in the prime of manhood, at the age of forty-three, in the midst of his greatest achievements on the banks of the Trinity, while on his way from Texas to Canada, still in search of "the fatal river."

It is proposed on the 9th of April to commemorate the two hundredth anniversary of his achievements, to celebrate the memory of La Salle, the discoverer of the Ohio and the Mississippi, whose genius consecrated to king and church, and opened the way for settlement and civilization, a territory that to-day embraces two-thirds of our Republic and over twenty-five millions of our population. What spot more appropriate for such a celebration than the head of the passes near the mouth of the river where he and his compatriots first raised the emblems of their faith and country, and left the memorials of their successful achievements? There the celebration will be held. There will be re-enacted the scene performed by the great Frenchman and his followers. But how changed the conditions, the circumstances and the times! It will be a celebration by the millions who inhabit the great valley, heirs of his labors, citizens of free and enlightened commonwealths, coequal parts of a mighty confederacy, born one hundred years after his discoveries, but already one of the foremost nations of the earth in the magnitude of her dominions, in wealth, power, and population; in the arts and sciences and letters; in manners and morals; in all the resources of civilization; in the stability and freedom of her institutions, and in the intelligence, the genius and the affections of her citizens.

Orators fitly chosen will recite the virtues of the great Pioneer—how he was fashioned on the model of Homer's heroes, of Achillean temper.

Impiger, iracundus, inexorabilis, acer.

How he breasted famine, disease, and disappointment, the fury of man and of the elements, the southern heat and the rigors of the frozen north; how with an enthusiasm surpassing that which beat beneath the impenetrable mail of Richard the Lion-hearted, he ever pressed onward over ocean, lake, and river, among cruel and savage foes in the trackless wilderness to discover the great west, and to endow America with the richest jewels in her diadem. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBESON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HUMPHREY.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I simply desire to say that in view of the sufferings of the people of the South at this time, and of the industries that are languishing in consequence of the recent floods, it would be far better for us in my judgment to attend to the alleviation of the sufferings and wants of those people than to send fifteen or twenty members of this House down there to celebrate the discovery of the Mississippi River. I think it would be more becoming to us as a House to attend to our legitimate business and to provide for the wants of these people, and let this matter rest, or postpone it until after Congress shall have adjourned. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBESON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HERBERT.]

Mr. HERBERT. There are a great many interesting historic associations connected with the memory of La Salle; but if we strip this question of the illusion thrown around it by the oratory of our friends who have spoken this morning, it is simply a bald proposition to send a junketing committee down to New Orleans to take part in this festive celebration.

La Salle has been dead nearly two hundred years. We have got living questions here which we were sent by the people to discuss and decide. And, Mr. Speaker, when we go home nearly every member now on this floor will give as an excuse to his constituents for not passing this bill or that bill that we did not have time. I think we had better devote ourselves to the business we were sent here to do, and let celebrations of this kind be attended to by other people.

Mr. ROBESON. I now move the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR.]

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "April 9, 1882," insert the following:
"Provided, That Congress has by that time finally adjourned for this session."

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to have the original resolution reported again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HASKELL. I move to lay the resolution and pending amendment on the table.

The question being taken on Mr. HASKELL's motion, there were—ayes 76, noes 30.

So (further count not being called for) the resolution and amendment were laid on the table.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINING DÉBRIS IN CALIFORNIA RIVERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in further compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of June 14, 1880, a copy of the final report of Lieutenant-Colonel G. H. Mendenhall, of the Corps of Engineers, upon examinations and surveys to devise a system of works to prevent further injury to the navigable waters of California from the débris of mines arising from hydraulic mining; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KASSON. In consequence of the time that has been consumed this morning, I feel disposed to ask the House if it is ready to dispense with the morning hour for the calling of committees for reports. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 80, noes 31.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

Mr. KASSON. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the object being to proceed with the consideration of the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. HOUSE. Before the motion is put I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSE. To-day was set apart by the House for the consideration of a special order, being bills having relation to the transfer of private claims to the Court of Claims. I would like to inquire of the Chair whether that is a continuing order from day to day, and if it can be called up at any future day?

The SPEAKER. If the Chair understands the import of the order, it is a continuing order from day to day.

Mr. KASSON. I will state that the gentleman upon whose motion the order was made is not ready to proceed this morning, and it will accommodate him to postpone it. I agree with the Chair that the order was made from day to day.

Mr. HOUSE. I do not propose to antagonize the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] but I desire to understand the effect his motion, if adopted, will have upon the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order of the House to which reference is made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 684) to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government. Special order for Tuesday, March 7, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to antagonize general appropriation and revenue bills.

Mr. VALENTINE. I appealed to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] in charge of the measure which he has indicated a desire to go into Committee of the Whole to consider to give way to the agricultural appropriation bill, but he has declined to do so. I therefore feel it my duty to antagonize his motion, and I make the point of order that the bill he has indicated is not a privileged question. I refer to clause 4 of Rule XXIII, which says:

In Committees of the Whole House business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except in bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, &c.

Now I hold that the bill indicated by the gentleman from Iowa is not a bill for raising revenue. It is a bill "to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws." The report from the Committee on Ways and Means recommends the striking out the words "internal revenue," so as to leave it as a bill to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff, and providing what that commission shall do and when it shall report to Congress. I hold that under the rules it is not a bill for the raising of revenue and is therefore subject to the point of order which I have made.

Mr. CALKINS. My friend from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] has evidently mistaken the course which he should pursue. If he wants to antagonize the bill indicated by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] the only point he can raise against it at this time is the question of consideration, for the motion the gentleman has made is a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was the point I was going to make.

Mr. VALENTINE. He has included more than that in his motion. If he had moved to go into Committee of the Whole only, I could not have made my point of order. He has added to his motion, for the consideration of a particular bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to be a motion for the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, accompanied with the statement that the object was to proceed with the consideration of the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is so.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] intends, by the motion he has submitted, to have the House indicate the particular bill which shall be taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, then I would make a point of order against him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from Iowa made a motion to designate the bill to be considered; but when he submitted his motion to go into Committee of the Whole he stated, which was fair to the House, the object of his motion. In the opinion of the Chair the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is clearly in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The special order for to-day was made not to antagonize appropriation bills or revenue bills.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is not any special order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am speaking of the special order in regard to sending private claims to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The inquiry upon that matter has been disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not the one I am going to make. The first order of business to-day is the special order, unless this motion takes precedence of it; and it cannot take precedence of it unless the bill referred to is a revenue bill. If the Clerk will read the order making the assignment of a special order for to-day it will be found that it was not to interfere with appropriation bills or revenue bills.

I raise the point that the business of the House now is the special order, which is not to be antagonized by anything except revenue bills or bills making appropriations for the expenses of the Government.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to say that I antagonized the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa for the purpose of making the motion that we go into Committee of the Whole to consider the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. KASSON. In proper time, when I have heard the real objection, I shall be glad, whether in the House or in Committee of the Whole, to answer the point under the rules.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. KASSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CARLISLE. As I understand the situation of the question, it is simply this: according to the construction the Chair has put upon the motion made by the gentleman from Iowa, that motion is entirely in order. The question whether or not this is a revenue bill under the rules of the House and the Constitution of the country, and therefore entitled to preference in Committee of the Whole, will arise when the House has gone into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, because we have a rule providing that bills on the Calendar in Committee of the Whole shall be taken up in their regular order, but that when a motion is made to pass over a bill if objection is made the committee shall rise and the House must, without debate, determine whether the bill shall be passed over or not. But we have also a rule which gives to all bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills preference in Committee of the Whole. Therefore, when the House has determined to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Calendar of that committee, the question will at once present itself, if an attempt should be made to take up this bill out of its regular order on the Calendar, whether or not it is a revenue bill, and that we will all concede is a very important question, because very important consequences may result from its decision one way or the other. That is a question which I give notice to gentlemen on the other side we on this side shall insist on having decided before or at the time this bill is taken up.

Mr. KASSON. I understand the gentleman does not consider that question as presented at this time.

Mr. CARLISLE. No, sir.

Mr. KASSON. Then, sir, I will insist on my motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

As to the point raised by my friend from Nebraska, [Mr. VALENTINE,] who desires to antagonize this bill with an appropriation bill, it is proper for me to say that for nearly two weeks the Ways and Means Committee have deferred asking the House to take up this bill for consideration in order that certain general appropriation bills might be considered. We have exercised every courtesy, as the general Appropriations Committee is well aware, that could be expected of us under a distinct understanding that so far as they were concerned no further antagonism would be made. They make none now. In the matter of time the consideration of the appropriation bill is not so important as the consideration of this bill. I hope, therefore, the House will sustain the action proposed by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should decide to go into Committee of the Whole to consider this bill, and should it run from day to day, would it antagonize special orders which have been fixed by the House under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. KASSON. That question does not arise now.

Mr. PAGE. It arises with me.

The SPEAKER. It does not displace special orders. Any matter before the House may be antagonized, whether a special order——

Mr. PAGE. I cannot hear the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. It does not displace special orders that continue from day to day. This is all the Chair can state now.

Mr. BERRY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] should prevail and the House should go into Committee of the Whole, shall we be bound by that to take up for consideration the bill with reference to a tariff commission?

The SPEAKER. Not by the terms of the motion now submitted, as the Chair understands it. It is a question to be decided when in committee as to what business will be in order. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and states that the object is to take up the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. Just a word.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the question may be put.

Mr. VALENTINE. The gentleman from Iowa having gone into the merits of the two bills, I think it but fair that I should say a few words.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Nebraska rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. KASSON, it was decided in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The House decides to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] will take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2315, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. VALENTINE. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first state the question. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] calls up House bill No. 2315, to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue law.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire now to make the point of order that that is not a privileged question under the rules of the House. It is not a revenue bill, nor a general appropriation bill, nor a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and they are the only ones that can be taken up out of regular order when in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman will let me know when he finishes I will speak to the point of order. If he has not finished I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. VALENTINE. I have concluded stating my point of order.

Mr. KASSON. The question is really a very simple one, and I think, sir, that gentlemen upon the other side, considering it irrespective of their personal wishes touching the priority of business, will not fail to agree with the Committee on Ways and Means, that this is within the meaning of the rule "a revenue bill."

In the first place, Rule XI provides that "all proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rules as follows."

I may be pardoned for asking the attention of the Chair to my statement. Rule XI provides that "all proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows," and then, in the second clause, "to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States: to the Committee on Ways and Means."

All legislation relating to the revenue. There is no such distinction as is sought to be established here between a bill imposing taxation and a bill to provide the means for imposing taxation. This is a bill to provide a manner of reporting a bill for taxation, gathering all the facts for that purpose. It is legislation relating to the revenue, and you cannot classify it under any other heading of the rules of this House than as a revenue bill. And as such it has taken its place in the Committee of the Whole House on its Calendar, and as such is entitled to precedence indicated in section 4 of Rule XXIII, which gives it precedence even over general appropriation bills and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

That is as brief and distinct a statement of my answer to the point of order as I can make, and unless other considerations are presented I content myself with that reply.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, I think if the Chair will take the bill and examine it he will ascertain without doubt that it is not a bill for the purpose of raising revenue. The bill provides the President of the United States shall appoint a commission. It makes provision for the salary of that commission. It further provides, they shall have power thoroughly to investigate any questions relating to the agricultural, commercial, mercantile, manufacturing, mining, and industrial interests of the United States so far as may be necessary to the establishment of a judicious tariff. It then provides they shall report to Congress their findings on that question, that is after they have examined fully into the matter. Suppose, Mr. Chairman, this commission, if it should become a commission, by the passage of the law, after four or five months investigation should report back to Congress that the system now established for the purpose of raising revenue was the best one and should recommend the continuance of that system, how would it leave the gentlemen touching their claim? This is not a bill for the purpose of raising revenue, and I believe it is clearly obnoxious to the rule for the reasons I have stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the following bills and joint resolution; in which concurrence was requested:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 45) to authorize the Secretary of War to use hospital tents for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River;

An act (S. No. 254) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier, a paymaster United States Army;

An act (S. No. 472) for the relief of H. A. Myers;

An act (S. No. 722) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma Schell;

An act (S. No. 743) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough; and

An act (S. No. 801) authorizing the claimants of the Rancho de Napa, in Napa County, California, to prove up their title.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the position taken by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] it is that this is a revenue bill under the rules of the House, and entitled to its place on the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole House as such. But the gentleman undertakes to make a very nice distinction. He says it is true this is not a bill to impose taxation, but a bill relating to the revenues, because it looks to the means of revising the tariff system of the country.

The distinction taken by the gentleman seems to be at first glance a very ingenuous one, but yet it is fatal to his position, for whenever the gentleman admits this is not a bill to raise revenue, he admits, in substance if not in terms, that it does not come within the fourth section of Rule XXIII, which I will read:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, &c.

Now, I submit, therefore, to the gentleman that when he concedes that this is not a bill to raise revenue, but only a bill looking to the creation of a commission to devise means to raise revenue hereafter by the revision of the tariff, he concedes that it is not a bill entitled to preference in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman pardon me, I said it was not a bill to impose taxation.

Mr. CARLISLE. Well, I submit that there can be under the Constitution and rules no revenue bill, in the sense in which that term is ordinarily used in this country and in England, except a bill which either imposes taxation upon the people or repeals taxation already imposed upon the people.

A bill which does not directly and by its immediate effect change in some way the existing revenue laws cannot be, as I have said, a bill imposing taxation upon the people or relieving taxation already imposed.

Now, as I said awhile ago in the House, and I desire to be entirely frank with gentlemen upon the other side, very important consequences may result from this decision, not only now in the consideration of the present measure, but hereafter, if the bill now pending at the other end of the Capitol shall come here. If this be a revenue bill every gentleman will concede that, under the Constitution, it cannot originate in the Senate. If it be a revenue bill within the meaning of the Constitution and the rule of the House, then we on this side of the House, at least those gentlemen who agree with me, will insist at the proper time upon our right to offer amendments revising this tariff system. If it be not a revenue bill, then perhaps we may think it our duty to pursue a different course.

Therefore, I submit that this is a question which should not be hastily or inconsiderately decided. It should have careful consideration at the hands of the chairman, as I know it will have, and be decided correctly, because of the importance of the question involved.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that at all times the correct construction of a rule of this House is best attained by a proper and comprehensive view of the rule, and the reasons therefor, rather than by any motion to proceed in the House with the consideration of any special bill or measure.

Now, the Committee on Ways and Means of this House is charged with the whole subject of raising revenue for the support of the Government. It is given immediate jurisdiction over all manner of questions relating to the subject of revenue, or by which the people of this country are to be taxed directly or indirectly for the support of the Government. It is given full power to act as they see fit, as to the manner of imposing this burden of taxation upon the people, under the law and the Constitution of the country.

So far as the committee goes it has in this respect all the power that the rules of the House confer upon it. The House may refuse any particular scheme devised by the committee, but it will scarcely be denied by any one present that the committee has the right, under the law, to present that scheme for the consideration of the House.

I commend to the consideration of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, as on a parity of reasoning with this proposition, the decisions of that distinguished judge whose name has been mentioned in the House this morning, which go to the effect that where the Constitution grants to Congress the power to do a specific thing it must be allowed the ways and means of doing it. The implied powers of the Constitution, by his decisions, when they were fairly established became a part and parcel of the fundamental law.

Now this is precisely the position here. This committee, the Committee on Ways and Means, charged with the duty of raising revenue for the support of the Government, comes before the House with a scheme or plan for the raising of the taxes, which scheme or plan is part and parcel of the system of taxation which they propose. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to assume a position here which shall deny to the Committee on Ways and Means the power of adopting a proposition or of presenting to this House any scheme they may see fit concerning the revenue? Certainly not.

It may be possible under the rules of the House that we might reach a condition of things in this country, or a condition of things in the business of this House, wherein and whereby it would become a physical impossibility to prepare in a single session of Congress a tariff bill. It might come that the only possible way of providing the means of taxation, or of devising a plan for taxing the people under the Constitution, would be to put that power in the hands of a commission, to act under due process of law. Will the gentleman from Kentucky deny that this House has the power by the law to devise that means of taxation? And if it has the power under the law to set to work in any manner that it sees fit, and the committee adopts that mode, the committee of course having the power to consider the bill, such a measure then becomes a part and parcel of the scheme and plan of taxation, and as much so and as thoroughly part of the business of that committee as if in specific terms it had put its finger upon different articles, and said, We will tax this one so much and that one so much.

Now let me suggest, so thoroughly is this idea of the correlation of subjects in parliamentary law adhered to, that even when a proposition is before the House and an amendment is pending, or some motion is made with reference to it, a motion to lay on the table reaches backward through the amendment, backward through the procedure, and attaches itself to the bill, carrying the whole thing to the table. This is only part and parcel of the scheme of taxation. It may be secondary in its effects. The commission raised will have to do something, but out of it and by it is the machinery which this committee desires to recommend to this House as the proper mode of raising revenue.

Again I want to suggest to the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] that when he comes into the committee as he suggested, and proposes to offer amendments to this bill as he has suggested, defining the specific taxation, he will find that there is a vast deal of difference between those propositions under the one question of its germaneness. But of that, Mr. Chairman, enough can be said when the time is reached for the consideration of it.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I would like to ask my friend from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] before he takes his seat, whether he holds to the position that a revenue bill is not amendable?

Mr. HASKELL. I hold to the position that a revenue bill is amendable, of course. But I want now in reply to ask the gentleman from Michigan to tell me if a revenue bill, being amendable, must not be amendable by subject-matter that is germane?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman admits that a revenue bill is amendable. Does he hold this is a revenue bill? I think from his argument that he does.

Mr. HASKELL. I would apply the reason why it is not germane to the method of procedure on a proposition.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. HASKELL. I have not yet yielded the floor. I desire to say a word further. We are at this moment discussing the question of the subject-matter. The question the gentleman from Michigan alluded to is as to procedure.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. The point I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas about is this: the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] asked him if this is a revenue bill; I ask him if under the Constitution, and rule of this House in accordance with the Constitution, is this a bill for raising revenue?

Mr. HASKELL. It is a bill for raising revenue.

Mr. TUCKER. If it be a bill for raising revenue or for providing the means by which revenue is to be raised, how does the gentleman get out of the dilemma that we may suggest another way of raising revenue and propose amendments?

Mr. HASKELL. It is very possible that when we come to face the proposition the gentleman may introduce we may find it entirely in order. But I simply intended to deny the fact that all possible amendments to a revenue bill, or some of them, at least, might be barred out on the ground of procedure. The gentleman from Michigan was making an argument that they would all go if they related to revenue at all. I drew the line between propositions germane as to subject-matter, and germane as to procedure. And if the gentleman will examine his law very carefully he will observe that there are two branches of the subject there.

Mr. KASSON. With the permission of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] I desire to call the attention of the Chair, just for a moment, to a decision. I refer, sir, to a decision by the late Speaker of the House on a bill, as reported in the index to the little work in my hand of proceedings in Committee of the Whole: "A bill providing a new method of paying customs duties must first be considered in Committee of the Whole." And also in another case, where the question was raised of the right of the Senate to originate a certain measure as coming within the constitutional powers of the House, it was determined on the point that it related to measures of revenue.

I want, therefore, this discussion not to be mingled with other discussions. This is not a question as to whether this is in all senses a revenue bill, but whether, in the sense of the rule, the Ways and Means Committee having reported a bill relating to revenue affecting legislation in respect to revenue, it is entitled to be taken up in the order indicated by the rule. The question of how it may be amendable will arise afterward when new amendments are offered.

Mr. REAGAN. In considering whether this is a privileged bill, for that is the object in asking the Committee of the Whole to consider a revenue bill, it is best first to look at the forty-seventh subdivision of Rule XI:

The following named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue.

That is as much of the rule as I care to read. It shows that bills to raise revenue are among the privileged classes.

That relates simply to what are privileged bills. Then the fourth subdivision of Rule 23 provides that—

In Committees of the Whole House business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills raising revenue, general appropriations bills, &c.

Now, then, if this is a bill for raising revenue it is entitled to be so considered. If it is not a bill for raising revenue it takes its place on the Calendar and will be disposed of in its order on the Calendar.

Now, when you take up this bill No. 2315, you find that it provides in its third section—

That it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and to thoroughly investigate all the various questions relating to the agricultural, commercial, mercantile, manufacturing, mining, and industrial interests of the United States, so far as the same may be necessary to the establishment of a judicious tariff, or a revision of the existing tariff, and the existing system of internal-revenue laws, upon a scale of justice to all interests.

This is a bill providing for the collection of information by a commission provided for in the bill, upon which to predicate a bill for raising revenue. It is not itself a bill for raising revenue, but, as it seems to me from reading it, it is a bill to empower a commission to collect information upon which we may predicate a bill to raise revenue.

Now, if that be the character of this bill, it might originate properly in the Senate. If it be a bill for raising revenue, then under the Constitution and the practice of the two Houses it could not originate in the Senate. If it is a bill simply to collect information to enable the House to proceed to frame a bill to raise revenue, then I submit it is not a privileged bill and must take its place upon the Calendar subject to the rules affecting bills not privileged for consideration.

Mr. PAGE. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the point of order at all, but I desire to ask the Chair a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. If this is a revenue bill and shall be so held by the Chair, will it be in order to offer as a substitute for this bill a bill which will revise the revenue laws of the United States?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide that question when it shall arise.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to have the Chair decide it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not anticipate problems. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALKINS. A word upon the question before the committee. It occurs to me that the matter may be solved by the Chair without any difficulty. To the Committee on Ways and Means are committed various subjects, some of which have precedence under the rules over other subjects and other bills reported not only by that committee, but by the Committee on Appropriations and all other committees of the House, save perhaps the Committee on Elections.

When the Committee on Ways and Means report a bill which falls within the provisions of clause 4 of Rule XXIII, for the raising of revenue, the proper mode of procedure in the Committee of the Whole is to object to the consideration of that bill, and the question then is raised, first, whether it is within the provisions of the rule a bill raising revenue. If it is, then it falls within clause 4 of Rule XXIII, as taking precedence of other bills. If on objection the Chair holds that it is not a bill raising revenue, then the committee must rise and the House without debate will decide the order of procedure.

In regard to the question presented by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] in the nature of an objection to the consideration of the bill in charge of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] the first question in order is, does this bill fall within the provisions of clause 4 of Rule XXIII as a bill raising revenue? If the Chair so holds, then the question is before the committee, and it may be antagonized by raising the question of consideration, and not otherwise. If the Chair holds that it is not a bill raising revenue, as contended for by my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] the only manner to reach it is to object to its consideration——

Mr. CARLISLE. Not at all.

Mr. CALKINS. And let the committee rise and the House determine the question.

Mr. CARLISLE. If it is not a bill raising revenue, then it is in its place upon the Calendar, and the motion is to bring it up out of its order.

Mr. CALKINS. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa is under the clause of the rule which says that bills raising revenue shall have precedence.

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. CALKINS. And under that idea he asks the committee now to consider the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. But suppose the Chair decides that it is not a bill raising revenue, and therefore has not precedence over other bills. The effect of that decision will be that the committee will at once proceed to take up the first bill on the Calendar, and then some gentleman will move to pass it over, and if objection is offered the committee will rise and the House will decide the question; and so on seriatim until all the bills on the Calendar preceding this have been disposed of.

Mr. CALKINS. There is no difference between the gentleman and myself, as he will see if he will listen to the other branch of the statement I rose to make.

I desire further to state that if the Chair holds that this bill does not fall within the provisions of the rule, then the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] can call up the bill he is insisting upon. That is what I rose to say, and the gentleman will see that there is no difference between him and myself.

One word further as to whether this is a revenue bill. The ruling upon that subject is very liberal, and the Chair has been referred to a former decision of the Speaker of the House. All questions which involve the scheme of taxation have been held to fall within the rule. This is a great scheme of taxation, a bill to take into consideration the question of the taxation of the people—a system of taxation to be considered. Now, if it does not fall within that clause of the rule, then I ask under what clause can it fall?

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman succeeds in sustaining the proposition that this is a revenue bill, would he regard it as amendable in committee as a revenue bill or a tax bill?

Mr. CALKINS. When that question especially arises I will try to study it out and act with such judgment as I may have.

Mr. REAGAN. I would ask an additional question if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. Admitting that this is a revenue bill—a bill to raise revenue—then is not the bill open to amendments for the purpose of raising revenue?

Mr. CALKINS. I do not want to go into a discussion of a question not now properly before the Committee of the Whole or before the Chair. I respectfully decline to enter into that discussion.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the question, Mr. Chairman, because it is desirable to know whether this is a revenue bill or not. I have heard of a gentleman who, when hunting, shot at random, aiming to hit if it was a deer and to miss if it was a calf. Now we do not want to be put in that attitude. We want to know whether the gentleman means that this is a revenue bill, subject to amendment as such, or whether it is not a revenue bill.

Mr. CALKINS. Those questions will arise in the progress of the bill when it comes up. It will be sufficient at that time to meet the questions suggested by the gentleman from Texas. But when interrupted I was about to say that in rulings of the recent Speaker of the House he has grouped together (as I think properly) all subjects connected with the raising of revenue, although it may be remotely, and has given them precedence under this rule because they referred to the subject of taxation. If this rule were construed as I think my friend from Kentucky would have it construed, you could not under this rule give precedence to a bill reducing taxation but only to bills raising revenue in a general way.

Mr. CARLISLE. I expressly said they were included.

Mr. CALKINS. If the bill which it is proposed to bring before this committee affects taxation in any way, however remotely, it is within the terms and meaning of the rule. You cannot exclude one class of legislation from the provisions of this rule, although it may be remote, and include another. So the Speaker held in the last Congress in the case of a bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, that the mode of changing the collection of customs fell within the rule, was within the provision now under discussion.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman is mistaken on that point, if he will allow me to say so. The Speaker did not decide that such bills were entitled to any preference in Committee of the Whole, but simply decided under another rule of the House that such bills must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and be there considered. Those were the decisions read by the gentleman from Iowa a few moments ago. They were under a different rule altogether, and their effect was simply that the bills must go to the Committee of the Whole and be considered there; not that they were entitled to any preference when there.

Mr. HASKELL. The rule which carries them to the Committee of the Whole carries them there as revenue bills.

Mr. CARLISLE. Of course I cannot interrupt the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] without his consent to answer that point now.

Mr. CALKINS. I was about to state that if the bills go to the Committee of the Whole they go there under the provision of the rule as bills raising revenue.

Mr. CARLISLE. Not at all; but under a rule providing that all motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people, and all motions or propositions appropriating money or property, must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALKINS. Exactly; but does the gentleman claim that the whole question of the revision of the tariff does not involve a tax upon the people? Might it not involve a change of taxation? What I claim is that a bill proposing to change or which may change the taxation of the people is within the provisions of the rule.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] to the fact that the bill now proposed for consideration does not propose to change the mode of collecting taxes. It simply provides for the raising of a commission to make suggestions to Congress whereby we may propose a measure to change the mode of collecting taxes.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not care to get into a discussion of that kind. We must treat these subjects not as mere boys' play, but as matters of fact; and when a commission reports to this House facts which have been gathered and recommendations agreed upon, it is reasonable to presume that Congress will act intelligently upon the question and make changes in the law. That is all the answer necessary upon that point.

Mr. VALENTINE. But what sent this bill to the Committee of the Whole House under the rules of the House was not the fact of its being a revenue bill, but was a provision for the pay of this commission. The bill provides for an expenditure of money, and that is the provision which sent it to the Committee of the Whole. It did not go to the Committee of the Whole because it is a revenue bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this whole question, it seems to me, is resolved into one of construction of a very simple rule. Many of the gentlemen who have addressed the Chair have used the phrase, "a bill raising revenue." The language of the rule is, "a bill for raising revenue." That is what clause 4 of Rule XXIII says. I think it perfectly obvious that it means any bill for raising revenue. Now, what is the meaning of the phrase "for raising revenue?" It means "for the purpose of raising revenue"—adapted to that purpose—having that object in view, whether proximately or remotely. There is an ellipsis in the language; and that ellipsis is supplied by the well-known parliamentary term used in connection with bill after bill, referring to what is contained in the bill and not fully set forth in the title; namely the word "purpose." Is the object of this bill, the purpose of this bill, to raise revenue? It seems to me the gentlemen who will dispute that proposition will take a very large liberty with the English language. It seems to me to be perfectly plain the object of this whole bill is to ascertain such means, such a plan as may be necessary for the purpose of raising revenue. It has no other object. It can have no other intention. And if that be true, I do not see how it can be possible to exclude it from its position of privilege or right of precedence over the other bills on this Calendar. If it were a bill which contemplated something not connected with revenue at all, if it were a bill simply coming from the Committee on Ways and Means and not intended to affect the revenue, then of course it would not be entitled to precedence. But being a bill for the purpose of raising revenue, for the purpose of ascertaining what revenue can be raised, what tax imposed, what amount shall be collected, from what sources the greatest revenue can be obtained by the Government, and that being the only object of it, I cannot see how it can be doubted that it is entitled to precedence under the rule.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to trouble the committee again, but I desire to say one word only. My objection to the argument made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] is that in construing a rule he interpolates a word into the rule and then attempts to construe that word. He says this rule provides for bills for raising revenue.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. CARLISLE. For bills raising revenue.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. CARLISLE. He says it is for the purpose of raising revenue. The words "for the purpose" are not there.

Mr. BAYNE. But "for" is there.

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes; but the words "for the purpose" are not there; and the gentleman proceeds to make an argument on those words to show the ultimate object of this bill is to revise the tariff system of the country, and thereby raise revenue.

But I will not multiply words on this subject. Judge Story, in his commentaries on the Constitution, discusses this very question. It has been already said correctly that the language of the Constitution is precisely the language of our rule. In reference to that clause which provides that bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, Judge Story says, in section 880:

> What bills are properly "bills for raising revenue," in the sense of the Constitution, has been matter of some discussion. A learned commentator supposes that every bill which indirectly or consequentially may raise revenue is, within the sense of the Constitution, a revenue bill. He therefore thinks that the bills for establishing the Post-Office and the Mint and regulating the value of foreign coin belong to this class, and ought not to have orginated (as in fact they did) in the Senate.
> But—

As Judge Story proceeds to say—> the practical construction of the Constitution has been against his opinion. And, indeed, the history of the origin of the power, already suggested, abundantly proves that it has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the word, and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue.

And he proceeds from that on to give other illustrations of bills which may incidentally affect the revenues of the country and which do not come within the constitutional definition of bills to raise revenue. That is the case here.

Mr. McLANE. I am not surprised the gentleman finds some difficulty in deciding whether this is or is not a bill for raising revenue. But I have no anxiety on the second question, and I have no fear the chairman of this committee, having ruled this is a bill for raising revenue, would then follow the line of argument presented by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] and rule that an amendment for revision of the tariff is not germane. I have no anxiety on that point. I cannot conceive any honorable judgment on that point, having decided it to be a bill for raising revenue, would rule out amendments for revising the tariff. It is a bill to appoint a commission to inquire into the subjects that are judicious matters of investigation to enable us to revise the tariff.

Whether it be actually a bill to revise the tariff or a bill to get information to enable us to revise the tariff is a question about which there is some doubt.

The second section of the bill says explicitly that this commission shall inquire into the matters proper to guide Congress in revision of the tariff. Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] who moved to go into the Committee of the Whole House and avowed his purpose to take up this bill, in treating this point of order did not say this was a revenue bill, in the proper sense of that term. I do not suppose the gentleman had in his mind to take the distinction that the bill was a revenue bill because it had some reference to revenue and therefore take precedence, and yet not be amendable as a revenue bill. I have no idea when he got his bill to raise revenue in the Committee of the Whole House he would then make the point it was not a bill to raise the revenue but only a bill to secure information. I beg to ask his attention to that, although I understand I am speaking with the indulgence of the Chair and for the Chair's information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is glad to hear the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. McLANE. Now, I submit to the Chair that if this is a bill for raising revenue, in the true sense of the term, as it is set out in the Constitution and in our rules, then it would be amendable as a tariff bill. In that connection I desire to refer the Chair to the other clause of the Constitution defining the first power of Congress to be as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, &c.

Now, when Congress undertakes to exercise that power, of course it does it through a bill to raise revenue. Here is the power of Congress to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts; and then there is the other provision of the Constitution that when Congress is about to lay taxes, imposts, and excises, that when it is doing that, it is enacting a bill to raise revenue. Any bill which raises taxes, imposts, and excises is an act of Congress or bill for raising revenue, and under our rules has preference of all other bills, and under the Constitution of the United States can originate only in this House.

Now, is this such a bill? And that question, I submit to the Chair, is open to doubt; and that is the only question open to doubt, whether or not it is a bill to lay taxes, imposts, or excises. Is it, or not? If it is such a bill, then it is a revenue bill, and no man would have the face afterward to object to an amendment to the bill proposing a revision of the tariff. No man could expect to have any respect shown to himself, or to his opinions, who, while admitting that this is a bill to raise revenue under the Constitution, would undertake to say that an amendment to such a bill, which proposed a revision of the tariff laws, or any portion of them, was not germane. I have no fear of that. I am only desirous of pressing upon the Chair the first point, as to whether or not it is a bill to raise revenue; is it a bill which provides for the imposition of taxes? Now, I am constrained to say upon that point, that I not only can understand that there may be great doubt, but manifestly at the other end of this Capitol they were of the opinion (as I infer from the action recently taken there) adverse to the idea that this was a bill to raise revenue.

It is not to be supposed that these honorable gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol, first through the deliberations of their Committee on Finance, and then after elaborate discussion and consideration of the bill before that body, would have spent weeks and weeks in the discussion of a bill which in their judgment was or might be construed as being a bill for raising revenue. What right have they to discuss a bill to raise revenue? Is it supposed that those honorable gentlemen would present themselves to the country in an attitude so undignified, so unbecoming to themselves, as to spend weeks and weeks in the discussion of a measure which alone is in the power of this House? I do not believe it; and, Mr. Chairman, we must pay some deference to each other here as members of this House, and also to honorable gentlemen who sit in the other end of this Capitol; and if they can entertain this question week after week we must suppose they do not consider it as a bill for raising revenue, and that very fact ought at least to induce us to treat with forbearance the difference of opinions upon this floor upon this point.

Now I do not mean to intrude upon the committee any further as to whether this is or is not a bill to raise revenue. I wish only to make the point, and I make it because the honorable gentleman from Kansas made it clear to the committee that though he should consider this as a bill for raising revenue he might conceive himself at liberty to construe amendments to the revenue and tariff laws as not germane. And the honorable gentleman from Iowa, if he will permit me to call his attention to the conclusion that necessarily follows from his remarks, left me in very great doubt as to whether he did not mean to hold the same position. I do not say that he used such express terms, but the conclusion might be drawn from what he did say; but I have already said I do not believe he intended it or would act on that line. The honorable gentleman made the point that any bill which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, as pertaining to the revenue, was therefore a bill for raising revenue.

Now, no man can doubt that many bills may go to the Committee on Ways and Means which may relate to the revenue but which are not revenue bills in the sense of the Constitution. But they are not necessarily bills to lay taxes, imposts, or excises. Such bills for raising revenues by taxes, imposts, or excises are revenue bills. Now, the gentleman from Iowa in reading the rule took the term "relating to revenue" and gave that term its significance by referring to "any bills relating to revenue;" any bills which had any reference to the revenue was in the sense of the rule and the Constitution a revenue bill. Well, if that were so, Mr. Chairman, of course this bill would be in order. It certainly is a bill, as one gentleman described it, as to the mode of procedure; it is certainly the first step, a preparatory step it is true, but still a step toward the revision of the tariff.

Mr. HASKELL. May I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not desire to make an affirmative proposition. I simply want to ask the gentleman a question that he may think of it, since he holds my position was untenable. He says this is a bill providing a procedure.

Mr. McLANE. I said it had been referred to as a bill providing a procedure.

Mr. HASKELL. To make amendments germane, it may possibly occur to the gentleman from Maryland in considering the subject that those amendments will have to be concerning procedure in order to be germane. That is the point I made.

Mr. McLANE. On that view of the case—and I beg the attention of the Chair to the inquiry the gentleman from Kansas has addressed to me—on that view of the case this is not a revenue bill. That is the answer. If this be simply a preliminary method of procedure, then it is not a bill for raising revenue; and that is exactly the point we are going to submit to the Chair. I am not in any embarrassment about it, for I can very well understand that is the opinion of the Chair, as I can very well understand that is the opinion of this committee, that this is simply a bill providing for a procedure through which we will come later to the measure of laying taxes and imposts; and if it be that simple measure then it is not a bill for raising revenue.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Is not this a bill in respect to raising revenue; having respect to raising revenue?

Mr. McLANE. The remarks I addressed to the Chair treated the bill as one that might be a bill for raising revenue, or one only preliminary thereto.

Mr. BAYNE. Then may I call the attention of my friend to the definition of the word "for."

Mr. McLANE. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania he can express the idea very well without the use of the word "for." We might say "bills raising revenue." It is a matter of style whether we should say "bills raising revenue" or "bills for raising revenue." I would not take the liberty with the Chair to address him on any such point, for the two modes of expression are synonymous.

Mr. KASSON. Has the gentleman from Maryland finished? If so, I want to say a few words.

Mr. McLANE. Very well.

Mr. KASSON. I think the debate has gone so far as is necessary to enlighten the Chair, and I wish only to answer one point. I wish to say that this is not a question of Greek particles or accents over Hebrew letters. It is a question of what, under our rule, was meant in giving certain precedence of business. I offer this bill simply as relating to the revenue, as a bill for raising revenue within the meaning of the rule, being in that direction entitling it to precedence in the order of business. What may be a proper amendment I submit can only be determined when the amendment is offered, under the well-known rules governing the action of the House. I only ask now for the decision of the Chair whether it is not in order to proceed with the consideration of this bill under the rules of the House and under the precedents which have been established.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I do not care to prolong the discussion, but for one I cannot believe that under the rules of the House this can be regarded as in any sense a bill for raising revenue. It is a mere question of procedure we are now discussing. We are in the Committee of the Whole, and under the rules of the House when in committee we are restricted to the consideration of the first bill on the Calendar, unless by some other rule of the House we are permitted to proceed to the consideration of some other measure on that Calendar. The rule provides that when in committee bills for raising revenue shall have precedence, and the whole question is whether this is a bill for raising revenue.

If this bill should pass and receive the sanction of the Executive and become a law, how is the revenue affected? Will some gentleman explain to us? If this bill should pass and become a law, in what particular would the revenue be affected? In what item?

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that if it stopped there the revenue is not affected at all.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That is where it does stop.

Mr. CALKINS. It cannot stop there. It is to be presumed it is but one step in the direction of affecting the revenue of the Government.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Of course the bill provides this commission to be organized shall make a report to Congress. But suppose Congress should take its usual course and pay no attention to the report, have we affected the revenue? Has the revenue been interferred with in any manner whatever? Not in the slightest. Whether this bill passes or not it in no way affects the revenue. It does not touch it in any particular.

What are the facts? The Committee on Ways and Means has had referred to it certain bills touching the revenue; there is no question about that. And instead of reporting back any of those bills proposing a modification of the revenue in any way, they report to this House a proposition to create a commission to furnish that committee with information upon the subject; or in the bill they provide that this commission shall report to Congress. Now, either the committee are unprepared to pass upon these bills, or else in the judgment of the committee they think the House is not sufficiently informed to appreciate their report on these measures. Therefore it is a proposition to instruct the House on this question. Certainly that cannot be a bill raising the revenue. Suppose instead of reporting this bill the committee had reported this: instead of authorizing a commission of nine persons it had reported a bill to authorize the purchase of a library of all authors upon the question of tariff that Congress may have access to such library; in other words, the Committee on Ways and Means are in need of a library upon the question of tariff, and they therefore ask an appropriation of $5,000 to purchase a library to put into the room of the committee, as a preliminary step toward passing on the question of the tariff. Would it be argued that such a bill was a bill for raising revenue? I think not. What is this but a bill, instead of asking for a library, asking for information from gentlemen outside of Congress?

Mr. MORRISON. We will vote for the books.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. It is a bill to bring in information from gentlemen outside of this Congress to the Committee of Ways and Means, and to say that such a bill is a bill for raising revenue is utterly preposterous.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That I may not be misunderstood, I desire to say that I do not wish what I have said to be regarded as indicating whether I am for or against this commission. I have spoken simply upon the point of order.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2192) to establish a port of delivery at Denver, in the State of Colorado;

An act (H. R. No. 3844) to establish post-routes;

An act (H. R. No. 4221) to provide for some of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 4679) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish impressions of the cards of invitation to the Garfield memorial service; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) authorizing the printing of 2,500 copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. SPEER. It is a very familiar rule of construction which is embodied in the maxim that he who sticks in the letter sticks in the bark. I think that in discussions of questions of order in which the present occupant of the chair has taken part upon the floor I have heard that maxim of almost universal application frequently quoted. Now, I do not think it likely that a gentleman from the State of Webster is inclined to put a narrow and hide-bound construction upon the question now before the committee.

The question before the committee is this: Is the bill which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has called up for consideration a bill for raising revenue? I contend that it is, and I have listened with the utmost attention to the very able and lawyer-like arguments made on both sides of the question.

What is this bill? It is a bill for a commission to report a tariff to this House. What is a tariff? It is a system of laws by which customs duties are imposed and collected, and the customs duties so collected constitute revenue.

I call the attention of the Chair to the name of the committee from which this bill is reported, the Committee on Ways and Means. Now this is a bill providing for a certain way or means of raising revenue. It is therefore a bill for raising revenue.

The citation of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] from the commentaries of Mr. Justice Story is not applicable to this question. Mr. Story said, or cited, that a bill to create a post-office system, or a bill to sell the lands of certain insolvent debtors and pay the proceeds into the Treasury, was not a bill for raising revenue. But it was not held by Mr. Justice Story, nor was there any authority furnished, that a bill to provide for a great system of customs duties was not a bill for raising revenue.

I think that the argument of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] upon this subject is conclusive. It is not for me to say at this time whether the bills can be amended or not; it is enough to consider that question when it shall arise. I hold for myself the privilege of voting as I consider proper when that question comes up; but this is clearly a bill for raising revenue.

Mr. ROBESON. We have two general classes or kinds of bills in relation to revenue recognized by our rules. The one is bills "raising" revenue, which committees have a right to report in a certain order to the House. I read from paragraph 47 of Rule XI:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: * * * The Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue.

That is one character of bills with reference to the revenue. We have another character of bills with regard to revenue which is a larger class, and made so by the injection of another and more comprehensive word. What are these bills? I refer to clause 4 of Rule XXIII, which determines what bills shall have precedence in the Committee of the Whole. There other language is used than merely the words "bills raising revenue."

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, &c.

It does not say "raising revenue," but bills "for raising revenue." This is the direct distinction and classification of the two kinds of bills in the very language of our rules. Now what is a bill "for raising revenue?" I hold in my hand Webster's Dictionary, and upon this point I will read from it. The word "for" means "with respect to," "in the direction of."

Now, all bills directly raising revenue may be reported from committees under certain rules. But when you go into Committee of the Whole a larger designation, a larger classification comes into operation; that is, a classification which includes not only "bills raising" but "bills for raising" revenue; that is, bills "in the direction of" raising revenue.

And the reason of the rule bears out that construction. Why is precedence given to these bills? In order that the Government may go on, no matter what intervenes. In order that, if there is a question of war or any great necessity for raising revenue, all measures looking toward, for the purpose of, or in the direction of raising revenue shall come up in the order of their precedence which is given in these rules.

Mr. McLANE. Will the gentleman from New Jersey do me the favor to give his attention to the fifth paragraph of Rule XXI? which is in these terms:

All bills for improvement of rivers and harbors and for the establishment or change of post-routes shall be delivered to the Clerk, &c.

Now, does the gentleman from New Jersey intend to say that because the word "for" is used in this paragraph in connection with river and harbor bills and post-route bills the meaning is all bills in relation to rivers and harbors, all bills in relation to post-routes, all bills "in the direction" of river and harbor improvements, all bills "in the direction" of the establishment or change of post-routes?

Mr. ROBESON. Undoubtedly, Mr. Chairman; undoubtedly. But that is not the question here. The question here is, what is meant when it is declared in one rule that the committee shall have certain privileges for bills raising revenue without the word "for," confining it to those bills directly, and when in another rule in the same code there is interjected another and enlarging word, making a more including class, by using the word "for," I say that the words "for raising revenue" are enlarging words which give precedence not only to bills raising revenue, but also to bills looking in the direction of, or for the purpose of, raising revenue.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me quite immaterial what view gentlemen may take of this question, whether this is a revenue bill or not. Some may think it is. My own opinion is that any bill providing a scheme or plan for taxation might come within the term revenue bill without any strained construction. But it is wholly immaterial practically whether you take that view of the question or not. This whole contest, all this debate, is upon the question of precedence. Now, by our rules a majority of this House can control as they please any question as to the priority of business; a majority of this House can take this bill up if they want to, whether it is a revenue bill or not.

Mr. SPRINGER. But unless this bill is entitled to preference as a revenue bill, we must take up each bill as we come to it on the Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS. Very well; that is so; we could almost have gone through the Calendar while we have been discussing this question. Practically there is nothing in it. If the majority of the House wanted to take up this bill they could have done so without raising this question. They could have laid aside the first bill in the committee and on coming back into the House could have laid it aside, and so on with another and another in the same way until they reached the bill they wished to consider. Thus we might have gone through at least twenty-five in the time that has been consumed by this discussion, for we have been nearly two hours at it. Practically, I repeat, there is nothing in the question. I do not care whether this is considered technically a revenue bill or not. I want it taken up and the principles involved in it discussed. This is what the country wants, too. It relates to the great interests of the people. There will not come before this Congress any question more important than those involved in the provisions of this bill. Some gentlemen perhaps want this question considered with a view to increasing tariffs or protection. I want the subject considered and discussed that we may get an opportunity to show how the laboring masses of the people of this country can be and should be relieved from some of the heavy burdens of taxation under which they are now suffering. It is for the majority to say whether they are in favor of devising these means of relief or not.

With these remarks I close. My object was mainly to say that practically there seemed to me to be nothing in this question which has given rise to this protracted discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, instead of this being a bill to raise revenue I think it is a bill to spend revenue, yet not being a "general appropriation" bill it is not a privileged bill. Instead of proposing to raise funds for the Government it proposes, as I understand, to pay nine gentlemen about ten dollars a day and their expenses, which will probably amount to a daily expenditure of at least $100.

Another view is that instead of being a bill to raise revenue it is simply a bill to raise a commission to make suggestions to this body. It seems to me analogous to a resolution calling on one of the Departments for its opinion upon certain subjects. Why, sir, at nearly every session of Congress we appoint a commission for some purpose or other. This bill proposes to do nothing else, and is therefore entitled to no precedence of other bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Before stating his decision the Chair will direct that the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a commission is hereby created to be called the "tariff commission," to consist of nine members.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint nine commissioners from civil life, one of whom, the first named, shall be the president of the commission. The commissioners shall receive as compensation for their services each at the rate of ten dollars per day when engaged in active duty, and actual traveling and other necessary expenses. The commission shall have power to employ a stenographer and a messenger; and the foregoing compensation and expenses to be audited and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and to thoroughly investigate all the various questions relating to the agricultural, commercial, mercantile, manufacturing, mining, and industrial interests of the United States, so far as the same may be necessary to the establishment of a judicious tariff, or a revision of the existing tariff, and the existing system of internal-revenue laws, upon a scale of justice to all interests; and for the purpose of fully examining the matters which may come before it, said commission, in the prosecution of its inquiries, is empowered to visit such different portions and sections of the country as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 4. That the commission shall report to Congress the results of their investigation, and the testimony taken in the course of the same, from time to time, and make their final report not later than the first Monday in January, 1883.

Mr. RANDALL. The Clerk has read the original bill without the amendments proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments recommended by the committee will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 of section 3 strike out the words "and the existing system of internal-revenue laws."

Strike out section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. That the commission shall make to Congress final report of the results of its investigation, and the testimony taken in the course of the same, not later than the first Monday of December, 1882, and it shall cause the testimony taken to be printed from time to time and distributed to members of Congress by the Public Printer, and shall also cause to be printed for the use of Congress 2,000 copies of its final report, together with the testimony."

Amend the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff."

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is made in Committee of the Whole that the bill which has just been read be taken up for consideration. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] that this motion cannot be entertained because the bill named has not precedence under the rules to the other measures upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair is under great obligations to the gentlemen who have spoken upon this point, and would have been very glad to have heard further in explanation of what is deemed to be the proper procedure under this clause of the rule. So far as the Chair has been able to find there has been no ruling on this clause heretofore, and while it may be deemed to be one of great importance in the character of the subject, the Chair is only bound to rule upon the language before the committee in clause 4 of Rule XXIII, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds on inspection of the bill, in the first instance, that it provides for a commission called the "tariff commission;" that in the second section it gives the number of such commissioners, provides for their salaries, and the payment of such officers and assistants as may be provided. In the third section the duty of such commission is prescribed. It is to take into consideration and thoroughly investigate all the various questions relating to the agricultural, commercial, mercantile, manufacturing, mining, and industrial interests of the United States so far as the same may be necessary to the establishment of a judicious tariff, or a revision of the existing tariff; and for the purpose of fully examining the matters which may come before it such commission in the prosecution of its inquiries is empowered to visit such different portions and sections of the country as it may deem advisable. The fourth section provides that the commission shall make to Congress final report of the result of its investigation at certain times prescribed in the bill.

The Chair finds in the memoranda of the bill it was introduced and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means January 9, 1882, and on February 8, 1882, was reported back with amendments, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Reference has been made in the course of the debate to a certain clause of the rules in order to assist a proper decision. Rule XI provides:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: subjects relating to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Under clause 4 of the same rule committees are given leave to report at any time on matters therein stated. The Committee on Ways and Means is authorized to report on bills raising revenue.

In clause 6 of Rule XXI there is a provision for the call of the yeas and nays on the passage of revenue bills. Then clause 4, which has been read, has been submitted to the committee.

The single question the Chair is called on to decide is this: Is the present bill one entitled to precedence under clause 4 of Rule XXIII in its consideration before the Committee of the Whole? If it is entitled to such precedence it is entitled because of the language of the rule, and that language is "bills for raising revenue."

The Chair would suggest no light is thrown on the subject, in his judgment, by the citation of Rule XI regulating the submission of certain matters to the committee. Nor, again, is any help derived by the rule which relates to the report of the committee. Plainly the consideration of those is quite immaterial at the present moment.

Is this a bill for raising revenue? It is a bill to instruct a commission to investigate the various great interests of the country and to report the result of these investigations to Congress.

It will be noticed the language of the fourth clause is not bills relating to revenue; it will be noticed it is not subjects relating to revenue; nor is it revenue bills, but bills for raising revenue. In other words, to carry out the provisions and power expressed in the Constitution authorizing Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, and imposts. The Chair understands the words "bills raising revenue" to mean bills laying taxes, authorizing duties and imposts within the provisions of the Constitution; and the Chair believes that that is the proper construction of this rule.

The question is one simply of the precedence of business. The other questions which have been alluded to as of great importance, the problem whether or not in certain stages of consideration amendments might be offered, are not material to this discussion of consideration. It is sufficient to decide those when they are reached.

But the Chair believes that the purpose of the House in adopting the rule in the clause named was to specify certain bills which should have consideration before others.

Now, it is not to be understood of this class of bills that they are bills relating to these subjects. As an instance it may be recalled: In the Forty-fifth Congress a bill was under consideration which afterward became a law for the appointment of the Mississippi River commission, providing for their duties, salaries, and report. True the ultimate object was something that should result in the improvement of the Mississippi River; but the Chair is of the opinion it could not be claimed that bill in itself was a bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and therefore entitled under the same clause to have consideration in precedence.

It is of no assistance that we find this bill in the Committee of the Whole, because it is sufficient to say it has gone to the Committee of the Whole plainly for the reason it provides for a charge on the public Treasury.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order, and rules this bill has not precedence under the rule for consideration at the present time.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the ruling of the Chair with reference to this bill, unless otherwise instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means, I shall attempt to reach it in another manner, and give notice that I shall hereafter move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and proceed in the regular way, laying aside previous bills on the Calendar until we reach this bill and shall then ask the House to take it up for consideration. I hope that will be satisfactory to both sides of the House in view of the importance of the measure.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VALENTINE. I now move, Mr. Chairman, to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4466, making appropriations for the Agricultural Department, it being a general appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4463) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. VALENTINE. It now being somewhat late, and so much of the day having been spent in the consideration of the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the bill has been read by its title, and the first business in order would be the reading of the bill, unless by consent the first formal reading be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. VALENTINE. I should like, Mr. Chairman, to pass this bill as soon as possible; and I do not believe it necessary that any general debate should be entered into upon the bill, it being simply an appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department. I am advised, however, by some gentlemen present that they would like to be heard upon this or a similar bill, and I desire to say to them that there is a special order of the House for the 25th instant, when we will proceed to the consideration of the bill for the elevation of the Agricultural Department, and if my friends will reserve their speeches upon the question until that day, I think we can go along with this bill without any discussion and pass it at once. If there is any disposition on the part of members present to discuss the bill, or if any gentleman present should choose to debate it, I shall feel it my duty to ask the committee to rise for the purpose of determining that question. If, however, there are none who desire to speak upon it, then I hope we will proceed by consent, under the five-minute rule, to consider the bill, and I hold myself in readiness to answer any questions that may be asked by members as we reach the different sections.

Mr. AIKEN. If in order I move to amend the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and move that four hours' general debate be allowed upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that the motion to limit debate could not be entertained in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VALENTINE. If there is a disposition to debate the bill I shall move that the committee now rise for the purpose of going into the House.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, have I an opportunity to address some remarks directly to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VALENTINE. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. I am recognized. The gentleman yielded the floor and I am not disposed to yield until I have finished my remarks. I will not detain the House but a few moments. I think a half hour will be sufficient.

Mr. VALENTINE. I have moved that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. RANDALL. The motion to limit debate could not be entertained in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VALENTINE. But my motion is that the committee rise and go into the House, for that purpose.

Mr. AIKEN. I hope the Chair will give me an opportunity of being heard on this bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. If the gentleman desires to debate the bill he will have an opportunity.

Mr. AIKEN. I intend to discuss the bill if I have to offer an amendment to every clause of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to preserve the rights of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. AIKEN. The gentleman from Nebraska is depriving both the Chair and myself of the opportunity of proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the rights of both gentlemen. The Chair understood the gentleman from Nebraska as stating that he did not wish to discuss the matter himself. The gentleman from South Carolina then rose and claimed the floor. The Chair recognized the gentleman from South Carolina under the impression that the gentleman from Nebraska did not desire to proceed.

Mr. VALENTINE. I desired, as I stated, if any gentleman present wished to enter upon the general debate, that we should go into the House and determine that question, and therefore I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. AIKEN. I believe that I have the floor. The gentleman from Nebraska has attempted to throttle me and others, and I do not propose that it shall be done. The Chair has recognized me, and I respectfully ask to be heard. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will not deprive me of the privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs leave to protect the gentleman from South Carolina by saying that he now has the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, it is neither my purpose nor desire to criticise this bill, for though I do not approve some of its provisions, it has received my indorsement, and will receive my support in its passage through the House. But I do desire to call the attention of the House to two or three of its clauses. Under the caption "purchase and distribution of seeds," (line 91,) $80,000 are appropriated for this purpose, an amount too small to enable the Commissioner to execute the law correctly, because, of necessity, at least one-half this amount must be expended in the distribution. In another portion of this same paragraph it is ordered that "an equal proportion of one-half of all these seeds, roots, cuttings," &c., "shall be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress;" so that one-half of every variety of seeds, plants, shrubs, bulbous roots, or other articles purchased must be divided into at least 377 separate parcels. Section 520 of the Revised Statutes, organizing this Department, declares that it shall be the duty of the Agricultural Department "to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants." Now, Mr. Chairman, if any new variety of seeds or plants should be purchased by the Commissioner in this or any foreign land for distribution, one-half the amount purchased must be divided into 377 equal parts to enable each Congressman to have some one of his constituency assist in testing its value. In my judgment it would be wiser to allow the Commissioner to distribute all these seeds to practical farmers, recommended to him, if you please, by members of Congress, so that tests could be made upon a larger scale and experiments conducted in a manner worthy of reports as to results. True, if seeds are scattered in a sort of broadcast, hap-hazard way over the country, though the larger portion may fall upon stony ground, some few may be sown in good soil and bring forth an hundredfold. But I feel assured, if their distribution were delegated to a fewer number of persons and the experiments made upon a larger scale, far better results would be obtained, and the agricultural public would be much more materially benefited.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why it should be the duty, the privilege, or the pleasure of a member of Congress to distribute seeds of any sort to any person. I do not doubt but that every Congressman is sufficiently circumspect to be familiarly acquainted with the most successful farmers in his district, even though said district be situated in the midst of one of our large cities; for who knows every man he meets, or even those he never met before, better than a member of Congress, particularly when grave results are anticipated on the first Tuesday in the following November? Why, sir, these diminutive little seed-bags, containing perhaps the one-three-hundred-and-seventy-seventh pint of some rare and valuable seed, botanically known by some unpronounceable name, doubtless familiar, however, to the member of Congress, are potent to effect results in the future. They are as effective as the famous tissue-ballots, which after having served the term of a patented existence (seventeen years) in Yankee-land, is reputed to have sought an extension away down in Dixie.

I make the assertion, Mr. Chairman, without the fear of contradiction, that not a member on this floor has ever purposely distributed his proportion of these seeds to those who were the most deserving, and further, that no member has ever refused them to parties applying, even though he knew they were not sowers of seed. Hence my belief, Mr. Chairman, is that the intent of the law has not been fulfilled by the mode adopted of purchasing and distributing seeds through the Department.

Under this same caption there is a paragraph which reads thus:

For experiments in connection with the culture and manufacture of tea, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture, $5,000.

An appropriation of $5,000 was made for a similar purpose for the year ending 30th June, 1881, and another of $10,000 for the year ending 30th June, 1882. What portion of this $15,000 has been expended I am unable to say. I find, however, in the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture of 25th November, 1881, the following itemized account of expenses incurred by his predecessor in attempting to prepare, at least to grow, if not to manufacture tea in this country, to wit:

Surveying, $225; furniture, $116; iron safe, $365; wagon and harness, $252; salaries, labor, expense account, &c., $3,377.11; total,, $4,335.11.

It seems that the former commissioner located the site of his future tea manufactory in the State from which I come, and down there these expenses were incurred. The present commissioner reports to the President that—

In order to ascertain the precise condition of the experiment being carried on in South Carolina, I directed on July 9 Mr. William Saunders, the horticulturist of the Department, to proceed to Summerville, and to examine the premises and to report upon the work.

Mr. Saunders executed his mission and made his report, which I, as his friend, regret he ever submitted, for it is full of living prejudice, vented spleen, and distorted facts. For instance, Mr. Saunders says, "the land leased by the Department consists of two hundred acres, most of which is covered with a heavy forest growth," and almost in the next breath says, "the soil is a poor, hungry sand," and "of a character to support only the scantiest kind of vegetation." He further reports that—

In a general way it may be stated that since 1st July, 1880, $15,000 have been appropriated by Congress for the encouragement of tea culture. So far as is visible to the ordinary observer the only practical palpable result of expenditures from this fund is what is to be found and what has been done on this farm.

Thus creating the impression that the Government had expended $15,000 there. Whereas, Mr. Chairman, if the items reported by the present Commissioner are the only expenditures made upon this farm (and he reports none other) the $5,000 appropriation made by the Forty-fifth Congress has not yet been exhausted, and the $10,000 appropriation made by the Forty-sixth Congress lies untouched in the Treasury. The climax of this report, however, is contained in the following paragraph:

The position may be fairly represented as follows: Having every reason to conclude that the locality near McIntosh, Georgia, is too far north for the production of teas which possess sufficient of strength and pungency to command the best prices, or even profitable prices, it is therefore considered proper to try the experiment at Summerville, South Carolina, which is one and a half degrees further north.

McIntosh, Georgia, is alluded to because the agent employed by the former Commissioner discovered an old tea plantation there which he cleaned up and cultivated for one year, when, Mr. Saunders tells us in his report, he plucked five crops of leaves, manufactured tea from them, and delivered the manufactured article in the market at a cost of twenty-five cents per pound. There is nothing in this that looks like failure.

Influenced, however, by this unfortunate and inconsistent report, the present Commissioner further reports that—

Acting on this advice, I have disposed of all the animals except one horse; have removed a large portion of the outfit to Washington, and have employed one person, whose duty it is to look after the growing plants.

It will be remembered that Mr. Saunders visited South Carolina in July, when every section of the State was suffering from an unprecedented drought, and when the most fertile sandy loam appeared as mere dry dust, so that it was impossible for him from a mere casual inspection of the soil to accurately assert whether or not the soil or climate was adapted to the remunerative cultivation of the tea plant. But in December last a representative of a tea house in Baltimore visited this same farm, and reported as follows:

SUMMERVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA, December 16.

"Where there is smoke there is fire." General Le Duc and his tea farm have been the subject of many jokes by the Northern press, and it was to ferret out the true inwardness of the matter that I made a visit to the Government tea farm, three miles from here and twenty from Charleston. The "farm" is under the charge of Mr. Charles Vardell, a gentleman to whom much credit is due for his labors under the most adverse circumstances. He afforded me every opportunity of finding out just what was there and what was not.

The general—and when I say general I refer to the late Commissioner of Agriculture, General W. G. Le Duc—selected this particular place not so much because it was a good one for tea culture, for there are better, but because it was easy of access, and above all a fashionable resort for the people of Charleston during the summer. Then he made what appeared on the face a most advantageous bargain, for a large landowner leased him for twenty years two hundred acres for the nominal sum of one dollar, which dollar the general had specially coined for the purpose, to be handed down, no doubt, as an heir-loom. At the end of the lease all the improvements, &c., are to become the property of the landlord.

The place itself is historic, and was the country seat of the first colonial governor. It has about thirty acres of cleared land; the rest is forest, which the general was to clear up and plant in tea. In the center of the cleared land are the ruins of the old mansion, destroyed by fire during the Revolutionary war, and near by a "lake" about one hundred by forty feet, having no outlet, and really a stagnant pool, inhabited by a solitary yet historic alligator.

The preparations for the "tea farm" commenced with the clearing out of the rubbish that covered the old foundation of the mansion, with a view of reconstructing it "just as it was," also historic, while the oldest inhabitants were hunted up and consulted as to what they thought the mansion was like. Whether these accounts were so at variance as to cast doubts over the legend and the mansion itself, or whether the discovery that were the mansion reconstructed no white man could sleep there during summer and escape the fever, is a mooted question; but certain it is that the general gave up the idea and left the ruins to their fate, while as a substitute a novel plan to escape the dreaded malaria was devised. A platform was to be erected sixty feet from the ground, upon which was to be built the "bungalo," after the idea of the India tea gardens, and quite historically correct, from whose dizzy heights the commissioned officers of the "farm" could complacently look down on the malarial ghosts vainly striving to climb to the "bungalo." Unfortunately this experiment was never carried out, and no one now knows whether a malarial goblin can climb a sixty-foot pole or not. But the "grand boulevard" was commenced, it was to come from the depot, three miles away, in a straight line, very wide and imposing, to cross the "lake" by an ornamental iron bridge and go under the bungalo. Great live-oak trees were removed out of the way, no chopping down with an ugly stump left standing, but Government contract style, grubbing them up roots and all, and when a sufficient quantity of this very valuable timber was collected, a big fire was an easy way of removing it. So the "improvements" went on, and the landlord's heart was joyful.

Last March, when the tea seeds arrived from India, they were planted in the "nursery," part of which was in good soil and part in bricks and mortar. Those that fell in pleasant places have grown marvelously, and are to-day two feet high. Even those in the brick and mortar grew, and are in witness of the hardihood of the plant and what it will stand.

But alas! the general was not to be made a Cabinet officer, nor was he even to retain the place of Commissioner, and when he was replaced by Dr. Loring, that very clear-headed man of business naturally looked at the sum total of cost, and then at the tea plants. It was an easy calculation to find out how much they cost apiece, and the sum was hardly reconcilable to their value. The truth was, the doctor could not see the "improvements," could not realize the advantage to tea culture that a reconstructed colonial mansion, historically correct, with an avenue three miles long, would bestow. So he sets his foot on the whole business. He stopped the "improvements," and, as it were, put the garrison on bread and water. Now the Government tea farm lies dormant. The people here are all anxious to have the experiment tried, while the landlord is most indignant, and threatens dire vengeance on the authorities for putting an end to the general's improvements.

What will be the result of the experiment under Government patronage is hard to say; but one thing is very certain, that the tea plants are thriving in a way that we never see surpassed in China or Japan, and that the leaves will make tea equal in every respect to any grown in the world I have had the best of evidence. But will it pay? Perhaps not with the general's "improvements."

Now, Mr. Chairman, are we to be thwarted in our efforts to develop an industry because of the extravagant folly of an official? The former Commissioner doubtless had magnificent ideas upon the subject of Government improvements, but this was perhaps because of his political rearing, for he was a member of that party that claims to be progressive in all things and which stigmatizes economy as parsimony. But, Mr. Chairman, he has gone, and let his follies be forgotten if not forgiven. We have now, perhaps, a better man at the helm, and history is repeating itself.

More than one thousand years ago the tea plant was cultivated in China and Japan, and less than a century ago it was unknown in British India. In 1840 the East India Tea Company commenced the culture of tea in Assam, and in a very few years they had expended lavishly and recklessly in the enterprise more than $1,000,000, and when upon the verge of bankruptcy they were unable to induce the London merchants to buy their teas. A lack of pungency, not properly manipulated, inferior to the Chinese teas, were the objections urged to the East India importations in the home market. But English pluck and British perseverance were not to be deterred by such flimsy arguments; their manipulation was improved, their process of manufacture was perfected, and to-day Assam teas are higher-priced in the markets of the world than the teas of China or Japan, and nearly 40,000,000 pounds of them were imported into Great Britain last year from Assam, while scarcely a pound of it came to this country. And yet, sir, we paid to foreign merchants, chiefly English, over $21,000,000 in gold for teas brought principally in English bottoms from China and Japan to the United States.

No, Mr. Chairman, we should not hesitate to appropriate liberally annually for the development of this new industry, for its prospects are favorable, far more so than was the development of cotton culture a century ago, and yet we export annually over $200,000,000 worth of raw cotton and consume one-third as much in our home manufactures. It was once contended that cotton could not be successfully grown north of a degree of latitude which to-day is not far from the center-line of this great industry. Sir, within my own recollection it was an accepted conclusion that cotton could not be remuneratively cultivated in the upper portion of my own State. In 1850 the four counties of Oconee, Pickens, Greenville, and Spartanburgh scarcely produced a thousand bales of cotton each. In 1881 they exported over 50,000 bales, and have within their confines as many cotton factories as are in the remainder of the State, having erected a half dozen since the war.

Mr. Chairman, tea is a foreign product for which we pay annually more than $21,000,000, and it passes our custom-houses without let or hinderance. I would not have it dutiable, for my confidence in southern soil, southern labor, and American ingenuity and enterprise induces the belief that we can grow tea, free tea, in successful and remunerative competition with China, Japan, or British India. But, sir, if protection were asked for it would not be granted, for the policy of the American Government is not to protect the farm laborers, who in the aggregate more than quadruple all the other American laborers engaged in any and all other American productive industries combined. All productive labor is either agricultural, commercial, or manufactural. Of these three, considered in a national point of view, agricultural labor has never received a bonus from the Government. The other two have from infancy lived, moved, and had their being in the public crib. Too much fostering care, too much nursing by a paternal Government, too much national pap have stifled, surfeited, or otherwise crippled our commercial enterprises. But we are not left without hope, for (I was about to say) a wet-nurse (the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads) is on hand with an appropriation of $2,500,000 to subsidize some commercial firm to carry our mails to foreign countries. Why not open the door, Mr. Chairman, to competition on the high seas as well as on land, and let the contract to the lowest bidder? This would be the agricultural, but perhaps it is not the commercial method of inaugurating a new industry, or reviving a lost one.

However, another adjuvant (the Committee on Naval Affairs) comes with a proposition to appropriate $10,000,000 to begin with, confident that in a few years we will possess a navy of ironclads, gunboats, and torpedo boats with which we could, if occasion required, batter down the heights of Gibraltar, blow England into the German Ocean, and command the peace of the world.

But what has all this to do, Mr. Chairman, with an appropriation of $5,000 to experiment with in establishing a tea farm? Much every way. It displays the contrast between the monetary protection given by the Government to agriculture and commerce. That is all; nothing more. But why speak here of our commerce or our Navy? Virtually we have neither, and if money will restore either or both, let them have it. As a farmer, however, I feel it incumbent upon me to expose this favoritism. We speak of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures as handmaids of each other, the three constituting a symbolic trinity of the first nation in the world to-day. Heretofore our Government has not fostered agriculture. We have protected commerce to death; and we have thrown riches in the lap of manufactures until this third handmaid has become the mistress of the land. Why, sir, manufactures no longer ask aid at the hands of the Government; they simply lay hold upon protection and retain it until they exact in one shape or another hundreds of millions of dollars annually from the pockets of the people for the benefit of a mere brigade of men. Would that I had the time now and here to review the history of our varied manufactures. It would be pleasant for me and profitable for this House. It must suffice, however, that for a few moments I trace the origin and progress of but a single one of them. To be concise I shall confine my remarks to the iron industries of the single State of Pennsylvania and state simply facts, incontrovertible facts, taken chiefly from the statistical reports from the Census Bureau, of the iron and steel protection of the United States.

Just two hundred years ago William Penn wrote of the existence of iron in "divers places" in the province of Pennsylvania. Within fifty years from that date the iron industry was firmly established, and tons of pig-iron were exported to the mother country. At once the ever-vigilant iron manufacturer of England snuffed competition in the western winds, and apprehending danger appealed to Parliament for protection. (What imitative creatures we are, Mr. Chairman!) The appeal was heeded, and that august body decreed that "the plantations should not even manufacture iron wares of any kind out of any sows, pigs, or bars whatsoever;" and that any person venturing to erect any furnace or forge in these colonies should forfeit the sum of £200 of lawful money of Great Britain.

But, Mr. Chairman, a day of reckoning for such oppressive legislation came, and in the course of time these colonies rebelled—(is that the word?)—yes, rebelled, and during their rebellion furnaces were erected, and forges were lighted thickly along the valleys of the grand old Keystone State. As investments they became handsomely remunerative, because the demand for shot and shell and manufactured iron far exceeded the supply. Men were needed for the Army, and laborers were wanted for the "iron-works," and neither demand could be adequately supplied. But that immaterial individual known as the "genius of our institutions" was abroad in the land, and hesitated not to invent a method of keeping the furnaces in full blast, even though every citizen should be drafted to replenish the decimated ranks of the Army. Shot and shell, too, must be had at all cost. Prisoners of war were abundant and to spare. The aforesaid "genius" was competent to the task of supplying the demand on the one hand and reducing the redundancy on the other. "While others shouted for liberty he voted for slavery." Barter and exchange was his idea, and our great Government, then in its swaddling clothes, accepted the proposition, set a monetary value of £30 upon the head of every German soldier captured in the English army, and at that valuation exchanged them as laborers with the iron manufacturers for an equivalent in shot and shell. Shades of departed statesmen! is this not enough to make the great apostle of human liberty and civil rights (Thad. Stevens) lie restlessly in his grave, because this Government in his State, and almost at his very home, resorted to the cruelty of selling human beings, or of exchanging them as chattels for munitions of war?

But, Mr. Chairman, times have changed since then. Civilization has advanced apace, old things have passed away, and many things have become new. The echo and re-echo, however, of the iron manufacturer's howl for protection has not been lost in the din of his own superior and unsurpassed rolling-mills. The cry is still heard, "Save me, Cassius, or I sink."

No sooner had our independence been secured than the appeal for protection by the mother country from the colonies was transferred to an appeal for the same boon by the States to Congress against the mother country. The first plea was infant industry; next, protection against foreign manufacturers; and, finally, the slogan of elevation of labor was sounded, and is a continual din in our ears to-day.

Mr. Chairman, most of our industries have grown to manhood, powerful, athletic manhood, and cannot pretend to dread foreign competition. But, sir, they are as timid as a maiden lest their intelligent, thrifty, courteous laborers may be degraded by the competition of the vulgarly called pauper labor of Europe, and especially of England. The iron manufacturer of the United States proudly boasts of the condition of his labor, and of the wages paid each laborer. Why should he not, Mr. Chairman, when the people, and not he, pay all, and more than all, of these wages? Let us apply to statistics on this point:

During 1880 there were 3,781,021 tons of pig-iron produced in the United States, of which Pennsylvania produced 1,930,311 tons, or 57 per cent. of the total. The duty on pig-iron is $7 per ton, and hence upon this single product protection enriched Pennsylvania to the amount of $13,512,177.

During the same year the United States produced 2,353,248 tons of rolled-iron of all kinds, 46 per cent., or 1,071,098 tons of which were produced by Pennsylvania. The duty on rolled-iron is 1¼ cents per pound, or $25 per ton. Consequently protection on rolled-iron favored Pennsylvania that year, and as much annually, to the amount of $26,777,450.

In 1880 there were produced in the United States 985,208 tons of Bessemer steel ingots. Of these Pennsylvania produced 56 per cent., or 556,314 tons. The duty on Bessemer steel ingots varies from 2¼ cents per pound to 3½ cents per pound with 10 per cent. ad valorem added. Giving this great State the benefit of any doubt as to the quality of her production, and estimating her protection upon the lowest rate of duty, (which every one very well knows she is not entitled to;) but for argument's sake, granting that protection favored her only to the amount of 2¼ cents per pound, or $45 per ton, and she is chargeable under this head with $25,034,130.

In 1880 there were produced in the United States 84,302 tons of open-hearth steel ingots, of which Pennsylvania produced 44 per cent., or 37,092 tons. Rating the duty here as in the above case of steel ingots at $45 per ton, when perhaps much of it received a duty of $50, $60, $75, or even $80 per ton, and Pennsylvania's share of protection was $1,669,140.

Of crucible steel there were produced in 1880 in the United States

76,201 tons, of which Pennsylvania produced 79 per cent., or 60,303 tons. At the same rate of duty, $45 per ton, Pennsylvania is protected to the amount of $2,713,635.

In 1880 there were produced in the United States of blooms from pig and scrap iron 34,924 tons, of which Pennsylvania produced 24,446 tons, or 70 per cent. of the total. The duty upon this product is 1 cent. per pound, or $20 per ton. Here, too, then, Pennsylvania was protected to the amount of $488,920.

In 1880 there were produced in the United States of all kinds of rails 1,217,497 tons, and of these Pennsylvania produced 569,912 tons, or 47 per cent. Of iron rails Pennsylvania produced 157,213 tons, upon which there is a duty of 70 cents per 100 pounds, or $14 per ton. Hence, from this source Pennsylvania received protection to the amount of $2,200,982.

In 1880 there were produced in Pennsylvania 409,339 tons of Bessemer steel rails, upon which there is a duty of 1¼ cents per pound, or $25 per ton. Here again Pennsylvania received protection to the amount of $10,233,475.

In 1880 Pennsylvania produced 3,360 tons of open-hearth steel rails, upon which she received a protection of $25 per ton, or $84,000.

In 1880 there were produced in the United States 252,830 tons of cut nails, upon which there is a duty of $30 per ton. Of these Pennsylvania produced 75,849 tons, or 30 per cent., which yielded her a protection of $2,275,470.

Mr. Chairman, these figures are startling and will bear repetition; so allow me to recapitulate, itemizing the total product of the United States, the total duty, and Pennsylvania's share of each. In the United States in 1880 there were produced as follows, in tons:

Pig-iron, 3,781,021; tariff, $26,467,147; Pennsylvania's product, 1,930,311; protection, $13,512,177.

Rolled iron, 2,353,248; tariff, $58,831,200; Pennsylvania's product, 1,071,098; protection, $26,777,450.

Bessemer steel ingots, 985,208; tariff, $44,335,360; Pennsylvania's product, 556,314; protection, $25,034,130.

Open-hearth steel ingots, 84,302; tariff, $3,792,590; Pennsylvania's product, 37,092; protection, $1,669,140.

Crucible steel, 76,201; tariff, $3,429,045; Pennsylvania's product, 60,303; protection, $2,713,635.

Pig-iron blooms, &c., 34,924; tariff, $698,480; Pennsylvania's product, 24,446; protection, $488,920.

Iron rails, 466,917; tariff, $6,536,838; Pennsylvania's product, 157,213; protection, $2,200,982.

Bessemer steel rails, 741,475; tariff, $18,536,875; Pennsylvania's product, 409,339; protection, $10,233,475.

Open-hearth steel rails, 9,105; tariff, $227,625; Pennsylvania's product, 3,360; protection, $84,000.

Cut nails, 252,830; tariff, $7,584,900; Pennsylvania's product, 75,849; protection, $2,275,470.

Total tariff on iron products in 1880, $70,440,060; Pennsylvania's share, $84,989,379.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully ask, out of whose pockets came these fabulous sums to enrich the few iron manufacturers of the United States? But let us look a little farther and investigate if we can the subject of enhanced wages.

We have no means of estimating the numbers engaged in exhuming the iron ore from mother earth. Those digging, delving, hard-working fellows are not sufficiently well paid, nor perhaps of sufficient intelligence, to be worthy of enumeration by the Census Statistical Bureau. But that other class, that well-paid, well-fed, highly-favored set who have the privilege of working in the iron manufactories of the United States, are reported as numbering 140,978, and to each of these is paid as his annual wages the average sum of $393.51, or a total amount of $55,476,785, or a little over one-third the total amount paid by the people to the employers in the shape of protection. Or, in other words, the iron manufacturers pay their laborers $55,476,785 annually, while the people pay through protection to these iron manufacturers $70,440,060. And the State of Pennsylvania, receiving through protection $84,989,379 upon her iron production, is paid a bounty of $29,572,594 by the consumers of her products over and above the total amount of wages paid annually by all the iron manufactories of the United States to all of their employés. Is it any wonder, then, Mr. Chairman, that our iron manufacturers are able to pay large salaries to laborers? And still less is there cause for surprise that iron manufacturers are protective-tariff men, regardless of any other phase of their political creed?

But, Mr. Chairman, there is one aspect of this subject that does provoke my surprise, and that is that any sane man should attempt to prove or should even assert, as we have had it asserted, repeated, and reasserted several times in the same speech since the assembling of the present Congress, that 90 per cent. of the manufactured products of our country is labor. Strange infatuation! Unless figures lie, and unless our census statistics are a fraud, the bounty paid by the tariff to the iron manufacturers alone of the single State of Pennsylvania is more than 50 per cent. in excess of all the wages paid by all the manufacturers of iron in all parts of the United States.

But, Mr. Chairman, let us examine another phase of this kaleidoscopic subject. In 1880 the aggregated capital invested in iron and steel industries in the United States was $230,971,884. Of this amount $106,247,066, or 46 per cent., were invested in Pennsylvania. What the market value of the annual product of this permanent investment is I have no means of knowing, but I do know that, be it what it may, it is enhanced in value by protection to the amount of $70,440,060, or 70 per cent. upon the capital invested throughout the United States, and 85 per cent. upon the investments in Pennsylvania. Vulgarly the bondholder is denominated as bloated because he pays no tax upon his investment. What shall we style the man whose investment is annually enhanced in value nearly 100 per cent. by the bounty of the Government? Wise as serpents are these iron-clad protective-tariff men, for they have cajoled both their employés and this great Government into the belief that the tariff is an institution founded expressly for the protection of the laboring man. Suppose these laborers, imbued with that spirit of rebellion which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] told us yesterday he had seen manifested in his State in opposition to the supervision required by our system of internal taxation, were to strike for a co-operative distribution of the earnings of their own labor, think you, Mr. Chairman, it would amount to no more than 35 per cent. of the bounty paid these manufacturers by the Government? In agriculture labor is frequently estimated as half the value of the product. In iron manufactures it is less than 35 per cent. of the bounty of the Government, and yet it is claimed to be 90 per cent. of the value produced. The assertion really seems farcical.

Mr. Chairman, how insatiate is the greed of humanity! Not content with their already dazzling incomes through the bounty of the Government, these iron men are attempting to increase, and doubtless will increase, the tariff upon that class of manufactured iron in which is included "cotton ties," a description of iron that affects the pockets of the greatest number of the poorest laborers of this country. These laborers are, however, all farmers, who seldom feel the helping hand of a paternal Government. The duty on cotton ties some years ago was 70 per cent. ad valorem. For some reason, not pertinent at this moment, this duty was reduced to 35 per cent. ad valorem, which is about three-fourths of 1 cent per pound. The bill familiarly known as the McKinley bill proposes to restore the 70 per cent. tax or increase the duty three-fourths of 1 cent per pound. Certainly such a tax is only a mite when imposed upon an individual farmer, but what is it when aggregated upon a cotton crop numbering millions of bales? Each bale usually has six ties around it and they weigh ten pounds, hence the levy upon each bale is 7½ cents. The crop of 1882 will doubtless aggregate 6,000,000 bales, and hence the tax on the 36,000,000 ties that bind them will amount to the sum of $450,000. Now, sir, if this amount could be collected at our custom-houses and be then covered into the Treasury, not a farmer in the South would complain of the tax. But when we know from past experience that it will all go, or at least $449,000 of it, into the coffers of less than a half dozen cotton-tie manufacturers of this country, we can but denounce the proposition as an effort to rob the many for the benefit of the few.

But, sir, the cotton farmer is blandly told he should not complain, for inasmuch as he buys these ties at 2½ cents per pound or less by retail, he sells them around his bales at the net price of cotton, 9, 10, or 11 cents per pound. This plausible argument does not warrant an unjust tax. But however plausible the proposition, it is not true in fact. The price of cotton in the South is regulated by the price in New York, and the price in New York depends upon the price in the English market, which is graduated by speculation and not by supply and demand. If this Congress would or could impose the penalty of the hangman's rope around the neck of every man who dealt in what is known technically as "cotton futures," positive and direct protection would be given to the cotton planters in so far as they are defrauded by the gamblers of New York and elsewhere. But from the influence of the Liverpool market they can never anticipate protection, for English cotton buyers schedule the price of cottons as if every purchase were made of the net lint. A standard tret is deducted from every bale as it is weighed, which is an absolute loss of twenty pounds to the bale, the weight of the bagging and ties, and this loss falls directly upon the producer. Hence an increased duty upon the cotton tie would be a direct tax upon the farmer for the benefit of the manufacturer.

Mr. Chairman, there is another feature about the iron industries of our country worthy of attention. Iron manufacturers never admit that a reduction of the tariff will injure their investment; they always assert that it will completely destroy them. Away back in 1785 the iron manufacturers of Pennsylvania petitioned the General Assembly to prevent the importation of foreign iron by a prohibitory tariff, "or there would be a total stoppage and destruction of that very useful and beneficial manufacture" in that province. From that day to this the echo of that appeal has been reverberating through these Halls, growing louder and more potent as time rolls on. A few years ago, when the duty on cotton ties was reduced from 70 to 35 per cent. ad valorem, we were assured that there would be manufactories closed up and laborers with dependent families thrown penniless upon an uncharitable world, and great suffering in consequence. That gaunt specter the pauper laborer of England was to step right in and impoverish our cotton-tie manufacturers. Alas, for these prophets, results warranted no such anticipations. On the contrary, the factories were kept busy almost night and day, the price of cotton ties to the farmer were reduced in price more than the reduction of the duty, and nobody seems to have been injured.

But, sir, this cry of "destruction to the enterprise if you reduce the tariff" seems peculiar to the vocation of manufacturing. When in the Forty-fifth Congress the duty was removed from quinine we were assured the manufacturer's occupation was gone. High-priced quinine, adulterated quinine, no quinine at all were the prognostics of the future given us by the quinine monopolists at that time. But what are the facts in the case? Two months before the repeal of that duty quinine sold in this city at $5 an ounce, for I bought it at that price. Subsequently I bought it at $4.25. A year ago I bought it at $3.50. Since then it was sold for $3, and to-day can be bought for $3.25. We have heard of no consequent suffering, Mr. Chairman, nor of adulterated quinine, and the factories are at work, and receiving all the net earnings their labor deserves.

As with cotton ties and quinine, so it would be with pig-iron, Bessemer steel, cut nails, or any other industry now too highly protected by our tariff laws. Do not understand me, Mr. Chairman, as advocating the repeal of the tariff in toto. Certainly in this late day, when we are oppressed with that internal system of taxation which Mr. Jefferson doubtless characterized and denounced in stronger language than that attributed to him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] and when we are burdened with a heavy national debt, no reasonable man would desire to see the one repealed, the other entailed upon posterity, and our custom-house doors thrown open to foreigners to the detriment, if not destruction, of all home manufactures. I imagine such a proposition never entered the brain of the most extreme free-trader. But I do not doubt but that a majority of the thinking men of our country have contemplated and do desire a reduction of the tariff upon most of our manufactured articles. In my mind it is apparent that no protection should be given any article beyond that which would place the producer upon an equal footing with the foreign producer in the home market. For instance, 100 pounds of East India rice can be delivered in our custom-houses for $2.90. It costs our home producers of rice $4.33 to place a like quantity in our home market. The difference is $1.43. To that extent I would protect the rice planter of my State and no more. The present tariff on rice is $2.50 per hundred pounds. This is $1.07 more than the difference in the cost of production here and production abroad, and just that much more than it ought to be, because it is taking by law from the consumer of 100 pounds of rice $1.07 for which no earthly equivalent is given in return. And the same rule would hold good, Mr. Chairman, with all other protected articles, and, sir, I am sanguine that with this reduction our manufacturers would not shrink from competition with all other nations, nor with the "Ishmaelite of nations."

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, if there are no other gentlemen present who have tariff speeches to make on this bill, I would like to proceed to its consideration. My colleague on the committee I supposed would speak on the bill, but, as is usual on appropriation bills, he went away, and now I would like to proceed with its consideration. Before doing so I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND.]

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I have not much to say on this bill myself. I do not know who does desire to say anything on the bill; but I have an authority which I would like to present before the question is decided—a short excerpt from a very learned opinion. Judge Bleckley, in the sixty-third Georgia reports, delivered an opinion, two or three sentences of which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In that stage of litigation, even when the merits are clearly against the losing party, he should have such mental satisfaction as he could derive from having finished his speech. He should not be slaughtered with his address warm in his bosom, alive and undelivered. His case being finally and forever lost, with his argument unheard, he would feel perhaps, and sometimes justly feel, that the outrage of deciding without hearing him was greater, far greater, than the calamity, than the adverse decision itself. He might get justice, but with it a wound from the court more painful than any justice which the court could administer; for it is not impossible that a suppressed speech may occasion more mental torture than a lost case. The anguish of having something to say and wanting to say it, of feeling that you have a right to say it, and of being cut off by a peremptory exercise of authority is, no doubt, intense. Even a child will chafe under it, however inured to the habit of obedience.

[Laughter.]

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I ask the gentleman from Nebraska now what we ought to do?

Mr. VALENTINE. I think, in consideration of that decision, I ought to yield the floor. I will move, however, that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to limit debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. TURNER.]

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if any interest should be fostered, it is the agricultural interest. Agriculture is the fountain of our prosperity and greatness; it is the home of manly virtue and the school of true patriotism. All of our Presidents but two and most of our orators and statesmen have received upon farms their early training. It is there that their strong sinews, their manly forms have been developed; it is there, breathing the pure air of heaven and surrounded by the works of nature, removed from vice, that they have learned those lessons of virtue, patriotism, and honesty that have controlled their after life and made them useful during their lives and respected after death.

But, sir, so far from the American Congress fostering agriculture, they have by their legislation oppressed the farmer by unjust laws, compelling him to pay large and enhanced prices for nearly all he consumes and denying him the right to reap the full fruits of his labor by selling his products or exchanging them in the best markets of the world, and all for the purpose of enriching the manufacturers at the expense chiefly of the farmers, who comprise over half of the population of this country. And this iniquity is perpetrated by what is known as the "protective" or Morrill tariff, which I believe to be nothing but legalized robbery of the great mass of the people to enrich the few, under the pretext of "protecting American labor." And to this subject I shall invite the attention of this House in the few remarks which I shall now offer.

Mr. Chairman, the great principle underlying our Government is "equal rights to all, exclusive privileges to none;" yet no people ever submitted to such oppressive taxation as we do, not to support the Government but to enrich a small class who have put their capital in manufactories. I have no objection to a revenue tariff to support the Government, economically administered. This is the democratic doctrine that would be constitutional and right. But, sir, as was aptly and truly said the other day by Senator COKE, of Texas, in his able speech in the Senate—

> Those who favor a protective tariff and for twenty years past have oppressed the producers of the country with the most extreme protection of the favored interests demand protection against foreign competition without reference to revenue; claim a right to protection per se and make protection the object and purpose of impost duties and revenue merely the incident. Thus the issue is joined between those who favor a revenue tariff and those who demand protection, which, while destructive of revenue, lays under most onerous tribute to comparatively few the labor and earnings of the vast population of this country. The time has come for an appeal to the enlightened judgment of the country upon this great issue, and for the people to determine whether or not they will longer bear the great burden which is impoverishing them and building up an aristocratic class to whom they must pay tribute. If they would be relieved of this thralldom, this serfdom to privilege and class, they must arouse from their lethargy and demand of their Government that the good old doctrine of "equal rights for all, exclusive privileges for none," be enforced in its administration. This Government has been so long dominated by the influences of associated and incorporated capital that it will be found no easy matter to shake them off. The power to exact tribute from fifty millions of people, inhabiting the finest country on earth, which they now possess, will never be surrendered without a struggle as earnest, as determined, and as obstinate as the stake involved is grand and magnificent. The masses of the people must come to the rescue, must be heard and felt if they would be emancipated. They must act in their primaries, in their precinct, county, and State conventions, and give expression and emphasis to their demands, so that no man will dare misrepresent them. All the power of money and the lobby will be brought to bear to defeat tariff reform and to rivet the shackles of tribute upon them, and they alone can save themselves. Their enemies are organized, trained, backed by unlimited resources, full of courage and confidence, and only a great popular demand can defeat them.

Every word of what he said is as "true as holy writ." The people must investigate this question for themselves, and when they understand the injustice of this so-called protective system they must rise in their majesty and shake off the shackles that have made the farmers of the great West and South slaves to enrich the manufacturers. They must fill the legislative halls of Congress with men who will trample under foot the monopolies which are controlling the legislation of this great country, and wringing from the farmers and laborers $2,000,000,000 annually, not for revenue, but a bonus to manufacturers, by this unjust tariff.

Mr. Chairman, it is the great question of the day. It is one in which every honest laborer and agriculturist is interested, whether he is a Democrat or a Republican, white or black. It is an issue from which I do not shrink, and the Democratic party must not shrink if they want the confidence of the people and if they are true to their past platforms and principles with which we have in days gone by marched to victory. The people all over this great country demand relief, and speedy relief, from this serfdom which is grinding us down every day, and making us poorer in spite of our economy and industry, as I will now proceed to show very briefly.

Mr. VALENTINE. I rise to a question of order. I do not think it is in order under the rules of this House to make tariff speeches on a bill making appropriations for the Agricultural Department. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky is not in order in the speech he is now addressing to the Chair.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I will say upon the question of order, although I do not want this discussion to come out of my time, at the last session of the Forty-sixth Congress the gentleman will recollect that I have illustrious examples set me on this very question. When the agricultural appropriation bill of last year was under discussion Mr. Frank Hurd, of Ohio, spoke for one hour on the tariff, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] now chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, on the other side of the House, replied in a lengthy speech; and I do not see why I should be cut off and limited, especially when it is in the line of argument for me to show the protective tariff is against the interest of the farming class of the country, and that this bill does not furnish the relief that is adequate and proper.

Mr. VALENTINE. This bill would furnish just that relief to the farmers which it was in the power of the committee under the rules of the House and existing law to grant; and I hold it is out of order for any member to speak on the tariff question while this bill is under consideration. I desire the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule on this question. The Chair does not see in what way he can anticipate what the gentleman from Kentucky has to say. So far as the gentleman has as yet proceeded the Chair does not see wherein he is out of order.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I think the Chair will find before I get through that all I have to say is relevant. Mr. Chairman, the tariff system under which we have lived for the last twenty years is the highest and most unjust toward the great mass of our people that ever has been known in the history of this or any other country. It was enacted at the commencement of the war to fill the Federal Treasury, as it was contended, and to strengthen the sinews of war. It was an opportune time. The people were excited and, I might say, had almost lost their reason, and it was seized upon by the manufacturing capitalists to enrich themselves at the expense of the farmers, doctors, merchants, laborers, and artisans; and now, sir, although the war ended sixteen years ago, they try to perpetuate this system, unjust as it is, by all sorts of deceptive arguments and influences by the rules of this House and through the action of the Committee on Ways and Means, as I will show before I get through to the satisfaction of every fair-minded man.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. My colleague [Mr. TURNER] yields to me to make a motion that the committee now rise. If the committee should now rise he would have an opportunity of concluding his remarks to-morrow.

Mr. WHITE. I object. I would like to hear my colleague through on this interesting subject of the tariff.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] for a speech.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were—ayes 66, noes 75.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Mr. VALENTINE. I hope the gentlemen on the other side will not occupy time further. Let the gentleman proceed with his speech.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not insist on the call for tellers.

So the motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look at this question calmly and impartially. What is the total value of the commodities imported into the United States from foreign countries upon which a tariff duty is imposed? It is $448,061,587.95. What is the total amount of tariff duty imposed upon that amount by the Morrill tariff—the one now in force? One hundred and ninety-three millions eight hundred thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven dollars and sixty-seven cents; which is an average of 43½ per cent. What is the total amount of goods consumed in the United States upon which a tariff duty is collected? According to the census of 1870, it was $4,000,000,000. I could not procure from the Census Office the exact amount now, as the tables are not completed; but, according to the ratio of increase it is about five billion dollars. Now, reducing the average duty to 40 per cent., which is more than a fair calculation, it makes the amount of enhanced value by reason of the tariff duties imposed, $2,000,000,000, which is a bonus. Thus it will be seen that the manufacturers receive the enormous bonus of $2,000,000,000, so that the consumers pay annually into the Treasury $193,800,897.67 collected under the tariff, and pay a bonus to the manufacturers of $2,000,000,000 in addition; thus showing that for every dollar collected under the tariff which goes into the Treasury, ten dollars go into the pockets of the manufacturers.

These figures are appalling, but they are nevertheless true; and from this it can readily be seen why it is that manufacturers are reveling in wealth and luxury everywhere in the East. Millionaires, with incomes of $50,000 and $100,000, are so common that they hardly attract attention. Lordly palaces are seen on every hand. Their owners ride in splendid carriages, and their tables are loaded with the luxuries of every land. They own millions of bonds. National banks abound. How is it in the West and South? With the richest country in the world, with close economy, with children kept from school at home to work, indulging in no costly luxuries, riding in no fine carriages—at the end of each year our farmers can barely make the ends meet after paying their taxes.

And, sir, this has been going on for over half a century. No wonder that you see the fine cities, colleges, and everything that is grand and costly in the East. But where, sir, did the money come from that produced this result? From the pockets of the toiling masses of this country; out of the honest farmers, lawyers, doctors, and laborers of the West and South, who have paid their yearly tribute to these lordly masters of millions of dollars, collected in violation of justice and the Constitution of our country, by this iniquitous tariff system, for it all comes out of the pockets of the consumer; and not only the tariff duty but the cost of transportation across the ocean with the profits of the merchant, as can be plainly demonstrated.

A foreign merchant brings from Europe a hat, a pair of shoes, he pays the tariff duty at the custom-house, and then offers them for sale in this country—what does he ask for them? He adds to the cost in Europe the transportation across the ocean, his profits, and then adds the tariff duty. The merchant from the West or South who buys in the East has all this to pay, he brings them home, adds on his profits and the transportation from New York, and sells them to the farmers and consumers. Then they have all this to pay; they buy the hats, the shoes, and other dutiable goods and wear them out. Out of their pockets, then, comes the whole amount at last. Sir, this is bad enough, but this is not where the shoe pinches. It is insignificant compared with the bonus paid the manufacturers. How do they collect their bonuses? Simply by putting their goods up to the price of the foreign article, adding on the tariff duty, the cost of transportation across the ocean, insurance, and profit, all of which the consumers have to pay. Thus the consumers have to pay this bonus of two billions to the manufacturers to put $193,800,897.67 into the Treasury.

To make it still plainer, a man in New York goes into a hat store of imported hats, he buys one—what does he pay for it? He pays the cost in Europe, transportation, profit, and the tariff duty, say $2. This $2 goes into the Treasury. He crosses the street and buys a hat made in Massachusetts—what does he pay for it? Why the same price, because the Yankee has added on the tariff duty. Then the $2 goes into the Yankee's pocket instead of into the Treasury, and so it is with 2,000 articles upon which the tariff duties are imposed. How long will the American people stand this robbery?

Mr. VALENTINE. I rise to a point of order. I want to know if the Chair has yet determined whether the gentleman from Kentucky is making a speech on this appropriation bill or a tariff speech.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will wait until I get through he will find I will apply the whole argument, and show the bill he has reported does not benefit the agriculturists to any great extent, and is wholly inadequate. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, of the $193,000,000 of tariff duty collected and paid into the Treasury upon foreign importations of goods, $133,580,347.88 are collected on six articles, as follows:

Sugar and molasses	$47,984,032 84
Wool and woolen goods	27,285,624 78
Iron and steel, and manufactures of	21,462,534 34
Silk	19,038,665 81
Cotton goods	10,825,115 21
Flax and linens	6,984,374 90
Total on the six articles	133,580,347 88

Now it requires all the duty collected on the balance of the dutiable articles, which are 1,994, to make up the other $60,000,000 of duty which goes into the Treasury simply because the tariff duty on all these other articles is so high that but little is imported. The tariff are almost prohibitory, and the manufacturer can charge what he pleases on these 1,900 articles.

Such is the injustice of this tariff, formed not for revenue, but to rob the farmers and other consumers for the benefit of the manufacturers, I might say, "only."

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look at iron rails that are used to build the railroads to facilitate the bringing of our produce from the far West and South to markets. Bessemer steel rails in England are worth $30 to $35 per ton. The tariff duty is $28 per ton. The price in the United States is $67.50 per ton. Amount used in 1880 that were made in the United States 1,112,690 tons. The bonus collected by the manufacturers on this article alone will be seen to be $31,155,320. Out of whose pockets does most of this bonus finally come? Chiefly, sir, out of the pockets of the farmers, in charges upon their grain and produce, tobacco, cotton, and stock that is transported on these roads, for it is not lost by the railroads, but added on annually in their charges in freight and travel.

One of the most odious features of this tariff is that the necessaries of life and the articles used by the poor are taxed the highest, as will be seen from the following items, a few of which I have selected. Thus, discarding fractions, we see that while cut glass glitters on the table of the man of wealth at a duty of only 4 per cent., the common window glass that lets the light into the poor man's cottage is taxed 59 per cent. The soft velvets and laces of the rich are taxed only 60 per cent., while the common flannel to protect the shivering invalid, the strong workingman and his wife, the aged people from the freezing blasts of winter, are taxed 95 per cent.; coarse blankets are taxed 104 per cent. by this unequal tariff, while fine broad-cloth is only taxed 55 per cent.; medicines to alleviate the pain of the sick and suffering are taxed all the way from 30 to 220 per cent., while raisins, figs, and fancy confections are taxed only 58 per cent., and champagne wine, 46 per cent. An inspection of the tariff will show that the poor people of the country pay more than double the rich, because the duties are higher on the articles consumed by the poor laboring class of the country.

Mr. Chairman, let me invite the attention of this House to the fact that 78 per cent. of the population of the United States, or 39,000,000, are consumers not engaged in manufactories, and only 22 per cent., or 11,000,000 all told, are engaged in manufactories. This includes the families of the operatives. Now, sir, of this 22 per cent. not more than 3 per cent. get the immense profits from manufactures and these immense bonuses, because the operatives have to live; they consume the necessaries of life, upon which the tariff duties are imposed, like other laborers. And, although nominally they may be receiving good wages, yet their wages are taken out of their pockets by the enormous duties imposed upon their clothing and the necessaries of life. The capitalists who own the manufactories are the only beneficiaries under the tariff. They are pocketing an annual profit of from 20 to 60 per cent., and the poor operatives are bled by the tariff in common with the farmers of the country. Why should 45,000,000 people be taxed under the tariff laws for the benefit of the capitalists who see proper to run manufactories that are fully developed and competent to sustain themselves in fair competition with Europe, especially when they have the ocean between them, across which most of the raw material has to go and then to come back, after it is manufactured, before it can be offered for sale here? The manufacturers have no moral or equitable right to claim bounties or bonuses from farmers, merchants, lawyers, doctors, mechanics, and laborers to enrich them. If the reason ever existed, it does not now exist.

A continuance of the tariff further than is required for revenue is simply the taxation of the whole people to add to the wealth of the few, to build up a favored aristocracy in this country in violation of the spirit of our republican institutions. I protest against it, sir, in the name of justice and the people whom I have the honor to represent.

Now, let us see, sir, the proportion of capital and the number of persons engaged in agriculture and in manufactories. Total value of farms in United States, as shown by the census of 1880, $10,197,094,805; total value of farming implements, $406,522,364; total value of live stock, $1,500,494,607; total in agriculture, $12,104,111,776,

The farmers are not realizing more than 3 or 3½ per cent., while the manufacturers are realizing from 30 to 60 per cent.; that is, the capitalists, who have their money invested in manufactories, not the poor operatives; they share the same fate as other laborers.

Mr. VALENTINE. If the gentleman has anything to say on the bill, I will be glad to hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. REAGAN. It has always been considered in order to discuss any question of public interest in Committee of the Whole. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. WHITE. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Not at present.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask the gentleman——

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not desire the thread of my argument shall be interrupted. When I get through I will be ready to answer any question any gentleman may address to me.

Mr. WHITE. I only wish to ask one question. [Cries of "Go on!" from both sides.]

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Sir, is it just? Is it right that the agriculturist of this country should be discriminated against in this manner? Where is the protection given our labor? There is none. The honest farmer asks none; but he does demand equality under the law, and he has a right to it. Sir, I have been a farmer all my life, and I have felt and understood the burdens under which we labor and the injustice done the farmers of the country, and the doctors, lawyers, artisans, and laborers of the land.

Here is a statement showing a few of the burdens of the farmer: under this tariff he rises in the morning, puts on his common flannel shirt taxed 95 per cent.; his coat, taxed 57 per cent.; shoes, taxed 35 per cent., and hat, taxed 92 per cent.; takes the water from a bucket taxed 35 per cent. and washes his face and hands in a tin bowl taxed 35 per cent.; dries them on a cheap cotton towel taxed 45 per cent. He sits down to his humble meal and eats from a plate taxed 50 per cent., with knife and fork taxed 35 per cent.; drinks his coffee with sugar taxed 68 per cent.; seasons his food with salt taxed 69 per cent.; pepper, taxed 61 per cent. He looks round on his wife and children all taxed in the same way; takes a chew of tobacco taxed 199 per cent. or lights a cigar taxed 118 per cent. And, sir, even the sunlight from heaven that pours into his humble dwelling must come through window-glass taxed 59 per cent.; and yet he thinks he lives in the freest government under heaven. Then he starts to work; puts a bridle taxed 35 per cent. on his horse, and takes his horse that has been shod—the nails used in shoeing being taxed 59 per cent., driven by a hammer taxed 20 per cent.—and hitches him to a plow taxed 45 per cent. with chains taxed 58 per cent.; and after the day's labor is closed and his family are all gathered around, he reads a chapter from his Bible taxed 25 per cent. and kneels to God on an humble carpet taxed 51 per cent.; and then he rests his wearied limbs on a sheet taxed 45 per cent. and covers himself with a blanket that has paid 104 per cent. Nor do these grasping manufacturers stop here, but even the broom with which his good wife sweeps the floor is taxed 35 per cent., and the cooking vessels used in preparing her husband's frugal meal are taxed 42 per cent., and the soda used to lighten his bread taxed 59 per cent. She sits down to her sewing with a needle taxed 25 per cent. and a spool of thread taxed 74 per cent. to make a calico dress taxed 58 per cent.; or if she wishes to knit warm socks to protect her husband and children from the bitter cold she uses yarn taxed 120 per cent.; and thus daily and hourly must the hard earnings of the laborer go to satisfy the manufacturer and add to his ill-gotten wealth. [Great applause.]

Mr. WHITE. That is a yarn.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. My colleague says it is a yarn. If he will take the trouble to go down to the Bureau of Statistics and investigate the records there he will find I have taken these facts from the statistics furnished by Mr. Nimmo, the chief of that bureau.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman now yield to me for a question?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not now. I was merely replying to the gentleman's side remark.

But, sir, we are told that this tariff system is necessary to protect American labor and industries; under what clause of the Constitution of our fathers do gentlemen find the power and the right to tax the honest farmer—to take from him the fruits of his hard labor and put it in the pocket of the manufacturer—to enhance the value of his labor? Give us equal rights. You have no right to tax 45,000,000 of our people to enrich 5,000,000—no, only one and a half million—for the operatives do not get the profit or bonus. You live in a country abounding in the raw material—the iron, coal, cotton at your very doors. The broad ocean, across which the manufactures of Europe have to come, give you all the protection you need or ought to have. You have been protected in your infancy; you have grown to manhood—and do not keep up your cry for "protection." You have most of the banking capital; you have the bonds, you got them for 40 cents to 60 on the dollar, and in God's name you ought to be satisfied. If manufactories will not pay, why you have no right, legal or moral, to tax others to keep them up. But, gentlemen, you know that they will pay, you know that they ship plows to England and machinery of various kinds and sell them lower than they do here, and then make a fair profit. You know that while we only make 3½ or 4 per cent. in agriculture your iron lords are realizing 30 and 60 per cent. and that you are making an average of over 30 per cent. on all manufactured commodities, but you are not satisfied, and the American people will have to rise in their might and assert their birthright to be free. The shackles of slavery have been struck from the African, yet you hold in slavery the white men of the country, the toiling masses, and compel them to pay you tribute on the necessaries of life and deny to them the right to exchange the fruits of their labor for the commodities they need in the markets of the world. It is an outrage.

But, Mr. Chairman, I may be asked how is this unjust tariff system kept up? In the first place, it was enacted, as I said before, during the war under a false pretense to fill the Treasury, and ever since then it has been kept up by "rings and cliques" who were in the interest of the manufacturers and monopolists, and who sent members here who have disregarded the interest of the farmers and consumers in many instances. They have not represented the interest of the great mass of the people. Then these capitalists fill the corridors of this Capitol and the hotels with lobbyists, all in their interests. The honest farmers in the country are at home; they have neither the time nor the money to spend in coming here to see to their interests, and it is disregarded by members who are true to the interests of the capitalists who had them nominated in conventions in which the great mass of the people had no voice. And, lastly, any reform in this tariff has been prevented by the rules of this House, in this way: every bill has to be referred under the rules to a committee, and no vote can be taken on it until the committee reports the bill back to this House either favorably or unfavorably. Many bills have been introduced looking to relief from this odious tariff by various members. I have introduced several myself during the Forty-sixth Congress and at this session. What became of them? They were referred under the rules to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that committee, in violation of every rule, in violation of the spirit of the rules of this House, have pocketed these bills and refused to report them in any way at all, either favorably or unfavorably, and thus they have prevented a vote upon these bills of relief to the people.

I offered bills to abolish the tariff duty on all agricultural implements, a bill to repeal the tax on leaf tobacco, a bill to put trace-chains on the free list. What has become of them? They sleep the sleep of death in this star chamber, and there is no power under the rules of this House to resurrect them. There is no way to force this committee to do its duty—to force them to report these bills. They fear a vote on them. Why do not they report back these bills with an adverse report if the committee is opposed to them? Because they would then go on the Calendar and we could have a vote on them. Members would be then brought face to face with their constituents, and they would have to vote for these bills or an indignant constituency would consign them to private life, and send men here who would represent their true interest. Look, Mr. Chairman, for example, at the bill to put trace-chains on the free list. Upon trace-chains there is a duty of 58 per cent., which amounts to almost a prohibition, for the whole amount of revenue collected upon trace-chains, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Revenue, is only $1,500 in a year. Yet it is an article used by every farmer in the land and every teamster, and by virtue of this tariff millions go into the pockets of the manufacturers of chains every year as a bonus. Can any man doubt that if we could get a vote on the bill to put trace-chains on the free list it would not be done by a large majority in this House? Would any member representing an agricultural district face his constituents on the record and vote against that bill which would give the farmers cheap trace-chains? It would do the Treasury no harm, because the revenue is only a mere pittance, $1,500; and yet, sir, I introduced that bill during the Forty-sixth Congress, and the Ways and Means Committee had that bill during the last two sessions of the Forty-sixth Congress, and have had it ever since the first bill day of this Congress, when I introduced it again, now two months ago, and will not make a report of the bill, either favorable or unfavorable, because it would then be in the power of a majority of this House to vote on this and similar bills.

Mr. Chairman, is it not an outrage upon the rights of the people that such an abuse of power should exist and yet no remedy provided against it; for there is none, unless you could get a two-thirds vote and pass a bill or resolution under a suspension of the rules. But, sir, a majority ought to rule in a republican government, but it is powerless here. A majority can not unlock the jaws of that committee and force from it the many bills that have been referred to it for the relief of the farmers and consumers of this country. Seeing this defect in the new rules when they were reported two years ago from the committee that formed the new rules of this House, I offered an amendment to force a committee to report on a bill after they had had it for thirty days and refused to report it back to the House, by putting it in the power of the member offering the bill to move to discharge the committee who had had it thirty days and to give the House the right to vote on the bill, when a majority could pass it if they thought proper. But, sir, that amendment was defeated after it had been advocated by myself and others, as will be seen by a reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of second session of Forty-sixth Congress, page 1085 to 1089. Who defeated it? Why, the protective-tariff men. Those men that are willing to tax the masses to enrich the few. They were the men who voted against the amendment for this evil that exists to-day and puts it in the power of any committee to defeat the will of a majority of the Representatives on this floor simply by refusing to report back a bill referred to them. Sir, ought such an outrage to be tolerated in a free country, a land of boasted freedom, when seven men in the Congress of the United States can prevent the passage of a bill giving the people relief, although a large majority may be ready to vote for the bill? It is worse than despotism. It is damnable; and yet it is the case.

It is right this House and the country should understand this question, and therefore I have attempted to expose it to-day in the hope that a remedy may be provided to force a committee to report a bill back to the House when it has been referred to them. Personally, I like and respect the members of that committee; but, sir, I felt that it was my duty to expose this grievance that rivets upon the people this odious tariff and prevents any action to modify or repeal even parts of it. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the tariff commission, as it is known. I regard it like an affidavit filed in a criminal case, merely for a continuance of a bad cause. It will merely delay the modification of the tariff. It is the duty of the representatives of the people to act upon this question and not delegate it to a commission. We had the electoral commission, and the country was shocked at its decision. [Laughter on the Republican side.] We want no more commissions to do the duty of Congress. A committee of this House can examine into the question and make its report as is done in regard to every other matter, and that is what would be the result even if we had a commission: its report would have to be investigated by this House at last, after the loss of time that a commission would cause. Nothing would be gained by it, and I believe it is simply for delay—that the manufacturing capitalists may continue to rob the masses to enrich themselves. I hope that we may proceed to modify this tariff and that it may be done at this session, and I am willing to stay here until it is done, and that relief given to the tax-ridden people that they ought to have had years ago, and which I believe a new Congress fresh from the people will give them.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. By permission of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. TURNER,] I make a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. VALENTINE. I hope not. The gentleman from Kentucky has still about fifteen minutes. Let him go on and conclude his remarks. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, there were—ayes 47, noes 73.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. As soon as I get through I will hear the gentleman's question with pleasure.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in regard to the point I have endeavored to make plain as to the effect of these rules, I have sought to get the floor for the last two years on that question. But you all know the difficulty we have under the rules in seeking to discuss any question. It does seem to me there is no man on this floor, although he is a protective tariff man, who would be willing to trample under foot the principle I have contended for and put it in the power of seven men on a committee to violate the rules of justice and fairness by pocketing and withholding a bill so as to defeat the voices of the representatives of American freemen. Does not every member know the practical operation of the rules are such as I have pointed out? I have asked the oldest parliamentarians in this body and they say there is no remedy for it.

I endeavored to have the rules amended in this respect two years ago. The question was discussed on this floor, and, as I have said, by the vote of the protective men this amendment was defeated and the power was left in the hands of seven men in the committee to hold any bill introduced for the purpose of revising the tariff; there is no power to get it out of their hands or to obtain a vote of the representatives of the people upon it.

Is it right? Is it just? Could any man face his people and his country and pretend to defend it? I think not. The fact is, the attention of members has not been called to that question. It is an evil that has not been understood. I am not the only member who has felt its effects and whose constituents have suffered from it.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman yield now for a question?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. In a moment. There are other members on this floor who have offered bills similar to those that I have offered, looking to the relief of the people from taxation. Yet those bills are in the hands of that committee, and it refuses to report them to the House. Why do they not report them, even if they do so unfavorably, and let the House say whether they should be passed or not? Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DUNNELL. Did the gentleman attend the Democratic caucus yesterday? [Laughter.]

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I would like to say——

Mr. DUNNELL. It is understood that the Democratic caucus yesterday voted not to allow any change of the present rules of the House. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not understand that there was any such decision as that made by the caucus. I do not know what the proceedings of that caucus were. I heard part of them and then left. [Laughter.] But I have this to say to my friends on the other side, that if the caucus passed any resolution or order that would allow the minority, after they have had an opportunity of being heard upon any public measure, to defeat the will of the majority of the House, I do not indorse the action of any such caucus. But my information is that no such action was taken in the Democratic caucus——

Mr. WHITE. Will my colleague now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. My information is that no such question was before the caucus. It is a question which I have desired to bring before Congress ever since I have been a member. I tried to bring it up when the new rules were adopted.

Now, if you offer a resolution to amend the rules it shares the same fate. It is referred to the Committee on Rules, and never comes back to the House. It dies there, and you can never resurrect it so as to get a vote of the representatives of the people on this floor, unless a majority of the committee are in favor of it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Allow me to suggest to my colleague that, so far as his reference to the Committee on Rules is concerned, we have not had much encouragement to bring reports into this House; for every one that has been brought in so far has been rejected. [Laughter.]

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I believe that is so, and I think it is a good thing that it has been so. [Continued laughter.] I do not believe they have brought forward any measure that looked to the relief of the people.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would call the attention of my colleague to the fact that no one of the majority side of the Committee on Rules is present to defend the rights of that committee.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not desire in any remark I have made to censure my colleague from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] because he stood by me in the fight two years ago on the amendment to the rules, to give the majority on this floor the power to force a bill from the hands of the committee and to unlock its doors so that the House might vote to give relief to the people.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman that he have the Clerk read the resolutions adopted by the caucus yesterday.

Mr. WHITE. Before we proceed to discuss the caucus I desire to ask my colleague a question on the subject that he has in hand.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] yield the floor?

Mr. WHITE. Before the gentleman yields I desire him to fulfill the promise that he made to answer a question.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Will not the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I am engaged in answering another gentleman.

Mr. WHITE. I supposed that my colleague would keep his promise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not yield.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I want to give my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] an opportunity on this floor to vote on this question of tariff reform, so that he may put himself on the record before his constituents, and let them know whether he agrees with me or not. Then we will see whether he will come back to this House or not.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly after that attack on me the gentleman will allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I made no attack on the gentleman. The gentleman intimated before I had spoken ten minutes that I was not representing the people of Kentucky, and I am only replying to that intimation.

Mr. VALENTINE. I think that, as the war has been transferred from Ireland to Kentucky, we had better call "time."

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I will yield for the reading of the resolutions of the caucus.

The CHAIRMAN. As a part of the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. VALENTINE. I think the time of the gentleman has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to state that the gentleman was subjected to two or three interruptions——

Mr. VALENTINE. By his consent.

The CHAIRMAN. And two different votes were taken in the time of his remarks.

Mr. VALENTINE. He gave way for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time so occupied does not come out of his hour.

Mr. VALENTINE. It ought to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will allow the gentleman two or three minutes more.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I ask the Clerk to read the resolutions adopted by the caucus yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this caucus the amendments to the rules of the House of Representatives proposed by the majority of the Committee on Rules are destructive of those just rights and necessary privileges of the minority which a Democratic majority in former Congresses never denied to Republican minorities, and that we will resist their adoption by every parliamentary method at our command.

Resolved further, That we will cheerfully support any amendments to the rules of the House which tend to promote their improvement, the proper facilities of public business, and are not destructive of the rights of the minority and of the people they represent.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. As I have only two minutes more, I will say a word in regard to the bill now under consideration [great laughter] and the relief to which we farmers of the country are entitled—the kind of protection that we want. We merely want equality and justice under the law. As I said at the last session of Congress, when a bill similar to this was under consideration, I regard appropriations of this kind as merely a tub thrown out to tickle the whale. As to the few seeds that are sent through the country, under the appropriations made here, we can buy better seed for a quarter of a dollar at any seed store. I do not, therefore, consider these appropriations of any great benefit. It pleases the people to get these seeds, and it is a step in the right direction, but how far does it go? I do not think it comes up to the demands of the country.

Our friends on the other side are very liberal when this bill comes up. One of them said to me the other day, "We will give you as many seeds as you want; we will increase the appropriation as much as may be necessary." I do not care a baubee about the appropriation being increased; that is no material benefit. Unless the object is the introduction of some valuable plants or seeds from some foreign climate, which may be found adapted to this country, the distribution of seed is of very little use. The introduction of the sorghum cane no doubt benefited the American people largely, because it is now raised all through the West; but as to the radish and bean, and lettuce and turnip seed, half of them will not sprout anyhow. [Laughter.] To send them out among the people is merely taking money out of their pockets for nothing. They can buy better seed at the seed stores, and the amount is so few, twenty-four packages to the county only, that it amounts to nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I would be glad if Congress would remain in session until we can reform the tariff thoroughly and give to the people the relief that is proper and that they ought to have had years ago.

Mr. Chairman, I thank this committee for the attention they have given me, and you, Mr. Chairman, for the just decisions you have given on the points of order that were made to cut off my remarks, which I would not have made at this time except for the fact that the tariff-commission bill has been to-day postponed, and there is no telling when it will come up again, and I preferred to avail myself of the first opportunity to present my views on the tariff to this House, and on the questions of relief that are proper and not afforded by this bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4466) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the Committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 578) to authorize the erection of a statue of Chief-Justice Marshall; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 80) in behalf of the American Company of Revisers of the New Testament for return and remission of duties.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OATES, for twenty days, on account of important business;

To Mr. FORNEY, for ten days, on account of important business;

To Mr. WALKER, until Friday next, on account of the death of a friend; and

To Mr. WATSON, for ten days, on account of important business.

CATTLE DISEASE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting an open letter addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, by Mr. Cloete, of the colony of Good Hope, in relation to cattle disease; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF NEW BUFFALO, MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Major J. A. Smith, Corps of Engineers, furnishing the information called for by resolution of the House of Representatives relative to the condition of the harbor of New Buffalo, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS BY MISSISSIPPI FLOODS.

Mr. MOORE. I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution No. 45, to authorize the Secretary of War to use hospital tents for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River, be taken from the Speaker's table for immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken up and read a first and second time. It is as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to use the hospital tents now possessed by the War Department, so far as may be necessary, to furnish temporary shelter to the destitute people who have been driven from their homes by the present overflow of the Mississippi River.

Mr. CHALMERS. In connection with this resolution I would like to have a telegram read.

The SPEAKER. There are several telegrams at the desk in relation to this subject.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let them all be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, these telegrams will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The telegrams are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1882.

To Hon. J. Z. GEORGE, United States Senate:

I have telegram from Governor Lowry, asking for one hundred (100) tents to be sent to Greenville, Mississippi. Many whites and blacks congregated there and no shelter. The telegram stating that you will explain situation. I have authority to issue tents. We have no tents but in use, except twelve hundred (1,200) hospital tents, a capacity for sixteen people each, nearly all at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Some of these could be issued if Congress gives authority.

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE, March 7, 1882.

To Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS, Hon. WILLIAM R. MOORE, Hon. H. E. JACKSON:

The great suffering brought to our notice by the inhabitants of counties in Tennessee bordering on the Mississippi River, occasioned by the overflow, calls loudly for assistance from the Government. What Memphis has done or can do will be inadequate. We urge you to obtain authority to have rations purchased here for immediate distribution in order to save persons from actual starvation. Some three thousand to five thousand are in absolute need, and must be helped immediately.

NAPOLEON HILL,
President Cotton Exchange.
D. P. HADDEN,
President Taxing District.
M. BURKE, R. C. GRAVES,
Commissioners Taxing District.
W. J. SMITH,
Surveyor of Customs.
J. T. PETTIT.
LEWIS HANANERS.
C. P. HUNT.
W. F. TAYLOR.
J. W. DILLARD.
H. M. NEELY.
J. M. GOODBAR.
J. A. HARGES, JR.
A. D. LANGSTAFF.

GREENVILLE, MISS., March 7, 1882.

To J. R. CHALMERS, M. C.:

Negroes from surrounding country are congregating here in a destitute condition. Hemingway cannot furnish tents. Get Secretary of War to order tents to this point to shelter one thousand people.

NATHAN GOLDSTEIN,
President Board of Supervisors.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOORE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Mr. PEELLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4995) giving additional salary to the deputy commissioner of pensions and the chief clerk of the Pension Office for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1882; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. VALENTINE, (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAYNE: The resolutions of the Book Trade Association of Philadelphia, protesting against the passage of the bill to remove the duty on newspapers, periodicals, and magazines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHACKELFORD: The petition of 150 citizens of Onslow County, South Carolina, for an appropriation for the survey of White Oak River and Bogue Sound, in said county and State—to the same committee.

By Mr. SHELLEY: Papers relating to the claim of Robert Otis, administrator of the estate of Roger A. Hiern—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WILLIAM G. THOMPSON: Memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, recommending an appropriation for the improvement of the Missouri River between Sioux City, Iowa, and the junction of the Mississippi River—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the joint resolution of the Legislature of Iowa relative to the Des Moines River lands, and asking relief for the settlers thereon—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. M. R. WISE: The petition of W. B. Hubbs and 50 others, ex-soldiers, and of Alexander Davenport and 38 others, for the establishment of a soldiers' home at Erie, Pennsylvania—severally to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 8, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 45) to authorize the Secretary of War to use hospital tents for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 578) to authorize the erection of a statue of Chief-Justice Marshall; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 80) in behalf of the American Company of Revisers of the New Testament for return and remission of duties.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a very large number of petitions, I think nearly one hundred in number, from different parts of the State of Ohio, signed by farmers and others engaged in the manufacture of cider and cider vinegar, praying for the repeal of so much of the act of the last Congress as permits the use of vapors of alcoholic spirits in manufacturing vinegar. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also present a large number of petitions on the same subject to the same purport from citizens of Indiana. I move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of a large number of merchants of New York City, urging the passage of a bill looking to the termination of the reciprocity treaty with the Sandwich Islands at the earliest practicable moment; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of Edmund H. Martin, of Tennessee, praying that his claim for the proceeds of certain cotton be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Edmund H. Martin, of Tennessee, surviving partner of the firm of Richardson & Martin, praying that a claim for the proceeds of the sale of certain cotton be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of citizens of Texas, praying for the passage of a law to regulate interstate commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MAHONE presented a petition of the State Temperance Alliance of Virginia, representing 5,000 members, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present a petition of merchants of the city of New York, praying for legislation for the relief of all those engaged in the importation and refining of sugar, and for a modification of the reciprocity treaty with the Sandwich Islands. The petition is also indorsed by a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, passed on the 2d of March last. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of 2,425 citizens of the State of New York, praying for reform in the civil service; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. JONAS presented the petition of Sarah A. Biggs, of Louisiana, praying that her claim for the proceeds of certain cotton be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Mary A. Martin, of Louisiana, praying that her claim for the proceeds of certain cotton be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of E. Nash, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a bill supplying the poor of the city with free water; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 358) for the relief of Edward Bellows, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 832) granting a pension to Simeon Crain, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 793) for the relief of E. H. Lively, postmaster at Williamsburgh, Virginia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 474) for the relief of Edward Fenlon, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAUNDERS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 469) to provide for the sale of certain Kickapoo Indian lands, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 190) to authorize an appointment in the Army, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 721) to authorize the appointment of V. McNally as an ordnance storekeeper in the Army, reported it with amendments.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 447) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the United Peorias and Miamies of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1367) for the relief of H. C. Linn, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 606) granting a pension to Arthur W. Irving, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 488) to pay Hiram Johnson and other persons herein named the several sums of money herein specified, being the surplus of a military assessment paid by them and accounted for to the United States in excess of the amount required for the indemnity for which it was levied and collected, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and Tributaries, to whom was referred a memorial of the Memphis Cotton Exchange, concerning the danger to the river front of Memphis, Tennessee, from encroachments of the Mississippi River, reported a bill (S. No. 1413) making an appropriation for continuing the improvements of Memphis Harbor, State of Tennessee; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FAIR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1096) for the relief of Harlan and Hollingsworth & Company, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1103) for the relief of Secor & Co., Perine, Secor & Co., and Zeno Secor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' HOME INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SEWELL. A sub-committee of the Committee on Military Affairs is now investigating the subject of the Soldiers' Home under a resolution of the Senate. In May last the committee were authorized to employ a stenographer. The duties require practically a clerk instead of a stenographer, and I am directed by the committee to report a resolution authorizing the payment of a stenographer as clerk.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority granted to the special committee investigating the affairs of the United States Soldiers' Home by resolution of May 20, 1881, to employ a stenographer, be so modified as to authorize the said committee to employ a clerk, who shall act as stenographer, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate at the same rate of compensation now received by the per diem committee clerks, from January 11, 1882, the date of his appointment.

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment be authorized to have printed for its use the statements and testimony before it relative to the bills proposing reform in the methods of appointment of subordinate executive officers.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GARLAND asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1414) providing for the construction, completion, repairing, and preservation of levees on the Mississippi River; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask that the bill may lie on the table and be printed; and day after to-morrow, by which time the bill will have been printed, I suppose, I shall ask permission to occupy about twenty minutes of the time of the Senate in explaining the bill and urging its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table, subject to the call of the Senator from Arkansas. All bills are printed under the rule.

Mr. HARRIS. In behalf of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] who is absent on account of temporary indisposition, I ask leave to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1415) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 195 in the city of Washington, District of Columcia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1416) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. McDILL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1417) to provide for the just and legal determination of controversies about title to lands derived from the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public lands.

Mr. TELLER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1418) granting a pension to Francis A. Liebschutz; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1419) amending the charter of Howard University; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1420) for the relief of Howard University; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1421) for a public building at Baton Rouge, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CALL (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1422) to regulate the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims relating to patents; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1423) to create an additional land district in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1424) to authorize the Postmaster-General to supply fourth-class post-offices with postmarking and other necessary implements; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1425) to settle and confirm the title of purchasers, pre-emptors, and settlers on the public domain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ELECTION OF EXECUTIVE OFFICERS.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 46) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and is hereby, proposed to the Legislatures of the several States:

ARTICLE I.

Congress shall by law provide for the election by the people of postmasters, United States marshals, district attorneys of United States courts, collectors of internal revenue, and other officers whose duties are to be performed within the limits of any State or part of a State, except judges of the supreme and inferior courts; and all civil officers of the United States, except judges of the supreme and inferior courts, the heads of Departments, and officers whose duties are temporary in their character, shall hold office for a term of four years, unless a longer term shall be fixed by law; but the President shall have the power of removal of any such officer, whether appointed or elected, for any cause affecting the incumbent's character, habits, or other qualifications, excepting political or religious opinions.

ARTICLE II.

All officers of the United States whose election is provided for in Article I of this amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be elected in such manner as the Legislatures of the States shall provide by law.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. President, as the subject-matter of the joint resolution bears directly upon the civil-service reform which we are now having discussed before the Senate, and inasmuch as I belong to the Select Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service, I ask that the joint resolution lie on the table for the present, and I give notice that at the earliest practicable time I shall call it up for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it, and then I shall move its reference to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie on the table subject to the call of the Senator from Nebraska.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. COKE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Colonel James Belger be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. McMILLAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Anson Northrup be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Thomas G. Mackie and the heirs-at-law of William A. Hyde be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

DOCUMENTARY HISTORY OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of collating and printing the documentary history of the American Revolution not already published in the fifth series of the American Archives.

SARAH DENNY RIPLEY.

Mr. HAWLEY. Some time since I introduced a bill (S. No. 93) granting a pension to Sarah Denny Ripley, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions. I did not succeed in finding to what individual member of that committee the bill was referred as a subcommittee; and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] properly enough reported it adversely to the Senate, not having the testimony. I had the testimony, but had no opportunity to show it to him. I ask unanimous consent to have the action of the Senate reconsidered and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JACKSON. I think that request should be granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so done if there be no objection. The vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be regarded as reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to give notice again that on Friday morning next, after the disposition of the bills which may be reached on the Calendar under the Anthony rule, I shall call up the tariff commission bill for the purpose of submitting some remarks on the same.

ANGUS M'AULEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, proceedings under the Anthony rule will begin. The first case on the Calendar, which is the bill (S. No. 230) granting a pension to Angus McAuley, which was under consideration yesterday, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the affidavits in the case supplementary to the evidence which was before the committee when this case was considered in the last Congress be read. They are very brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The affidavits will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA, Suwanee County:

Before me, Robert A. Reid, clerk of the circuit court in and for said county, personally came Colonel Joseph M. Hull, who, being duly sworn according to law, says that he was well acquainted with Angus McAuley before and during the war, (or rebellion,) that he was opposed to secession and used his influence against it, and that he belonged to no military organization during the war.

ROBT. A. REID, Clerk,
Per W. J. COLE, Deputy Clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn. Are there amendments as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. INGALLS. The affidavits which have been read are suspiciously uniform in their language, and would properly come, I suppose, within the definition of what might be called machine affidavits. They were not prepared by the persons who signed them, evidently, or else the language could not have been so identical in its terms. They were written by somebody and sworn to by the parties who signed them.

I have no doubt the facts set forth are true, but the one single circumstance that remains unexplained is that Mr. McAuley himself makes no affidavit. I again call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill proposes not merely to place him on the pension-rolls, but to pay him the pension back to the time when he was dropped from the rolls; and for the reason that he refuses himself to make the necessary affidavit before the Commissioner of Pensions that would entitle him to restoration, if these facts were true. I move, therefore, to strike out these words in the last line of the bill, "the time when he was dropped from the rolls," and to insert "from and after the passage of this act, at the rate originally allowed." I am entirely willing, under the evidence that is offered, that Mr. McAuley shall be restored to the pension-rolls, but I am not willing, when he refuses to make an affidavit setting forth the facts under which he would be entitled to receive back pay at the Pension Office, to pass an act of Congress for his relief. It is unjust to every other person who has been stricken from the rolls under similar circumstances.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say a single word. The logic of the honorable Senator from Kansas fails entirely. I am personally acquainted with the gentlemen who made these affidavits. Colonel Hull is a prominent citizen, a brother of a member of Congress here. They were all noted for their Union sentiments, and I think this Colonel Hull was himself never in the confederate service, if I am right in my remembrance, in any shape or form. He is a man of intelligence, of good education, and of very high standing; and so are the other gentlemen who have made the affidavits. Whoever wrote them out, these gentlemen fully comprehended them, and every syllable is true.

The pension which Mr. McAuley received was only $2 a month. He is an old man, near eighty years of age. He has been conspicuous as a Union man, opposed to the war before the war, during the war, and always, abstaining from any prominent part in public matters of any kind except in the course of his civil position. He is a man who has been disabled for many years from the effects of his wound and from the exposure of the service. He is partially blind, deaf, and otherwise wholly incapable of rendering any active service. Under the circumstances of the case it would be a very poor reward to him for this Government to give him simply $2 a month from the date when this proposed act shall have passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida why, if this man was such a devoted Union man, he is not willing to swear to it? The mere fact of a man having opposed secession is not conclusive evidence that he did not afterward go into the rebellion. I happen to know thousands who were opposed to secession but who afterward went into the rebel army. If this man was the true Union man that he claims to have been, why was he unwilling to take the oath of loyalty?

Mr. CALL. I think I can answer that question. I had intended to say that the statement of the Senator from Kansas was entirely incorrect. Mr. McAuley never has refused to swear that he had never in any shape, manner, or form given aid or comfort to the rebellion. He has never refused to swear that he was in any and every respect a loyal man. But the oath which the Senator from Missouri asks me why Mr. McAuley would not take is an oath which the Senator ought to know has been interpreted by a great many people of just and tender consciences to mean that he had no personal sympathy with any of the individuals who were engaged in the war. If the honorable Senator from Missouri does not know the fact I know it, that there have been officers of the Union Army who in my presence in the courts of justice have refused to take that oath when it was tendered to them, upon the ground that they could not conscientiously do it, believing that it required them to swear that they had no personal sympathy with the men engaged in the rebellion.

Let us suppose, according to the proposition of the Senator from Kansas, that Mr. McAuley was wrong in that impression, in the case of an old soldier and a Union man, testified by half a dozen persons of character to have been so, are we to deny to him this poor pittance because he perhaps improperly construed the law, as other people have done? There is no reason in that proposition. There are plenty of people on both sides who have so construed the oath, and men of tender consciences did not care to take it. Mr. McAuley offered to swear to these facts, and I advised him (which I think was right) that the testimony of other people was better than his own. That is the reason why his affidavit is not here.

Mr. INGALLS. For the purpose of bringing myself within the rule, I move to commit the bill; and upon that motion I will say that I have discovered the affidavit made by Mr. McAuley in support of his original application to be restored to the pension-rolls by the commissioner. It was sworn to, as appears by the jurat, on the 13th day of May, 1873. It appears to have been made in the State of Florida and county of Suwanee, and the statements are as follows:

On this 13th day of May, A. D. 1873, personally appeared before me Moses L. Stebbins, clerk of the circuit court in and for said county and State, the same being a court of record, Angus McAuley, aged sixty-five years, a resident of Suwanee County, in the State of Florida, who, being duly sworn according to law, declares that he is the identical Angus McAuley who was a pensioner on the roll of the agency at Jacksonville, Florida, and whose pension certificate is herewith returned; that he has resided since the 1st day of January, A. D. 1881, in Suwanee County, Florida; that during this period his means of subsistence has been by farming, and that he took no part in the late rebellion; that he never was attached to any military organization during the war; and that he was last paid his pension on or about the 4th day of March, A. D. 1861. That this application is made for the purpose of securing a restoration of his name to the pension-rolls and of obtaining a new pension certificate, such as he may be entitled to under existing laws; reference being made to the evidence heretofore filed in the Pension Office to substantiate his original claim. And I hereby appoint Walter H. S. Taylor, of Port Tobacco, Charles County, Maryland, my attorney to present this my application and perform all that is necessary therein, without revocation, as well as to receive my certificate when issued.

ANGUS McAULEY.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. I wish simply to say that my statement referred merely to what occurred since I introduced the bill in the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears, therefore, that when this applicant, McAuley, made his application for restoration to the rolls he was not willing to swear that he had been a loyal citizen during the war or that he was in any other way except as appears from his affidavit entitled to this restoration. Neither did he swear that he had not given material aid and comfort and assistance to the rebellion. He merely states that he was not attached to any military organization and that he took no part in the late rebellion.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator to allow me to put to him one question. The Senator is very fair in argument and discussion generally, and I have no right to reply to him in the midst of his statement; but I ask him if he thinks that is a fair commentary upon the language of the affidavit? Does he not think that that language is just as full——

Mr. INGALLS. I made no commentary upon the language; I read the identical words employed by the affiant, and have made no commentary on them.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I beg his pardon; the strongest commentary which he could make was to say that the language does not declare that the affiant never gave aid or comfort to the rebellion.

Mr. INGALLS. I will read it again, because I would not knowingly do any person injustice:

That he took no part in the late rebellion; that he never was attached to any military organization during the war.

Those are the only two clauses referring to the question as to his relation to the rebellion.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. Will the honorable Senator please state what it is that constitutes aid and comfort? When a man denies all the acts that can give aid and comfort, can he do any more than that?

Mr. INGALLS. The necessary requirements of the statute to enable a person who rests under its burdens are well defined. The affiant studiously avoids stating the very facts that are necessary to show that he is not obnoxious to the provision of the statute that would exclude him from the benefits of the law.

Mr. CALL. I ask my honorable friend to state what acts constitute aid and comfort, and when a man denies the acts which constitute aid and comfort under the law, does he not say all that can be said in denial of the charge that he had given aid and comfort to the rebellion?

Mr. INGALLS. By no means. He said that he personally took no part in the rebellion, and that he was not attached to any military organization. That is the alpha and omega of his statement as to his relation to the rebellion.

I have no objection, as I stated before, to the restoration of this man to the rolls upon the showing that has been made; but until he is willing to bring himself within the requirements of the existing statute like all others who rest under similar burdens I am opposed, so long as that statute remains in force, to passing a special act to give him the benefits of arrears back to the time when he was dropped legally from the rolls.

Mr. CALL. I should like my honorable friend to answer the question, if he will allow me to interrupt him again, if a man does not give any personal aid to the rebellion, what sort of aid can he give it?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. CALL. The honorable gentleman says that the affiant swears that he took no personal part in the rebellion. If he did not take a personal part in the war, what sort of a part could he have taken?

Mr. INGALLS. He might have furnished subsistence, and supplies, and munitions of war, and cavalry horses; and in various ways he might have contributed to the success of the war without taking a personal part in it or belonging to any military organization.

Mr. CALL. A man cannot contribute anything without doing it personally.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Florida does not understand that the language of the affidavit means simply to say that Mr. McAuley did not personally participate in the rebellion, then I do not understand it as he does.

Mr. CALL. I certainly do not, nor can the language by any possibility of grammatical construction be made to sustain such a meaning. We have the testimony, in reply to the honorable Senator, of three witnesses showing that this man was opposed to the war. Here is his own statement that he took no part in the war of any kind whatever, and that he was attached to no military organization. There are two distinct asseverations: first, that he took no part in the war. That covers contributions and everything else, and he has sworn to that. I stated to the honorable Senator that it was a matter of notoriety in that country all through the war that this man was loyal to the Union.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say. The affidavit that I have read, if it did not sufficiently appear in my remarks before, is one that was offered in support of McAuley's original application for restoration, which was rejected upon the evidence shown.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me I will move a recommittal, if that is the sense of the Senate. I know these facts well. I have stated them time and again; but if there is any considerable portion of the Senate who desire it, I will move to recommit the bill and let McAuley make any kind of affidavit that is needed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1092) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, of the property known as the Freedman's Bank, and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto, belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. No. 45) to authorize the Secretary of War to use hospital tents for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. CONGER. I now desire the Senate to take up for consideration the bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill will be considered as in Committee of the Whole, being now called up, it having been passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BAYARD. Is the Senate proceeding to consider the liquor traffic bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan had a right to call it up. The first question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD. That is precisely it. I submitted that motion the last time the effort was made to bring the bill before the Senate. I submit to the honorable Senator who has presented this bill that it is proper that the bill should go to a committee. That is the regular order of proceeding that bills introduced into the Senate should pass under the consideration of an appropriate committee. The bill which the Senate has now under consideration, or a bill in pari materia, has before now, at previous sessions of the Senate, been sent to the Committee on Finance; and I submit to the consideration of the Senate that it is eminently proper that this bill should go there before it is considered by the Senate. It touches a question, from which it cannot be separated, a question of revenue in a large and important amount. If the object of the bill and the results of enacting it into law are carried out, then the people of the United States must find some other means whereby to raise more than $50,000,000 annually of revenue which now are paid into the national Treasury. If the reformation, legal and moral, which is suggested or supposed to be the object of this bill is to be reached, it is proper to consider all the questions that necessarily are to be affected by it; and I submit to the Senate that irrespective of the other considerations that attach themselves to this measure the mere question of revenue should give us pause.

As I said before to-day, the Treasury of the United States derives annually more than $50,000,000 from the commodity, alcoholic distillations, referred to by this bill, and therefore I think it is eminently proper that the bill should go to the committee of the Senate to which such subjects are usually and appropriately referred.

I do not care upon this motion, nor do I know that it would be in order upon a motion to refer the bill, to touch upon the merits. I only now trust that the Senator who has introduced this bill, who has not yet complied with the regular order of proceeding of this body in submitting his bill to the consideration of an appropriate committee, will join with me in voting that such reference be made.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, if the statement of the Senator from Delaware be a correct one, that this bill, because it relates to the revenue derived from the alcoholic liquor traffic, should be sent to the Committee on Finance for consideration, or if that consideration should be thought by the Senate to be of any particular weight, which I apprehend is not the case, he might have made some such objection to bringing the bill into the Senate at all. Then the objection would have been statesmanlike. If this is a revenue bill proper, or if the Senator's suggestion should have any weight because this is a revenue bill, then it was not proper to introduce this bill in the Senate; it should have originated in the other House and not here; and that objection might have prevented the bill being considered by the Senate at all.

Mr. BAYARD. I have not a particle of doubt that it would be quite useless for the Senate to consider a bill which should provide for an increase or diminution of the revenue. That is not the question. We have before us now a bill which I think it is entirely competent for the Senate to consider and wise and proper for it to consider—the tariff commission bill. It is not that that tariff commission bill of its own force could be enacted into such a law as would affect the revenue, it is that it proposes a scheme by which a reformation of the tariff may be reached with the concurrence of the other House. It affects the revenue, but affects it indirectly by creating proper machinery to ascertain how the revenue shall be raised. This bill is the same thing. You may pass this bill in the Senate, or you may pass it in the House; and ipso facto you do not affect the revenue directly by the mere passage of the bill to create a commission of inquiry into the liquor traffic; but I do say that there was just as much propriety, and no more, in referring the tariff commission bill to the Committee on Finance as there is in the reference of the present bill to the Committee on Finance. They both are intended to procure information upon a subject that will affect the judgment of the two Houses in respect to the revenue; and it is therefore I submit to my friend from Michigan quite as germane to the duties of the Committee on Finance that this bill should be submitted to their consideration before it is acted upon in the Senate as it was to send the tariff commission bill there, which I think he approved of and voted for.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. President, the subject-matter of the tariff commission bill related solely to the tariff; related solely and absolutely to the revenue. It was to provide the Senate and the House with certain information in regard to the modes of raising revenue and the statistics connected with it, to enable them to make a revenue bill solely. This bill refers incidentally to revenue. It says:

> It shall be their duty to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people; and also to inquire and take testimony as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States of the Union.

All the reference to taxation is incidental. It does not propose to change any law, but it does propose to review the whole scope of the alcoholic liquor traffic in all its relations to the people of the United States; moral questions, and questions affecting the homes and the happiness and the comfort and the peace of all the people of the United States. What does the Committee on Finance have to do with those questions, that cold calculating committee that must act without heart and without conscience, with the scales merely in their hands to weigh money, taxation, revenue, income? I do not doubt the peculiar fitness of the individual members of that committee to throw greater light on all these great questions that affect society and the morals and peace of mankind. I do not doubt their greater ability than that of other members of the Senate to consider for themselves such questions, but they are not peculiarly fitted for it as a committee. Sir——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the Senator from Michigan shall continue? He has spoken five minutes.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senator from Michigan be allowed to proceed. ["Go on!" "Go on!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. CONGER. Sir, I do not desire to occupy the attention of the Senate if we may come to a vote on this subject, but I do say that every Senator here knows and every reading man and woman in the United States knows that those who desire this investigation have appealed to their representatives by letters and by petitions from every State in this Union on file now in the Senate to pass such a bill, mentioning this bill or the subject-matter of it in their petitions.

I will not do any Senator the injustice to suppose that from lack of time or lack of intelligence—if that is a parliamentary term to use in this body—he does not understand the full scope and nature and object and result attempted to be accomplished by this bill. Outside of this body—and I do not know but it is proper to refer to that in an indirect way—the belief has been gaining and growing for years, increasing and multiplying monthly and daily, that the representatives of the people in the two Houses of Congress are unwilling to have a commission appointed to gather the facts and the statistics and present them to the American people as desired in this bill. There seems to be a reluctance to pass this bill or to act upon it, to vote for it or against it, and I think I am but voicing the sentiment of the whole country when I urge the Senate at least to take action upon the bill.

One word more. I do not know whether the Senator from Delaware was present when this bill was introduced, but he has been present when petition after petition and memorial after memorial has been presented in this body, and there was no place to which those petitions and memorials could be referred. They were laid on the table, and if in fact and really those petitions were laid on the table, the table would be covered and overwhelmed with them. There is no place for them to go; they are awaiting the action of the Senate. When this bill was introduced it was admitted by the Senate that it should be placed on the Calendar by unanimous consent, without going to a committee. Is that, if not proof, at least presumption that it is properly here? I may not have understood all the rules of the Senate, being a new member, but I did ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it should go on the Calendar without being referred to a committee, and as the sense of this body it was placed on the Calendar; whether rightly or wrongfully, whether in accordance with the rules or not, unanimous consent carried it there, and it is reached now. Is there any objection to its passage? Is it to make either House, if it passes, do any particular legislation? Is it not an effort to acquire and put in substantial form for the benefit of the two Houses of Congress and the country the facts desired to be obtained through this commission?

But I will not delay the Senate any longer. There is not a living man in the country but knows that the provisions of the bill can be understood by the first reading as well as if it was considered a month, and I ask for a vote of the Senate by yeas and nays upon the proposition of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware is not in order except by unanimous consent, having spoken once on the subject.

Mr. BAYARD. I only desired, if I had permission of the Senate, to express my entire willingness that a special committee, what I may call a soft-hearted, cold-water committee, should be created for the special consideration of this subject, and I know no one so fit for the chairmanship of that from every reason as my friend from Michigan. If he assails the gentleness, the softness and sweetness of my friends from Ohio and Vermont, and thinks they are not fit to consider a subject so eminently one of the heart and not of the head, as this seems to be, I have no objection. I did not propose that this should go to the Committee on Finance because of the especial fitness of the individual members of that committee, but I did consider that a matter that proposed indirectly but nevertheless obviously to affect the revenues of the country to the amount of $50,000,000 a year might well be considered by the committee usually intrusted with the consideration of revenue subjects. That is all. I am willing to have a vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance, upon which motion the yeas and nays are called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill, according to my recollection, was laid on the table at the suggestion of the Senator who introduced it, the Senator from Michigan. It has been usual for Senators when they introduce any matter that they desire to speak upon to have the bill laid upon the table until it is called up at their request for the purpose of enabling them to submit some remarks upon that particular measure. If I had understood at the time that the bill would not be referred to a committee, I should not have consented that it be laid on the table. I supposed it was laid on the table at the request of the Senator merely that at the proper time he might call it up to submit remarks. I shall therefore vote in favor of referring it to the committee.

Mr. CONGER. It was not laid on the table; it was placed on the Calendar, and when it was reached on the Calendar in the absence of some gentlemen who wished to be present it was passed over without prejudice. Now it is up again in its proper order.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONGER, (when Mr. FERRY's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. FERRY] is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

Mr. GARLAND, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I do not know how he would vote if here, and I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were present, I should vote "nay." I do not know how he would vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island. [Mr. ANTHONY.] If he were here, I should vote "yea;" but I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] I ask his colleague whether I should vote on this question or not.

Mr. McMILLAN. It would perhaps be advisable for the Senator who is paired with my colleague to withdraw his vote.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then, Mr. President, I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. SLATER. My colleague [Mr. GROVER] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. TELLER, (after having voted in the negative.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] So many of his political friends are voting one way that I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. GROOME. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. SAWYER.]

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] on all political questions. I do not regard this and would not wish to regard it as a political question, and I have voted. If the colleague of the Senator from Georgia desires me to withdraw my vote I will do so.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know how my colleague would vote if he were present, but I do not suppose that he would object to the Senator from Maine voting as he may think proper on this question.

Mr. PLUMB, (after having voted in the negative.) On the suggestion of some political distinction in this vote which I would not have expected if it had not been suggested, I have appealed to the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] who is now in his seat, in regard to the effect of a pair which I made with his colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] and he seems to think it is so entirely obvious that his colleague, if here, would vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. I do not think there is any politics in it, however, but I know my colleague would vote "yea." The Senator can do as he likes.

Mr. PLUMB. By the terms of the pair between the Senator from Kentucky who is absent and myself, it was agreed that it should be referred to his colleague. I now respectfully leave it to him whether I shall let my vote stand or withdraw it. I have voted "nay."

Mr. BECK. My colleague would vote "yea," I know.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw my vote, then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas withdraws his vote.

Mr. RANSOM, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I am paired on all party questions, in his absence, with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] unless where his friends arrange some other pair. I received very recently a message from his colleague, now in the chair, in reference to the pair. I voted "yea" on this question, but if this is regarded as a party question I shall ask leave, of course, to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The colleague of the Senator from Illinois does not consider it a party question. The Senator may do as he pleases. The Chair does not know how his colleague [Mr. LOGAN] would vote, and does not consider it a party question.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire to vote "yea," but under that statement I think it is right I should withdraw my vote. I would vote "yea" if I were at liberty to do so.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not consider this a party question at all. I find myself voting with many Republicans, and most of my friends on this side are voting the other way. I am glad for once to find the Republican party right.

Mr. VAN WYCK, (after voting in the negative.) I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.] I did not notice that he was not in his seat when I voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bayard,	Coke,	Jackson,	Pugh,
Beck,	Fair,	Jonas,	Slater,
Brown,	Farley,	McPherson,	Vance,
Call,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Walker.
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Morgan,

Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,	Windom.
Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,

So the motion to refer was not agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. GARLAND. I would suggest an amendment in line 9 of section 2, after the word "investigation" to insert "with such suggestions and recommendations as they may see fit to make."

Mr. CONGER. I see no objection to that amendment so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to suggest to the gentleman who has charge of the bill another amendment. I think an amendment limiting the time within which the report of the commission shall be made to the President ought to be made. I do not care to offer it if it interferes with the general proposition of the mover of the bill. I would insert in line 10 of section 2, after the word "President," the words "on or before the 1st day of December next." I think that will give them ample time to make the investigation, so that when Congress assembles the report can be transmitted immediately for its consideration. I propose the amendment, if there is no serious objection to it on the part of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FRYE. I hope that amendment will not be adopted, because this bill, while it may pass through the Senate to-day, may not become a law for three or four months. Then you would be in the heat of the summer months, and it would give to these gentlemen for their inquiries but two or three months in the fall. My judgment is, from what I have been informed heretofore, that they should have at least a full year in which to make the investigation, because they are not on pay and for that reason it will take them longer.

Mr. GARLAND. Then I would suggest that they make their report within one year from the passage of the act.

Mr. FRYE. That will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is to add that "the commissioners shall make their report within one year from the passage of the act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have not the bill before me, but I suggest that all this commission ought not to be of the same political party. I hope the Senator from Michigan will offer an amendment to that effect, to be inserted in the proper place.

Mr. GEORGE. I join in that request. I want to vote for the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I dislike very much to make a party question at all of this.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the Senator sees that the vote this morning disclosed that each side of the House is practically united.

Mr. CONGER. I think that was merely from the desire of gentlemen that a committee should report on the subject. It could not have been from any opposition to the bill of course. I have no doubt every Senator who voted for the committal is as zealously in favor of the passage of this bill as I am myself.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator mean that the commissioners should be all of one political party?

Mr. CONGER. I do not; but in prescribing the qualifications of these men in the bill, I desire that the President shall be at perfect liberty to select from the great body of men suitable to fill this position whomever he shall think is best. I have no belief that he would appoint all from one party; I should consider it very unwise; but I do not like to make in a bill of this kind a political distinction. I dislike very much to do it, and I cannot myself make such a proposition.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move an amendment that the commissioners shall not be all of the same political party.

Mr. INGALLS. The Democrats ought to have a chance.

Mr. HARRIS. As the Senator from West Virginia has not the bill before him, I suggest to him that in line 5 of section 1, after the word "persons," he move to insert "not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party."

Mr. FARLEY. I call the attention of the Chair to the hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as this amendment is received the Chair will announce the time for the regular order. Does the Senator from West Virginia offer the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 5 of section 1, after the word "persons," it is proposed to insert "not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has arrived, and the Chair must lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask unanimous consent to take a vote on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent to continue the consideration of this bill.

Several SENATORS. Regular order! Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. CONGER. Before proceeding to other business I ask what will be the condition of this bill to-morrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will come up to-morrow morning as the first bill on the Calendar, when it is called.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 130) for the relief of Paulina Jones, widow of Alexander Jones, deceased, late of Company E, Second North Carolina Infantry;

A bill (S. No. 143) for the relief of Charles Collins;

A bill (S. No. 242) for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co.;

A bill (S. No. 266) for the relief of George W. Wicks & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky;

A bill (S. No. 271) for the relief of Frank D. Yates and others;

A bill (S. No. 387) directing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Society of the Army of the Cumberland condemned cannon to aid in the erection of a statue or monument to James Abram Garfield;

A bill (S. No. 491) for the relief of Henry P. Rolfe;

A bill (S. No. 494) directing the issue of a duplicate check to William J. Anthony, a pensioner of the United States; and

A bill (S. No. 788) granting a pension to Olive Stephenson.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. INGALLS to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations in section 1, line 4, after "of" to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I shall make no apology for consuming the time which may be necessary to discuss this question. It is a question of too much gravity and importance to be lightly passed over; it is one which affects the whole future policy of this Government; it is one which affects natural rights, and one which touches some of the most difficult problems with which the National Legislature ever deals. It is not a question to be pressed to a vote impetuously; it is a question to be discussed fairly, thoroughly, exhaustively, dispassionately; and I am glad to be able to say that the discussion has been fair, has been dispassionate, and I trust that no utterance of mine will change the character of that discussion.

I have listened with the greatest interest to the discussion of this measure. I came to its consideration with a sincere desire to find some way in which I could support this bill consistently with my ideas of right and duty, of justice, and of equity; I may say that I have struggled with myself to come to that conclusion, but I find myself utterly unable to support this bill. I would be willing to support a bill which, within the language of this treaty, should properly regulate, limit, or reasonably suspend Chinese immigration into this country. I would do so because I feel an obligation to listen to the voice of the people from another section of the country. I believe in the unity of this Republic; I believe we are one people; that whatever concerns the people of one section concerns the people of every other section; that whatever affects the people of the Pacific coast for good or for evil affects the people of Connecticut for good or for evil; whatever concerns a citizen anywhere in this Republic concerns me; and therefor it is that I would gladly, had it been possible, give my adhesion to this bill. I know that the people of the Pacific coast feel keenly upon it; I know that they feel that Chinese immigration is dangerous, is likely to affect their interests disastrously.

But, Mr. President, I cannot bring myself to vote for a bill which I believe violates the spirit of the treaty; I cannot bring myself to vote for a bill which I believe violates principles of natural right and justice; I cannot consent, for the sake of mere expediency and good fellowship, to do this. To prevent possible danger or alleviate a real misfortune, I cannot consent to the infraction even of the spirit of a treaty while professing to be bound by it. I cannot refuse to keep our contract as those with whom we made it have a right to understand it.

Now, Mr. President, what is this bill? What is to be the effect of it? What is the intent of it? My reply is this: the object of this bill is to extirpate the Chinese; it is to exclude them; it is to prohibit them from coming here hereafter. I have listened to all the speeches that have been made, and I can see nothing in the utterance of Senators who are in favor of this bill that does not tend to that end—prohibition, exclusion, extirpation. Let me recur to some of the utterances of the junior Senator from California, [Mr. MILLER,] who made such an able speech upon this question, and I venture to say the best argument that has ever been made upon that side of the question:

> Now, in this time, when more than half the world of men are turning their eyes to this virgin land of plenty, and are moving in upon us by millions, I believe that the national safety demands an intelligent discrimination, and that it is not only just and wise, but humane to keep the bad sorts out. The time for a judicious sifting process has come, and I would sift out the Chinese laborers first.

And ending with this sentence:

> China for the Chinese! California for Americans and those who will become Americans!

What can we infer from this except that this bill is intended forever to prohibit the immigration of Chinese laborers to this country? You call it a suspension, but no use of words can disguise the fact that it is absolute prohibition for twenty years. If the speeches which have been made here were not sufficient we have only to turn to the dispatches which were laid before us yesterday describing the meetings in California and the resolutions which were there passed to show that the people of California understand that this bill is for an absolute suppression and not for the regulation or limitation or suspension of Chinese immigration. It is true that in San Francisco and some of the larger places, where people have become accustomed to the use of the words in which the intent of this bill is disguised, they speak of their opposition to unrestricted Chinese immigration; but when you get further back in the country, where they are not so well advised, where they speak what they mean, there is no uncertain sound about the understanding of the people of California with regard to this bill. From Sonora, California, a dispatch says:

> Mass-meeting held; Tuolumne County is a unit in favor of the suppression of Chinese immigration, and we respectfully urge Congress to pass the pending Chinese bill for our relief.

From Mercede—

> A great mass-meeting is being held here to-day. The excitement on the delay of the Chinese bill is intense.

They cannot wait for the discussion of it.

> Vigorous speakers of high social standing are addressing the people, and ringing resolutions, approving the course of our representatives and calling national attention to the danger of delay in suppressing Chinese immigration to California, have been adopted.

And the common council of the city of San Francisco even, in a telegram under date of March 2 to the junior Senator from California, uses this language:

> Resolved, That we respectfully and earnestly petition Congress to enact the most stringent laws which our treaties with China will permit for the prevention of Chinese immigration.

I need only to allude to these dispatches and to these utterances of Senators on this floor to show that, however much treaty commissioners, however much Senators may juggle with the words "regulate, limit, and suspend," this bill means utter and entire prohibition.

Mr. President, the Chinese are said to be vicious. It is said that they have habits, and customs, and tendencies, and characteristics which are antagonistic to our civilization. But, sir, they have one virtue which we may well emulate. The Chinaman, be he laborer or trader, always keeps his contract. You may search the history of the Chinaman in this country and you can find no instance where he has not lived up to his contract and performed it, not only to the letter, but in the spirit in which it was made.

It is said that they are sent here under contracts by the Six Companies, which bind them to labor. Our laws provide that the moment they step on these shores they shall be no longer bound by such contracts, and I have yet to hear of the first Chinaman absolved by our laws from the performance of a harsh or severe contract who has not, nevertheless, performed it to the very letter in this country; and the Senator from Massachusetts informs me that the Chinamen who came to Massachusetts were scrupulous in the performance of their contract. The universal testimony on this subject is all to this end. It is an example which we may well emulate.

Now, Mr. President, what is a treaty? It is a contract between nations. That is all. It occupies the same position between governments that an ordinary contract does between individuals. It is to be kept like every other contract, in the spirit in which it is made. We made this contract which we call a treaty with the Chinese Government, and we must keep it. We must keep it, or stand forever disgraced in the eyes of the world. There is no way in which an individual can so soon and so thoroughly forfeit the respect of the community in which he lives as to be sharp in making a contract and sharp in taking an unfair advantage under the contract which the other contracting party never expected that he would take. There is no way in which a nation can so surely forfeit the respect of all other nations as to make that contract called a treaty in shrewdness, and then as shrewdly take advantage of the technical terms of that treaty to accomplish what the other contracting party never intended should be accomplished.

I desire to inquire how the treaty was understood in China, and what rule of construction we shall adopt in endeavoring to ascertain how the Chinese Government understand and have a right to-day to understand this treaty? I think that in justice and equity, in construing treaties between nations, we are not bound down to any narrow rule which sinks all the previous negotiations in the written instrument, but we have a right to resort to all that was said and done between the contracting parties for the purpose of understanding the true construction of the treaty and how it should be kept. I shall therefore have occasion to recur to some of the negotiations between the commissioners who negotiated this treaty on the part of the United States and the commissioners who negotiated the treaty on the part of China. I think I shall show that if we have the right under this treaty to pass this bill, it is because there was overreaching on the part of the United States and trustful confidence on the part of China. I do not believe, however, that we have any right under the terms and letter of this treaty to pass this bill. Article I of the treaty is as follows:

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

That is the treaty. What is the bill? The treaty says that the suspension, if it comes to that, the last resort which was contemplated, shall be reasonable. The bill says:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of twenty years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended; and during such suspension it shall not be lawful for any Chinese laborer to come, or, having so come after the expiration of said sixty days, to remain within the United States.

I submit that you may lay the language of the treaty before any common-sense man in the United States who does not plume himself upon the fact that he is a technical lawyer, and he will say that a prohibition for twenty years of Chinamen coming into this country is not a reasonable suspension within the meaning of the treaty, without reference to the circumstances under which it was negotiated. It is only by ingenuity, it is only by construction, it is only by positive torture of the language, that any such claim can be made as that this prohibition is merely a reasonable suspension. "Reasonable suspension" implies, ex vi termini, that the immigration is to be resumed at the end of the term for which it is suspended. Does any Senator from California or the Pacific coast, does any friend of this bill, tell me that it is the intention of this bill, the intention of the advocates of the bill, that Chinese immigration shall ever be resumed to this country? I think rather that they would stand here and avow that the intention of this bill was that it should never be resumed within this country.

Twenty years is a long time in the life of a man. I have no data on this subject, but I suppose that the Chinese laborer on the Pacific coast must average from twenty-five to thirty years of age. It is said that he has habits and vices which are destructive of health. It is said that he comes to stay for a short time, accumulate wealth, and return with his wealth to China. What will be the condition at the end of twenty years? According to the law of nature, according to the law of this emigration as it is laid down here, there will be no longer any Chinese laborers within the United States. We have a right to judge of the intent of a bill by what must be its inevitable results, and do you tell me that a bill the inevitable result of which must be to destroy all Chinese occupation of the United States is simply a reasonable suspension of immigration? It seems to me incredible that anybody can so understand it.

I know that there is an amendment here limiting this time to ten years. That would better the bill in this particular. It is too long, however. I believe, with the timid nature of the Chinaman, and with what I know of the Chinese Government, that an absolute prohibition of the immigration of Chinese laborers for ten years is enough to settle forever this question of whether there is to be any Chinese immigration to this country hereafter. But if that amendment were to be adopted, there are other provisions, to which I shall allude hereafter, which make it impossible for me to support this bill.

Now, I desire very briefly to refer to some of the negotiations which took place in the making of this treaty. The correspondence and conversations of the commissioners who negotiated it were printed in confidence for the use of the Senate at the time the treaty was under consideration on the question of its ratification. I understand that the injunction of secrecy has been removed by vote of the Senate, so that this correspondence and the account of these conversations are now public property. I shall therefore read some extracts therefrom, showing the course of this negotiation.

The commissioners from the United States went to China and notified the commissioners of China that they had come there to seek some modification in the Burlingame treaty. The commissioners of China said that Mr. Seward when he was Secretary of State had proposed certain modification of the treaty by which the evils attending the immigration of Chinese laborers and Chinamen should be alleviated, and that they were ready to treat upon that proposition. I will remark right here that Mr. Seward's proposition was this; and it seems to me that it was the only proposition which is tenable in relation to this subject of immigration: Mr. Seward proposed so to modify the treaty as that four classes of Chinese subjects should be excluded from coming here; coolies, criminals, prostitutes, and diseased persons. That was Mr. Seward's proposition. It was a humane proposition. It was a proposition which is in spirit with all our doctrines upon the subject of immigration. It was a proposition which I am willing to stand by here and now and at all times, that whether it be with China or whether it be with France or Russia or Germany or England, I am ready to treat for the exclusion of coolies, of servile laborers, of prostitutes, of criminals, and of diseased persons.

If we would keep our body-politic pure, if we would keep our people virtuous, if we would make all immigration here tend to the better glory and perpetuity of the Republic, that is the way in which to do it. That is good, firm, substantial ground upon which we can all stand. But the American commissioners said that that would not be satisfactory to them, and that we had got a new Secretary of State now, a new minister, as they called him, and Mr. Seward was no longer in office, and it was very doubtful whether the Government ever authorized him to make any such proposition as that any way. At any rate, they had come to treat for the right of the United States to regulate, limit, suspend, and prohibit the introduction of Chinese laborers into the United States at its own discretion. The Chinese commissioners said that they would not accede to the prohibition, and that they wanted a specification from the United States of what they meant by limitation, specifications as to the mode of limitation and as to the time of limitation and as to the numbers which should be affected by the limitation. The commissioners of the United States then said that China must leave that thing entirely to the discretion of the United States; that the United States was their friend; that the United States was just; that the United States might never have occasion to resort to any of this legislation, any way, and if I did, it would only be exercised in justice and in good faith. So our commissioners convinced China that she could safely leave this matter to the justice and good faith of the United States.

The Chinese commissioners stated what they thought would be fair in the matter of limitation:

The Chinese commissioners said they did not intend their proposition to be considered as a substitute for article 2, or in any sense an ultimatum on the part of the Chinese Government. They rather intended it to induce a free discussion of the subject so it should be thoroughly understood. By limitation in number they meant, for example, that the United States having, as they supposed, a record of the number of immigrants in each year as well as the total number of Chinese now there, that no more should be allowed to go in any one year in future than either the greatest number which had gone in any year in the past, or the least number which had gone in any year in the past, or that the total number should never be allowed to exceed the number now there. As to limitation in time they meant, for example, that Chinese should be allowed to go in alternate years, or every third year, or, for example, that they should not be allowed to go for two, three, or five years.

That is what the Chinamen wished in this matter. Omitting some for the sake of not consuming time in reading, I remark that the commissioners of the United States said that they could not well make any specific statement as to how the limitation would be exercised:

The Chinese commissioners asked if the United States commissioners could give them any idea of the laws which would be passed to carry such power into execution—

Inasmuch as the American commissioners had asked that it should rest entirely in the discretion of the United States what laws should be enacted under the power which was given.

Mr. Trescot replied that this could hardly be done. It would be as difficult to say what would be the special character of any act of Congress as it would be to say what would be the words of an edict of the Emperor of China to execute a treaty power. That two great nations discussing such a subject must always assume that they will both act in good faith and with due consideration for the interests and friendship of each other. That the United States Government might never deem it necessary to exercise this power. It would depend upon circumstances.

If Chinese immigration concentrated in cities where it threatened public order, or if it confined itself to localities where it was an injury to the interests of the American people, the Government of the United States would undoubtedly take steps to prevent such accumulations of Chinese. If, on the contrary, there was no large immigration, or if there were sections of the country where such immigration was clearly beneficial, then the legislation of the United States under this power would be adapted to such circumstances. For example—

This is the way they obtained the consent of the confiding Chinese—

For example, there might be a demand for Chinese labor in the South and a surplus of such labor in California, and Congress might legislate in accordance with these facts. In general the legislation would be in view of, and depend upon, the circumstances of the situation at the moment such legislation became necessary.

The Chinese commissioners said this explanation was satisfactory.

And thereupon the treaty, which was finally adopted, was agreed to. Now I desire to present the dispatch sent by our commissioners from Peking, on the 17th of November, 1880, reviewing the whole history of this negotiation:

No. 13.] UNITED STATES COMMISSION,
Peking, November 17, 1880. (Received January 5, 1881.)

SIR: On November 6, in dispatch No. 12, we informed you that we had on that day concluded a treaty with the Chinese Government, which would be signed in a few days, and a copy of which was inclosed.

On November 10 we telegraphed a brief summary of the treaty, (inclosure 1,) and have now the honor to inform you that to-day, the 17th of November, this treaty was signed in triplicate, in Chinese and English, by the commissioners plenipotentiary of the two governments.

Our former dispatches will have given you a sufficient history of the negotiations, but we deem it our duty to conclude with a review of the points which came under discussion.

After our first interview with the Chinese commissioners we thought it clear that while the Chinese Government would recognize the propriety of some regulating discretion as to Chinese immigration on the part of the Government of the United States, it would not consent to its formal prohibition and the absolute abrogation of the provisions of the Burlingame treaty relating to the free intercourse between the people of the two countries. We did not think that the public opinion of the United States would require so extreme a demand, and we considered our instructions as warning us not to disregard the traditional policy of the United States, and in your own words to give due weight to "the widely diffused, and, so to speak, natural sentiment of our people in favor of the most liberal admission of foreign immigrants who desire to incorporate themselves and their families with our society, and mingle the stream of their posterity in the swelling tide of native population."

While, therefore, we asked in our first proposition for a recognition of the right to prohibit, we were prepared at the proper time to withdraw this extreme claim in concession to a final advance on the part of the Chinese commissioners to such a degree of discretionary power on the part of the United States as we deemed practically sufficient to secure the control of Chinese immigration.

The statement of the wishes and purposes of the Government of the United States was, at the opening of the negotiation, met by the Chinese commissioners with the expression, in very friendly language, of their willingness to negotiate, provided no modification of the Burlingame treaty was asked, and certain propositions formally submitted by Mr. Seward in reference to paupers, lewd women, diseased persons, and contract laborers were taken as the basis of the negotiation.

While acknowledging the amicable spirit in which their reply was made, we deemed it all important that the Chinese commissioners should understand that a proper modification of the Burlingame treaty was precisely the thing we had come to obtain, and that Mr. Seward's propositions in no way furnished the basis of any negotiation which we were willing to undertake. And in this connection we found it necessary to call the attention of the Chinese commissioners to the use of language in their formal reply not usual between governments, and to indicate our belief that this language had been used under an impression that the government was not in fact the representative of the sentiment of the country, an impression which they ought at once to correct. We believed that upon this discussion turned the possibility of negotiating a satisfactory treaty.

As we expected, the Chinese Government promptly disavowed any intention of offense in the language used, and after a full and friendly exchange of opinion, the discussion proceeded to the consideration of such a modification of the Burlingame treaty as would be acceptable to both governments.

Without going into a detailed history of the negotiations, which has been furnished to the Department from time to time in our former dispatches, we may say that the Chinese Government submitted a scheme which provided:

First. That the immigration should be "regulated" by the Government of the United States, such regulations, however, to be communicated to the Chinese Government for approval before going into effect.

Second. That "artisans" should not be included among Chinese laborers.

Third. That the regulation should apply only to Chinese laborers in the employ of American citizens.

Fourth. That if the regulation should extend to the limitation or suspension of such immigration, the limitation in point of numbers or the suspension in point of time should be specific.

As to the second and third points of this scheme it is unnecessary to repeat the obvious reasons why they could not even be taken into consideration.

At this point in the discussion we deemed it best to say that while the details of the treaty and its language were matters in which we would gladly consult the preferences of the Chinese Government, we could not consent to any settlement which did not recognize the entire discretion of the United States in dealing with this subject. We thought that any regulations to be matter of joint arrangement would only raise new questions, and that the administration of any such joint regulations would in practice prove unsatisfactory. Besides which they could only be of force in Chinese ports, and would be useless in regard either to Hong-Kong or Singapore. We thought that the simplest, the directest, and the only efficient plan was to give the control of the subject to the Government of the United States.

We therefore communicated to the Chinese commissioners that we would consent to strike out the word "prohibit," provided they would accept the words "regulate, limit, or suspend," being satisfied that these words covered the power to devise and enforce all necessary and proper legislation.

Upon their acceptance of this proposition, we consented to such variation of the phraseology of the articles as they desired. You will observe that this language imposes no conditions upon the discretion of the United States. That the discretion should be used reasonably; that all classes of Chinese subjects not within the scope of this treaty should be protected in the enjoyment of such rights as are now conferred by existing treaties, and that the diplomatic representative of the Chinese Government should have the right from time to time to call the attention of the United States Government to any unanticipated hardship that the legislation of the United States might cause, are provisions which need no comment.

As to the fourth point of the Chinese project, we were satisfied that the necessity for such special limitation or suspension, varying according to the actual condition of the country and the character and extent of the immigration at the date of such proposed limitation or suspension, it would be impossible to devise a satisfactory specification. We thought that the principle of its right to use its discretion being once admitted as belonging to the Government of the United States, the Chinese Government should assume that we would exercise that discretion with justice, and in a spirit of friendship.

We were fortunate enough to satisfy the Chinese commissioners not only of the justice of our views, but of the entire good faith in which they were advanced.

In conclusion, we deem it our duty to say to you that during the whole of this negotiation the representatives of the Chinese Government have met us in the fairest and most friendly spirit. They have been in their personal intercourse most courteous, and have given to all our communications, verbal as well as written, the promptest and most respectful consideration. After a free and able exposition of their own views we are satisfied that, in yielding to the request of the United States, they have been actuated by a sincere friendship and an honorable confidence that the large powers recognized by them as belonging to the United States, and bearing directly upon the interests of their own people, will be exercised by our Government with a wise discretion, in a spirit of reciprocal and sincere friendship, and with entire justice.

We have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servants,

JAMES B. ANGELL.
JOHN F. SWIFT.
WM. HENRY TRESCOT.

Hon. WILLIAM M. EVARTS, Secretary of State.

I ask if there is any Senator who can stand here, after having heard read the circumstances under which the treaty was negotiated, seeing what the Chinamen must have understood would be the action of this Government in relation to the suspension of immigration if it should become necessary, and say that it is keeping the treaty in good faith to absolutely prohibit this immigration for the period of twenty years, when the result of that prohibition will be the final exclusion of the Chinese laborer from America? We told them to cast themselves upon our generosity; we told them that we would exercise the powers given to us wisely, justly, in good faith. Hear our reply:

SEC. 2. That any master of any vessel, of whatever nationality, who shall on such vessel bring within the jurisdiction of the United States any Chinese laborer from any foreign port or place shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of $500 for each and every such Chinese laborer so brought, and may be also imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

That is our reply, that is our return to China for its confidence in us; and those provisions extending over a period of twenty years! Four hundred years before the Sermon on the Mount, to which you, sir, [Mr. HOAR in the chair,] alluded in your speech on this subject the other day, the great teacher of China, pagan China as it is called, gave utterance to this sentiment, "Do not unto others what you would not have them do to you;" and the United States in the blazing Christian light of the nineteenth century may well learn of Confucius. Does any man suppose that we would like the Government of China to treat us in this way under such a treaty as that, wrung from us as that treaty was wrung from China upon a promise of the exercise of justice and good faith?

I must refer for a moment to another point in this treaty, and here I will not attempt to go fully into what I can characterize by a no less word than the iniquities of this bill. The Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BROWN,] in his able speech but a day or two ago, said much better than I can say what I had in mind in relation to what I consider violations of the second article of the treaty. I should be but a gleaner where he has thoroughly reaped:

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nations.

I read that article of the treaty. I put against it sections 4, 6, 7, 8, and 12 of this bill without comment:

In case any Chinese residing in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, shall depart therefrom, they shall, before such departure, cause themselves to be duly registered at a custom-house in the United States, and produce to the collector of the district at which they shall seek to re-enter the United States the certificate of such registration and the consular certificate in this act provided for.

And I will remark by the way that there is no provision in the act making a consular certificate applicable to such cases.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith cause to be prepared and kept at the custom-houses of the United States proper books, in such form as he shall prescribe, for the registration of Chinese who shall be entitled under the provisions of this act to the privilege of entering and residing in the United States. Entry shall be made in such books of the name of every such Chinese, and his proper signature, his place of birth, (giving town or district,) date of birth, last place of residence before coming to the United States, place of residence in the United States, if any, names and residences of his parents, if any, date and place of arrival in the United States, employment or business, height, and physical marks or peculiarities by which he may be identified.

I wonder that it does not provide for branding him.

Every applicant for registration shall make oath to the facts stated in his registry, which oath shall be recorded in the book of registry. Collectors of customs and their deputies shall have power to administer and certify to all oaths under this act.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the collector of customs to issue to every Chinese entitled to registry, and registered by him, at the time of registration, a certificate, in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, setting forth all the facts contained in such registration, and the data of identification prescribed in section 6 of this act, which certificate shall be signed by the collector of customs of the district, or his deputy, and attested by his seal of office, dated the day of its issue, and upon which shall be written the proper signature of the person registered. A minute of the issuance of such certificate and date of issue shall be made in the book of registry on the margin of the registration. The certificate so issued to a Chinese shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated.

SEC. 8. That any person who shall knowingly make a false statement under oath in the registration of any Chinese under the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and any person who shall register at more than one custom-house in the United States, or procure more than one certificate of registration, or alter or substitute any name for the name written in such certificate, or forge any such certificate, or utter any forged or fraudulent certificate, or falsely personate any person named in any such certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and upon conviction of any offense mentioned in this section the guilty person shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, and imprisoned in a penitentiary for a term not more than five years.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 12. That if any consular officer, on examination of the claims and identity of any Chinese proposing to depart to the United States, shall be satisfied that such person seeks so to do in violation of this act, he shall refuse to certify to the right of such person to so depart; and every collector of customs shall refuse to allow any Chinese to enter the United States if he shall discover that such entry is unlawful under this act.

Is that keeping article 2 of this treaty as the Chinese understood it, as the Chinese Government had the right to understand it, as any simple, common-sense Americans would understand it? As was well said by the Senator from Georgia, it is utterly inconsistent with the right to come and go of their own free will and accord, for the laborers now here under this article of the treaty have that right to go and come of their own free will and accord, and they are to be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to citizens and subjects of the most favored nation. Let me read a little of section 4 as it would read if it were applicable to the English: "In case any Englishman residing in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, shall depart therefrom, he shall, before such departure, cause himself to be duly registered at a custom-house in the United States, and produce to the collector of the district at which he shall seek to re-enter the United States the certificate of such registration and the consular certificate called for in this act." Apply it to a German, to an Irishman, to a Frenchman; pass an act that no Irish laborer, no French artisan, no German skilled mechanic now in this country shall leave here until he complies with such regulations for custom-house registration as that, and see how it would strike the civilized world, and in the light of it determine the question whether Chinese laborers now here are treated as, and have all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions accorded to, citizens and subjects of the most favored nations. It is idle to claim that this is within the treaty.

Let me go a little further. Here is a section (section 5) which provides that all classes included within the treaty as teachers, students, merchants, or traveling from curiosity, shall obtain the permission of the Chinese Government before they shall be permitted to come here. Let me read a little from this section making it applicable to English teachers and students for instance: "Every English teacher or student who shall come to the United States within sixty days next after the passage of this act shall obtain the permission of the English Government in each case, to be evidenced by a passport issued by said government," &c., "viséd by the consul at the port from which he shall sail." How long do you think it would be before an act of that sort would raise a storm of condemnation throughout the civilized world? And yet we are told that we are not denying to the Chinese laborers any privilege or any exemption which is extended to subjects of the most favored nations. It is the necessity of this bill, it is the spirit which is back of this bill, which prompts such legislation, and that necessity and that spirit are the entire suppression of Chinese immigration to this continent.

So much, Mr. President, for our treaty obligations and the keeping of faith with a great nation. Here I want to say that whatever may have been the law of the past, whatever may have been the practice of the past, now in this nineteenth century, when better ideas of government are prevalent, when better ideas of governmental obligations are prevalent, we ought not to pass any act which can justly be claimed by the government with whom we have contracted to be contrary to the spirit of the contract which we have made.

But, Mr. President, aside from the fact that we ought not under this treaty to enact any such bill, this bill strikes at a principle which I cannot abandon or overlook. The true intent and meaning of it is to declare that henceforth, excepting only the Chinese now here and the colored people now here, no man shall work in the United States except he be a white man. I cannot give in my adhesion to such a principle. Nay, further, it is that no man, however much he may need the skill, the labor of the brown man, the yellow man, the tawny man now living on foreign shores, shall have the right to contract with that man to come here and labor for him. It strikes at the natural right of a man to labor where he will and how he will, so that it be free labor; and it strikes at another right, the right to hire labor.

Let me suppose instances. The art of making porcelain has reached its highest development in China. I saw but a little time ago a Chinese vase with the mark of the maker upon it and an inscription upon it in Chinese so ancient that no modern scholarship can interpret it. The vase was of priceless value. It was the production of Chinese art, of Chinese skill. I am told that that art and skill have degenerated in modern times, but there is no place on the face of this globe where better porcelain is made than in China. Suppose that a man in Massachusetts desires to establish that branch of industry within the United States, desires to avail himself of the skill of the Chinese laborer, the Chinese artisan, the Chinese porcelain maker, this bill absolutely prohibits it, and he cannot invite him to this country to assist him in the establishment of his enterprise. So in case any one desires to establish a silk factory, in which Chinamen are deft and skillful and make excellent goods. Or, to put it to my brethren of the South, we have had in years gone by much experimenting to see whether tea cannot be successfully cultivated in America in the Southern States. How much those experiments have amounted to it is not for me now to say. But suppose with the growing spirit of enterprise which exists in the South, and which in my judgment is to bear fruit a hundredfold within the next twenty years, some man would desire in Florida or in some of the Gulf States to establish the culture of tea, and he should desire to bring from China men who are skilled in that branch of industry, this bill prohibits it. He cannot do it for twenty years, and after that he could not persuade one to come if the bill did not operate. And why? All because the men you need are not white men. A Chinaman is not a white man; it is said he is not a Caucasian; he is a Mongolian; and therefore no matter how skillful he be, no matter how honest he be, no matter how industrious, no matter how frugal, he shall not work in America. That is the principle of this bill for the next twenty years and for all time. I cannot accede to any such proposition.

The bill was intended to exclude artisans, and no claim is made that it was not, as I understand; and indeed to make it more certain some Senators have proposed to amend it so that there may be no mistake in its construction upon that point, that it shall embrace skilled as well as unskilled labor; it shall embrace that labor which consists of a combination of brains and muscle as well as that which is mere brawn and force. That is what the commissioners said. The Chinese commissioners undertook to include artisans among the class who might travel here as merchants and traders might travel here, and the American commissioners would not have it. For the first time in the history of this Government, for the first time in the history of any government since Great Britain passed her laws that artisans should not depart from her ports, we are asked to pass a bill that skilled labor shall not come into the United States if, forsooth, the skilled laborer is not a white man!

This is race legislation; it is avowed to be race legislation, and all the old arguments that we heard about the danger of social equality between the negro and the white man are resuscitated and rehabilitated for the occasion. It is said we will not marry with the Chinese; they are not suitable to marry with. Why, Mr. President, more than a hundred years ago there was laid down in the Declaration of Independence that grand sentiment which you alluded to:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

That is for the white man alone, we are told here to-day. Sir, it does not make much difference possibly what becomes of the Chinese in America, but it makes an immense difference what becomes of the Declaration of Independence. You may crystallize into this legislation the prejudice and the fear of Americans; you may crystallize into this legislation the cry that "the Chinese must go," but I ask you to pause before you put it upon the ground that it is because they are not of the same race as we. I beg leave to read a single extract in this connection from an address of one than whom none is more dear or will ever be to the American people, Abraham Lincoln. It is said that the coming of these Chinamen here endangers our social fabric. It is said they are not our equals. It is said, by inference, that the Declaration of Independence does not include them. Listen to the words of Lincoln:

> I have no purpose to introduce political and social equality between the white and the black races. There is a physical difference between the two, which, in my judgment, will probably forever forbid their living together upon the footing of perfect equality; and inasmuch as it becomes a necessity that there must be a difference, I, as well as Judge Douglas, am in favor of the race to which I belong having the superior position. I have never said any thing to the contrary, but I hold that, notwithstanding all this, there is no reason in the world why the negro is not entitled to all the natural rights enumerated in the Declaration of Independence: the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. I hold that he is as much entitled to these as the white man. I agree with Judge Douglas he is not my equal in many respects—certainly not in color, perhaps not in moral or intellectual endowment. But in the right to eat the bread, without the leave of anybody else, which his own hand earns, he is my equal and the equal of Judge Douglas, and the equal of every living man.

In the right to work honestly the Chinaman is your equal and my equal, and the equal of every living man, and I will never consent to the passage of any bill which contravenes that principle. Do not misunderstand me. I do not say the Chinaman is the equal of the Anglo-Saxon socially or intellectually. What I do say is that, other conditions being equal, he has the same right to come to this country and work that any white foreigner has.

Mr. President, it will not do to put this legislation on that ground. It will not do to say that a white man who has all the characteristics and habits of a Chinaman and who will work as cheap as a Chinaman may come and labor here and a Chinaman may not, because, forsooth, he is a Mongolian. It will not do to invite white men to come and labor, no matter how cheap they may labor, and forbid a Chinaman to come and labor at the same wages. You must put this legislation on some other ground than the ground of race or color.

And now, having said this much, Mr. President, with regard to this bill, having shown that it cannot be passed without a violation of treaty obligations, without a violation of good faith to the Chinese Government, having shown that it cannot be passed without striking down the natural right of man to labor for himself, I desire to suggest certain conditions under which I could vote for legislation upon this subject. I would vote for a bill which did not improperly regulate or limit, or unreasonably suspend, the immigration of Chinese laborers. I would vote for a bill which should prevent them coming to this country in such numbers as to endanger our political and social institutions. I would vote for a bill which would prevent their coming here as laborers in such numbers as to ruin labor. I would vote for a bill which should prevent their coming here, if they degrade labor or make it dishonorable. But I cannot vote for a bill which has for its only object, for its only aim and result, the extirpation and the exclusion of the Chinaman from this country.

I am told that I am committed to the passage of this bill by the action of the Republican party to which I belong. I do not so understand it. I do not know how others may regard it. I speak here to-day for myself and not for the Republican party; but I do not understand that the Republican party is committed to any such bill as this. I do not understand that the Republican party, which has a glorious record of having stood all these long years for the natural rights of man, having planted itself on the Declaration of Independence and the principles there enumerated as upon an immovable rock, and said that they should become the guiding spirit of this Republic, has ever committed itself to any proposition that no man shall come to this country to labor unless he is white. This is what the Republican party at its convention said:

> Since the authority to regulate immigration and intercourse between the United States and foreign nations rests with the Congress of the United States and the treaty-making power, the Republican party, regarding the unrestricted immigration of the Chinese as a matter of grave concernment, under the exercise of both these powers, would limit and restrict that immigration by the enactment of such just, humane, and reasonable laws and treaties as will produce that result.

When any man shows me that this bill is only intended to restrict within proper limits Chinese immigration, when any Senator shows me that these provisions are humane, just, or generous, then I will admit that the Republican party is committed to this bill; and not till then.

But gentlemen tell me that the murdered President, sacred forever in the memories of this country, has committed me to the passage of this bill. I do not so understand it. Let us see what Garfield said:

> The recent movement of the Chinese to our Pacific coast partakes but little of the qualities of an immigration, either in its purposes or results. It is too much like an importation to be welcomed without restriction; too much like an invasion to be looked upon without solicitude. We cannot consent to allow any form of servile labor to be introduced among us under the guise of immigration.

I subscribe to every word of that. I know the sentiments of the man who uttered it. I know he had struggled years and years, I know that he had fought for the natural rights of man, and I know that he never intended to commit his party, to commit me, or to commit himself to the passage of a bill which should forbid any man to come to this country and honestly labor with his hands or his brain unless he was white.

The bill strikes not only at servile labor, but it strikes at free labor. It is said that no Chinese laborer desires to come here of his own free will and accord voluntarily; but twenty years in the progress of a nation in these days is a long time. Ideas are the kings which are to dominate nations. Ideas are sovereigns in these days. Who shall tell how much the idea of freedom will penetrate the Chinese mind within the next twenty years?

A somewhat remarkable and significant sentence in this connection is to be found in the statement made in the memorandum of the Chinese commissioners to the commissioners of the United States with reference to this matter upon the first negotiation which resulted in the recent treaty. Listen to what they say:

> To refer, for example, to the Chinese laborers in California: Their number certainly is not small. Being from a race of dwellers upon the sea-coast, they have desired to go thither, and have regarded California as a land of abundance and as furnishing great opportunities. They have also rejoiced in the freedom of the United States. Hence they have not gone there as the result of deceit, or by being kidnapped, nor under contract as coolies, but have flown thither as the wild geese fly.

Who shall say, after reading that sentence, that within twenty years there is to be no Chinese subject who shall long and pine for the liberty which he finds under the flag of the United States and desire to come here seeking that liberty and to labor for himself with his hands or his brain as a good subject and citizen of the United States? This bill says he shall not come.

But we are besought to pass this bill because of the danger that the United States will be overrun with this alien, heathen, Mongolian race. Is this fear a just fear? I would vote, if it be a just fear, for any proper bill which should relieve against that apprehension. If it be necessary, to prevent this Government of fifty million or that portion of its population which lives west of the Rocky Mountains from being overrun by this race, to say that only a thousand Chinese shall come here in any one year, I will vote for such a bill as that. But it is said no such limitation as that will be effectual, because you cannot identify them. The ingenuity which can twist twenty years of prohibition into a mere suspension I think would be able to find out some way which would keep them from coming here in greater numbers than that to which they should be limited.

I recognize the right of a people to protect itself from invasion. When the number coming from any land becomes dangerous to our peace and security I would protect ourselves from that danger. I care not whether it be from the laborer of China, from the Nihilist of Russia, from the Socialist of Germany, from the Communist of France that the danger comes, if it is a real danger, I will vote to protect against that danger.

But what are the facts? Chinese immigration has been in progress for thirty years and more. In 1880 the number of Chinese in the United States was 105,463 by the census. They have been coming in perhaps at the rate of from five to eight thousand a year for the past five years, and it is said that there is danger they will overrun all the country west of the Mississippi.

Mr. President, it is scarcely creditable to the courage of the American people to fear that they are to be overrun. We are told that the Chinese are not coming to stay; that they are here merely to work for a period, and as soon as they can get a little money they go back again, and that they will not come unless there is a demand for their labor; and yet in the next breath we are told that this entire people is to be overrun by this invasion. I want to say here, and say it distinctly, and I want to put it on record, that if there is any just fear I will vote for a proposition to relieve against it; but a bill to prohibit the immigration of Chinese laborers for twenty years, which shall have the effect of forever hereafter keeping Chinese laborers out of this country, is not the way to approach the desired end.

It is said that the Chinese are coming in great numbers just now. Is it the beginning of an influx which is to overrun, which is to swamp the American in this country, which is to drive him out of what he claims as his heritage on the Pacific coast; or is it merely because there is some special demand for their labor to build some railroad? Is it because there is not sufficient labor on the Pacific coast, and will it cease or will it continue? These are questions to be considered.

Again, we are asked to pass this bill because the Chinaman is non-assimilative, because he is not homogeneous, because he cannot become accustomed to our ways, to our society, to our habits, to our modes of thought, to our aspirations, to our political sentiments. Let us try whether he is capable of assimilation or not. Let us give him a fair chance in this country and see whether he will become a good subject and a good citizen. Has he had a fair chance? Has he had fair treatment?

We have, I believe, between two and three hundred Chinamen in Connecticut. I venture to say that in that State they are as peaceable, as orderly, as industrious a class of people as we have among us, and they are getting just as high wages in anything in which they engage as a branch of labor as anybody else. I see nothing in them which leads me to believe that with fair and humane treatment, with reasonable and just and generous treatment, they may not become good citizens of the Republic. They have graduated at our colleges; they have become professors in our colleges; they have become diplomates. The Chinese students who were scattered through Connecticut were as worthy as any class of young men could well be. But when we seek to put them down with an iron hand, when they are put in fear of their lives, how can we expect them to assimilate? Give them a fair chance and see. On the theory that he is a Chinese laborer in distinction to other Chinamen, in distinction to the trader, in distinction to the student, upon the ground that he will not assimilate, do not pass a bill saying that no more shall ever come here, for that is the true intent and meaning of this bill. Is the Chinese trader assimilative and the Chinese weaver not? Is the Chinaman who may come and set up a peanut-stand on the corner of the streets in San Francisco and sell peanuts and bananas and oranges assimilative, and a Chinese laborer who works at the loom non-assimilative? Oh no, Mr. President, this argument is too inconsistent.

This brings me to notice the last ground upon which we are asked to vote for this bill; and that is because the Chinese laborer comes into competition with the American laborer, which he has no right to do; that he will work cheaper than the American laborer, and therefore he should be prevented from coming. That may be a true argument in favor of a proper bill, but it is no argument in favor of such a bill as this. But if it be an argument, I desire to say that it is not an argument which applies to a Chinaman only. A Chinaman has just as good a right to come here and put himself into competition with an Anglo-Saxon as has a German or an Irishman. It is a question of natural right; it is a question of the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This argument applies to all who work in foreign lands and who will come here and work for less than those already here.

The protective principle is invoked in favor of this bill; and what is that principle? I am in favor of protection to American labor. I am not what may be specifically termed a high protective tariff man, but I am in favor of such protection as will enable the American manufacturer to pay fair, remunerative wages to his operatives and have an even chance with the manufacturer of any foreign country. That is all the American manufacturer asks, that is all the American laborer asks—an even chance—and the Yankee will succeed every time.

I have listened in vain in all this discussion to be told that as soon as the Chinaman gets accustomed to our ways of labor he does not demand and get just as high wages as anybody. He does not, therefore, come here to work at cheaper wages than Americans work. No man comes from a foreign country, whether it be China, or France, or England, or Germany, to labor here but what he first comes to work at less than those who have already been here for a period of time can command; but such men very soon learn everywhere to demand and get the highest wages that are paid; and the Chinaman has as good a right to do it as the subject of any other country.

My opposition to this bill shall not be misrepresented; no false issue shall be raised without my protest. I say, therefore, that I am willing, and I put on record my willingness, to vote for any law we may properly pass, any law we can pass without violation of treaty obligation, to the end that the labor market of this country shall not be oversupplied by immigration from any quarter; that there shall be no undue and ruinous competition in labor; that honest labor shall not be dishonored or degraded anywhere; that the standard of labor shall be fairly remunerative everywhere; that the man who is willing to do honest work with hand or brain, or both, shall receive wages enough to enable him to live respectably, to educate his children, and respect himself. I believe in the dignity of labor and the dignity of the laborer. I believe that work ennobles a man, and that it is the primal law and condition of successful civilization.

I will go all reasonable and proper length to honor and protect labor; but is it true that the coming of one Chinese artisan or laborer to any port in the United States in the next twenty years will tend to dishonor and degrade labor and the laborer? May there not be fields of labor in the next twenty years opening in this country which the American does not wish to fill and which the Chinaman is best adapted to fill?

Let us not in our zeal go too far. Let us not in our prejudice be unjust, harsh, and unreasonable. This proposed law goes too far. It cannot be justified either by the letter or the spirit of the treaty. It strikes down a principle which is dear to every true American, the right of free, honest toil. Harsh in its provisions, severe—I will not say barbarous—in its penalties, the bill reads more like an enactment of the seventeenth century than like a wise, humane, and beneficent statute of the present age and time. It seems to speak once more the language of prejudice and fear rather than that of an advanced and advancing civilization. One of our great poets has affirmed that "humanity sweeps onward;" but the man who looks through passionless eyes at this bill when it shall take its place on our statute-book, whether as poet, philosopher, or statesman, may well exclaim, "legislation sweeps backward."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the substitute reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Chief Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In section 1, line 4, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten," so as to read:

That from and after the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of ten years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on all political questions. I do not know how he would vote on this question if he were here, and I refrain from voting.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] who is necessarily absent from his seat. I shall refrain from voting on all questions relating to this bill. I make the announcement now so as not to trouble the Senate by making it hereafter.

Mr. CONGER, (when Mr. FERRY's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. FERRY] is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] I make the announcement now once for all.

Mr. MAXEY, (when Mr. HARRISON's name was called.) The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] is engaged in the investigation of a case in the Military Committee, and I agreed to pair with him on all political questions. This matter was especially excepted. He did not notify me how he would vote on the pending question. I make the statement so as to show why he is absent.

Mr. HAWLEY, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this bill generally with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] If he were here, I presume he would vote "nay." I should vote "yea."

Mr. MAXEY, (when his name was called.) As I stated I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HARRISON.] This question was excepted out of the pair, not being regarded as political. I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] upon the bill and upon this amendment. If he were present he would vote against the amendment, and I should vote for it.

Mr. PUGH, (when his name was called.) On this amendment I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VAN WYCK, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.] If he were here, I should vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Aldrich,	Davis of Illinois,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Allison,	Dawes,	Jackson,	Saunders,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Brown,	Frye,	McDill,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Harris,	McMillan,	Teller.
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell,

NAYS—23.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jonas,	Morgan,
Beck,	Garland,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Call,	George,	McPherson,	Slater,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	Maxey,	Vest,
Coke,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Walker.
Fair,	Hill of Colorado,	Miller of N. Y.,

ABSENT—30.

Anthony,	Grover,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Vance,
Camden,	Hawley,	Pendleton,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Plumb,	Williams,
Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,	Windom.
Gorman,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Groome,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong this debate or to restate the argument which has, to my own satisfaction, as stated by the honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] just now, demonstrated the enormity of the legislation which is proposed. The vote which has just been taken shows that it is the purpose of those having this bill in charge to force it through without regard to its effect upon the public faith of this Government, just pledged, by an act in which the Senate itself took its constitutional share, to the Empire of China.

Such is the purpose of the framers of this bill, we having promised that we would not prohibit but would only reasonably suspend the immigration of Chinese laborers to this continent, that promise having been accompanied with an express assurance given to China, reported to us by our envoys, that it was the purpose of this Government to use this power to adjust the balance of this class of labor in different parts of the country. When China asked for a more specific definition of this right of suspension, our commissioners said to China, "You may trust in the justice and good faith of the Government of the United States."

In the face of that treaty and in the face of that contemporaneous promise reported to us before the treaty was ratified by the Senate, it is now the purpose of a majority of this body to proceed to prohibit, not to suspend, but to proceed to do the one thing which we promised we would not do, and which our commissioners assured China might be left to the justice and good faith of the people of the United States. This is proposed to be done for the reason perhaps best stated by the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] usually so sensitive to the obligations of public faith and of public morality, that he thinks whether such things should be done or not should be left to the people of the particular locality immediately to be affected.

Mr. President, I do not so read the Constitution of the United States. I understand that legislation to bear equally on every part of the country must first commend itself to the will of a majority of the Representatives and Senators representing every part of the country. The Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] in his capacity as a Senator represents, and must and will I am sure on his conscience vote for the interest of Massachusetts or of Maine, as he does for the interest of California or of Nevada. The doctrine announced by the Senator from Delaware had its fit and logical consequence in the carefully written and prepared speech of the honorable Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. GEORGE,] in which, seizing upon this bill, carrying its logic not one whit beyond where just reasoning would carry it, he said that this was a white man's government, framed by white men for themselves and for their white posterity, and that if the question arose of dealing with the African race he should expect the same deference to be paid to the wishes of the white people of Mississippi that he was prepared to pay to the wishes of the white people of California.

It is a startling and a significant fact in regard to the question of African citizenship in this country, that a Senator whose constituents are largely, a majority of them, of African blood, if I do not mistake, announces to the Senate that in his judgment the rights of citizenship and the residence of the African race in this country are not unlikely to be hereafter a subject of reconsideration. The honorable Senator from Delaware declares that it is a choice between two civilizations that Senators are about to make. I deny it. I affirm, on the contrary, that the vote I shall give is a vote to welcome to the one civilization, the offspring of Christianity and of freedom, the men of every blood and of every clime.

The honorable Senator said that the Chinese race had for ages dwelt under and submitted to a despotism, and therefore they were constitutionally and congenitally unfit for freedom. Of what race on the face of the earth is not that true? Compared with the mighty spaces over which even the history of this one empire extends, how brief and insignificant a time is it since the ancestors of that honorable Senator and my own were clad in skins and supping on acorns and offering human sacrifices to pagan divinities? Mr. President, it is the mission of freedom, it is the mission of the American Constitution, it is the mission of the Declaration of Independence, it is the mission of the Gospel of Christ, to give the lie to the assumptions which unfortunately found a lodgment in the usually clear intellect of the honorable Senator from Delaware.

Then we are met by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and others who think with him, with the remark of the inferiority of this Chinese race. The Senator from Colorado seems to think that the crowning glory and dignity of every human being is to have some person or other that he can despise, and if we are not permitted to despise a Chinaman what luxury or comfort is there left to the white man of Colorado? He says, or is reported in the RECORD to have said, that the Anglo-Saxon race has the right to look down upon every other branch of the Caucasian race and upon every other member of God's family. I will leave the particular claim of the Anglo-Saxon to have a contempt for other Caucasian races to be dealt with by the distinguished Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES,] and the distinguished Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES,] who so honorably occupy seats on this floor, and who I think would hardly be willing to agree to this precise claim on the part of the Anglo-Saxon.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is well aware, because he has had a conversation with me on the subject, that I did not look over my remarks, and that when I said "Anglo-Saxon" I corrected myself and said "Caucasian." As it appears in the report it makes no sense at all. I did not look over the report. I started by saying "Anglo-Saxon," and corrected myself by saying "the Caucasian race." I proceeded then to say that some portions of the Caucasian race, for instance, the Anglo-Saxons, have claimed the right to look down upon other parts of the Caucasian race.

Mr. HOAR. What are they? Will the Senator inform me, that I may not misrepresent him, what are the portions of the Caucasian race that the Anglo-Saxon race has a right to look down on?

Mr. TELLER. I cannot now stop to discuss that question, but I will tell you some other time.

Mr. HOAR. I ought to say that the Senator from Colorado undoubtedly meant to correct his original statement about the Anglo-Saxon, but his present statement is precisely the same, as I understand it, as the one he made formerly.

Mr. TELLER. The principle is the same; I do not depart from it. I say the Caucasian race is superior in mental force, intellectual vigor, and morals to any other branch of the human family. Then I say that there are grades in the Caucasian race. I am not going now into any dissertation as to the different grades of intellectual strength in the race, but I asserted that as a fact.

Mr. HOAR. I hope to occupy but about five minutes in all that I have to say, but I wish to put upon record a little, though very important, testimony in regard to the very point which is made by the honorable Senator from Colorado. Here is the statement of Mr. Samuel Johnson, one of the most learned, accomplished, and brilliant men who has treated scientifically the condition of the nations of the East, and who, about a week ago, died, to the great loss of science and literature, and who has gone to his reward. He says the principles of the Chinese are—

Of the essence of honesty, and the persistence with which this tone has dominated the national thought for thousands of years seems to find explanation in traits that rest on the best of evidence. Thus Williams, in common with all other competent observers, testifies to the general security of life and property in China; and Meadows, whose opinion of Chinese adherence to truth is very low, yet believes that there are "as many individuals of high and firm principles among them as in many, perhaps in any, of the Christian nations."

He considers the system of guarantee, which pervades all relations, as supplying the place of natural veracity, and declares that he has "never known an instance of a Chinese openly violating a guarantee known to have been given by him."

In that crowning glory of humanity, the love of truth, will the Senator from Colorado affirm that any race could show a better picture of itself than that which this American man of science attributes to the Chinese?

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. HOAR. Let me read further from this author, and then I will yield:

Pumpelly's experience did not corroborate the accepted ideas concerning the dishonesty of the Chinese. Brine, in his careful history of the Taiping rebellion, denies the common charges of rapacity and fraud. Father Huc's statement, that "European merchants who have had dealings with the great commercial houses of China are unanimous in extolling the irreproachable probity of their conduct," is generally admitted. Giles speaks of the trustworthiness of servants left in the entire charge of houses, and thinks thieving is not more common than in England. Medhurst tells us that "honesty is by no means a rare virtue," and that the Chinese boy, in this quality, "will match, if well treated, with any servant in the world."

These are all persons who have dwelt in China, the highest authority—

That for thirty years he lost nothing by theft in China but a small revolver; that the Chinese take no such precautions as we do against fraud in dealing with each other; that large sums are constantly intrusted to native hands in the transactions of the interior, where the temptation to embezzlement is very great. It is well known that Chinese merchants do not generally give nor require written agreements in their dealings with foreigners. Objects of value are exposed for sale as it would not be possible to do in England; and lines of coolies carry money freely through the streets without protection from police. Scarth states that not more than 1 per cent. of the tea bought at Canton was examined by the buyers. Davis describes the public porters as so trustworthy that "not a single article was lost by the British embassies in all the distance between the northern and southern extremes of the empire."

Mr. TELLER. If I made the assertion of a difference between people intellectually and morally, the Senator has got on my side so far as to assert that there is a distinction between them morally if not intellectually, for he asserts here, if he asserts anything at all, if there is any logic in his position, that the Chinese is superior morally, so far at least as truth is concerned, to the American. That I deny.

Mr. HOAR. I made no such statement.

Mr. TELLER. That is the logical conclusion of the statement.

Mr. HOAR. That I deny.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. The honorable Senator asks if we can say that the Americans are lovers of truth to the extent there stated. If he wants to know whether I believe that the mass of the Chinese, the people who come to this country, are lovers of truth, I tell him frankly I do not; and that is the experience of every man who has come in contact with them. I do not deny but what there are some men in China, there always have been in its history, who are the equals of any other people morally and intellectually. I understand very well that the Golden Rule was a Chinese philosopher's statement. I understand that hundreds of years before the Christian religion that statement was made by Confucius, but I do say——

Mr. HOAR. I think I must insist on the floor. The Senator is straying entirely——

Mr. TELLER. The masses of the people in that country do not regard truth, and especially the class that come to this country.

Mr. HOAR. Here is the summing up, which I was about to read, of the testimony of Mr. Johnson. He says:

It points to an average honesty in the masses certainly not inferior to that which our best types of western national character would present.

Then he goes on to speak of their morals in other respects. Citing Williams, he says:

Williams describes the Chinese as "a vile and polluted people, among whom brutality and coarseness are covered by a mere varnish of manners." Yet he allows that "they have more virtues than most pagan nations;" that there are no gin-palaces nor indecent theatrical shows, and even that public opinion favors morality more than among their neighbors. The penal code has penalties for keeping a gambling-house. Classic odes, imperial edicts, and moral precepts denouncing intemperance testify in all times to the prevalence of this vice and to the strenuous efforts to repress it. Alcohol in western countries kills ten persons to one victim of opium in China. Delirium tremens is unknown.

The author quotes an anti-Chinese authority, who says:

The difference in the standard and practice of virtue between China and Christian lands is certainly not so striking as to form the basis of a very marked contrast, or to render it modest or prudent for us to designate any particular vice or class of vices as especially characteristic of the Chinese. This piece of justice loses none of its force from the fact that the writer hastens to inform us that, nevertheless, he believes "a high degree of moral culture to be consistent with the greatest spiritual ignorance and destitution." (i. e., as to the knowledge of Christ,) and that "Satan has used this instrumentality of a (good) moral system in China to keep the soul away from God."

Then the author says that the class of Chinese in the ports are demoralized by the western sailors, but—

As to the interior, the testimony of travelers is almost universally favorable.

* * * * * * * * *

While the city of New York counts one pauper for every fifty persons, and the proportion in the whole State is nearly half as large, we can heartily condemn Chinese civilization for failing to diffuse the blessings of self-support.

* * * * * * * * *

The order and quiet that prevails, especially by night, in Chinese cities have been noticed by all travelers. The greatest harmony and tranquillity reign among the boat-population of Canton. The gates of cities are closed at night-fall, shops are shut, and the people resort to their homes, with little need of local police. The good temper and even courtesy of crowds are said to be equally striking; long lines wait quietly, and there is no pushing.

* * * * * * * * *

Ammianus speaks of their quiet behavior and unwarlike spirit; "a still and gentle people, frugal and shy, and wonderfully self-restrained."

* * * * * * * * *

Perhaps the higher mark of real civilization is the disposition to resort to moral rather than physical modes of settling disputes, and to recognize the force of reason; and for this the Chinese are conspicuous. * * * They regard passion as indecent and vulgar, and bear injuries with an equanimity that would make a European ungovernable.

* * * * * * * * *

Such facts as these should forbid us to suppose them wanting in courage. Their military annals abound in brave leaders, bold censors, and heroic martyrs to public duty. Persistent defenses of besieged towns, ending in the self-destruction of the defenders by thousands, illustrate the history of wars with Tartars and European invaders. The desperate courage of Manchooria garrisons, like those of Chin Kiang and Chapoo, and the defense of the Pei-Ho against the French and English fleets in the opium war, enforce our strongest sympathy.

* * * * * * * * *

The educational impulse, thus encouraged, expresses itself in the small private schools which are everywhere supported by the people, day schools in the poorest country towns and evening schools for mechanics in the cities, the teachers being usually graduates of higher schools who have not been able to secure official posts. It is probably the great difference between the numbers of written characters learned by different classes and at the different schools that leads to the widely-varying estimates now before us of the number of persons in the empire who can be said to "read and write." Two facts are beyond question. All classes are admitted to the schools without distinction, and the price of tuition is very low, parents, in fact, paying according to their means. Persons of almost every class make efforts to send their children to school. "All parents," says Brine, "deem placing their sons at school a matter of first importance; and I have seen agricultural laborers and boatmen save as much as possible from their small earnings from the day of marriage and look forward to the time when the boy could be sent to pick up the small amount of learning so requisite for his future success in life." "Every one," says De Mas, "reads the bulletins on the walls. The poor can read what characters belong to their occupations. Often in the British consulate, when British sailors have to make their mark, Chinese will be able to write and sign their depositions."

The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] furnishes us with a Greek word which he thinks is the answer to this whole claim that we are violating the spirit. He says there is no homogeneity. The Senator's argument sounded to me as if it had come down from the ancient times of the original settlement of New England, when in witchcraft days for about twenty years our Puritan ancestors concluded that they could not have a republic without homogeneity in the persons who were to frame it, and they undertook to send out Roger Williams into Rhode Island and the Quakers back to England, and somebody else, I dare say, to Vermont. I do not know how they happened to go there.

Mr. INGALLS. And sold the Indians to Bermuda.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know anything about that. That known, the Senator from Vermont furnished us with a remarkable piece of historical information, that no republic had ever existed successfully on the face of the earth which did not have a homogeneous population. I do not so understand it. I understand that the populations of the Swiss Republic are quite as different in their characteristics, in their mental traits, as any difference which exists between the average Chinese population and the average of the American workingmen. In the Swiss Republic to-day a man gets up in the Swiss Diet and makes a speech in French which is replied to by the next speaker by a speech in the German language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true——

Mr. HOAR. They are composed of different races, of different habits, of different religious faith.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will allow me, that is true; I have heard them myself. My friend here in the Senate gets up and makes a speech in fine English; I get up and make a speech in the common dialect of the people; and so are we not homogeneous? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Since the Senator gave us yesterday his opinion as to the rule of proposed morals applicable to the rights of persons who travel on the face of the earth, denying, as I understood him to do in substance and in logic, the affirmation of the fathers who founded the Republic, denying the affirmation that the right of expatriation involved the duty of all nations to welcome the persons expatriated, declared by this Senate by a majority of 39 to 5 in 1868, (a majority of which I believe he formed one, although I am not sure about that,) I think there is a considerable want of homogeneity between the Senator and myself.

During the past week I have received by every mail letters in large numbers from persons thoroughly acquainted with the Chinese race, merchants, men of business, scholars, college presidents and professors, women who have taught in Sunday-schools, uniting in their testimony as to the capacity of that people for Christianity, for civilization, for freedom, for republicanism. I should like, if it were proper to detain the Senate, to read a large number of these letters. One which has impressed me very much I desire especially to read. It is from a lady in Connecticut. She says:

> It is seventeen years to-day since my brother, a young man of rare promise, laid down his life on a Southern battle-field in defense of human rights, and his blood cries out against those who are trying to make us believe that God and our fathers meant only black and white when they declared the nations of one blood.
> Ten years ago we received into our household two Chinese lads, twelve years of age, who came from the middle or merchant class and were members of the Chinese educational mission recently recalled. These boys, taken from heathen surroundings, were not only as intelligent, courteous, and refined as any youths in this Christian land, but they were exceptionally noble and high-minded. During all these years they have grown into the heart of our family life, tender of our sick and aged, sorrowing with us over our dead, until they have become our own kindred; and the hopes and ambitions buried in our brother's grave blossom anew as they live over his experiences in their college career. You can understand, then, how our hearts grow hot with indignation as we hear men who are not worthy to stand in their presence speak of our beloved brethren as belonging to an essentially and irreclaimably inferior race. Like the Jews of old who despised the Gentiles, these noble Senators will, some of them, see the despised Chinamen sitting with Abraham and Isaac, and themselves, the children of the kingdom, cast out.

These boys, graduates of one of our principal American colleges, so noble, so pure, so affectionate, so capable of the tenderest family life and family ties, have but to add to their character the crowning glory and distinction of being laborers and they become the subjects of the penal legislation of this bill. They have but to go to a technical school, they have but to become artists in pottery like Wedgewood, or artists in silk, they have but to become engineers like Baldwin or like Eads, and these young men whom this lady so beautifully describes at once have branded upon their brows the condemnation of the American Congress and the legislation which American civilization produces in the closing years of the nineteenth century. I think the prosperity of California, the prosperity of America, the prosperity of mankind, is not to be bought, and cannot be bought, by a crime like that.

It has been said that the coming of these people is a danger to our labor. I deny it. The affirmation is a violation of one of the simplest and best-settled economic laws which the experience of mankind has established. The introduction of a new class of labor into a State capable like California of supporting 17,000,000 people, with its lands undeveloped, with so many of its mines unwrought, its natural resources unused, elevates the condition and increases the wages of every laboring-man who is now found upon the soil, especially if he be, as is claimed, of a race which is in any degree, by education, or by capacity for labor, or capacity for government, or for rising socially, the superior race. The bill is not only a blow at Christianity, it is not only a blow at republicanism, it is not only a blow at the traditions of the Republic, but is more than all a blow at the labor and prosperity of the State of California. If her Senator in charge of the bill succeeds in getting it passed he will have diminished by a large per cent. the chance of every laborer there now to grow into a farmer, the chance of every man who now dwells in a tenement to live in a home that he shall own, the chance of every unskilled laborer to become himself or to see his child become a skilled laborer.

Mr. President, if this legislation be not wrong, as Abraham Lincoln said of slavery, nothing is wrong. If it be not a violation of the moral law, there is no moral law as it has been pronounced to us. The sneers of the Senator from Vermont, who spoke of free-lovers and of the classes of persons who endeavor to do away with moral restraints, are out of place, and are unworthy of that honorable Senator when he undertakes to class the opposition to legislation like this, coming as it does from the sentiment of the country such as is represented here, with that description of persons.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Massachusetts is willing to admit, as I infer from what he says, that he is opposed to free-lovers. Whereabouts in the Declaration of Independence or in the constitutions of the province or State of Massachusetts does he get any authority to say that? Has not a man and has not a woman a right to his or her own opinion, and have they not a right to regulate their own conduct? If they have not a right to form their own relations as between themselves, how can they have a right that the public cannot also judge about, of intruding themselves into other societies and into other families of people who do not want them? Coming down from the beauty of oratory, I should like to know where the logical distinction is. The ground upon which we legislate against free love, and polygamy, and all other kinds of moral wickedness, over which we have control by legislative power, is that it belongs to the will of the people as a body organized into a government to decide upon the conduct of persons who are in it or who are to come to it.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly I do.

Mr. HOAR. The logical distinction is this: whoever commits an offense against the moral law or against the legislation of any particular society is of course justly liable to its penalty, and of the propriety of such legislation I concede freely that every society is to be the judge, but this legislation does not strike at the Chinese in person who violate the law of California or the law of the United States. This legislation says: "If your skin be yellow, if your father and mother were Mongolians, you may be as pure, as good, as law-abiding, as useful, as honorable, as honest as any man who lives, but because of that into which no moral quality possibly can enter, the color of your skin, you shall be made an exile or a criminal, or sent to the penitentiary, if you stay." It seems to me that my honorable friend from Vermont has strangely failed to learn the lesson of the history of this country for the last thirty years if he does not see the distinction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps I have, Mr. President; I have failed to learn a great many things that my friend from Massachusetts knew without learning, undoubtedly. But we come back at once to the question, who is to decide, on his own statement, what the moral law is? Is it he? Is it I? Not at all. It is all; it is the body of the people organized into a government; they and they alone can decide. If they decide against somebody who thinks that the moral law justifies him in doing something that the rest think ought not to be done, on the logic of my honorable and distinguished friend the case would be gone up, because we have no right to do any such thing. It therefore proves on his own statement that there is inherent in every people organized into a community that we call a State, the right to regulate the conduct of the persons within it, and by consequence and analogy the right to regulate what persons shall come into it; not to drive them out; I do not assert that, nor do I deny it at this present moment, because that is far from this question.

The bill does not provide that the subjects of the Emperor of China who are now in the United States lawfully shall go away; it does not provide that any person who is within our borders shall do or suffer anything whatever; but it simply provides, with the consent of the Government of China (which has a right to be a government of some kind or other, I suppose) that a certain class of the subjects of that empire shall not come into our community for a certain period of years.

That is the proposition; and like every other such proposition, whether you go into the moral law about crimes or whatever, it is a question that depends upon the just judgment, (and that every man must judge about for himself,) the policy of the community, the State, or the nation. It has always been so; it always must be so until every government is broken down, as the Nihilists propose to break down the Government of Russia—and I wish it were broken down as it is now organized, not by such wicked means, but by such just means as our forefathers broke down the government of the King of Great Britain in this country—but it must depend always upon what the people organized into a community think it is fit to do.

My learned friend says that that is not a sound proposition. He says that homogeneity is not according to the historic experience of civilized peoples necessary to the success of a republic, and he says that the Greek republics did not have a homogeneous population. So they did not; and where are the Greek republics now? How long did they last and what caused their fall? Exactly that thing, that they did not possess that quality in most of the instances of the Greek republics, and away they went.

My honorable friend says that the Swiss Republic is not homogeneous. I deny it. The difference in language, the difference not in race, (for there is no difference in race in the Swiss Republic,) but the difference in varieties of the same race that are analogous, that are consistent with each other, does exist and they get on. Does my honorable friend think that it is an advantage to a republic that its citizens should be made up of diverse races, of diverse views, of diverse obligations, of diverse opinions as to what the common prosperity of all requires? He cannot say so. I am sure he will not. Therefore why is it that we are so continually reminded by my honorable friend and others that we are violating the principles of the foundation of republican governments in undertaking to say this simple thing? I am not speaking of the way we are saying it at this moment, but the principle that lies at the bottom of this bill and which surrounds it on every side, as to the right of the people of the United States, consistently with the moral law, with the law of Christianity, and with the law of nations, to make a regulation as to the reception of foreigners into the body of our Commonwealths. That is the proposition. My honorable friend has not denied what I stated yesterday, that every book upon natural law or public law that I have had the pleasure of reading asserts what I have asserted.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator be kind enough to state how I could deny what the books he has had the pleasure of reading say, without knowing what they are?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think the Senator could, and, perhaps, we have read different books; but if my learned friend will produce one book upon natural law, one book upon public law, which asserts anywhere or admits anywhere that it is not within the just right of every nation to determine what people of other nations shall come within it, then I shall be wiser than I am now, and I should be glad to be wiser. Can he? I venture to say that he cannot. All the wealth of the learning of the old Commonwealth that he so well represents can produce no such authority, for I repeat in my belief it does not exist. The men who framed the Declaration of Independence, John Hancock and Samuel Adams, not unworthy citizens of that ancient Commonwealth, recognized and asserted in that Declaration, not the right of everybody to be in these colonies that then declared themselves independent States, but that it was the right of every people being in a particular territory on the surface of this globe to establish for themselves—not for other peoples—a government of their own, not the government of somebody else. And in that same Declaration, as one of the accusations against the British king, they said that he had sent to them swarms of persons whom the people did not want and that he had allowed the savages, who are human beings, to make incursions upon their western borders that were not so far west as the borders are now, and so on, and so on. The Declaration of Independence, if you can believe anything from the use of human language, recognizes and asserts the family right, the consolidated right of every people residing in any country of the globe to decide for themselves the conditions upon which and under which they are to go on, and that includes of course the question of receiving people from other countries and other shores into their family. And when they came to the construction of the Constitution of the United States, there these same fathers said that the Congress of the United States should have the right to prescribe a uniform rule of naturalization; that is, should have the power to prescribe how, and when, and upon what terms the citizens and subjects of other countries should become a part of the co-ordinated families of the States of this country. Was not that it? Where did they get that right if this doctrine is correct that no people has a right to exclude anybody that it does not like? I am not on the question of whether it is wise or unwise to do it, but I am on the inherent right, if you have a government at all, for every people to determine for itself whom it will receive into the body of its constituent government. That is the proposition; and so the Constitution of the United States, instead of leaving it to the several States to provide that thing, put it into the National Legislature and said that they should be the judges of how and when and upon what terms people from other countries should become a part of the people of this country, for the alien, whether he be a Chinaman or a Japanese or a Hindoostanee or an Englishman or an Irishman or a German or a Frenchman, is not one of the people of this country because his body and his soul are here among us. He is in us, it is true, but not of us. He becomes of us when, according to the rules prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, Congress has thought it wise and fit that he should become one of us.

That is the way I read the Constitution of the United States and I cannot fail to believe that my friend from Massachusetts would read it in the same way. It was left to their judgment to determine, and at the outset they determined that no Chinaman or other man, although they then confined it to white men, that no man (leaving out this question of color, which has nothing to do with what I have to say) could become one of the people of the United States until he complied with certain conditions and was subjected to certain tests that the judicial tribunals of the country should impartially apply. One of those tests was his five years' residence. Another test was that he should take an oath, if one could be found binding upon his conscience, that he renounced all allegiance to every other power. That recognized that there were other powers that he must get rid of. Another was that he must be proved to be friendly to the institutions and to the polity—the intrinsic polity I mean, of course—of the Government of the United States. Where do we get that power upon the principles that are presented here to-day? According to what my honorable friend from Massachusetts has said, it is an outrage upon this universal oneness of every human being with every other human being upon the face of the globe. I deny the proposition. I repeat what I stated yesterday, that so long as you are to have government at all, that government, like a family or a partnership, must be the judge for itself as to what persons it will take into the body of the people, that at the last in our form of government constitute the Government itself. It has always been so; it always will be so as long as governments last. You cannot have a government without it; you never have had one without it.

So then we stand; and these Chinamen having a right to come here under the Burlingame treaty and it being thought, wisely or unwisely, with prejudice or without, that their coming in the numbers and in the way and of the character that they did was injurious to the interests of the United States, it was provided by another treaty that the old treaty should be abrogated and that the United States should be remitted to its original natural right as a government of determining as to a certain part of these Chinese people, named, specified, and described, whether they should come or not within a reasonable period of time, in order to test the question by the experiment as far as we had it already. Where is the harm in that upon the widest principles of fair play, upon the widest humanity, unless you say that there is nothing in the nature of a government which entitles one people to be the judges for themselves of whom they shall take in? I say that to maintain that doctrine is to maintain a proposition that is contrary to all human experience, is contrary to all human discussion almost, until within a very short period, and is contrary to every step that our fathers from their Declaration of Independence to this day have declared. There is now upon your statute-book a law which condemns the cooly trade, as it is called, and punishes it by penalties more severe, I think—I have not looked at it lately—than the penalties of this bill and which puts, on the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts, the seal of its unjust condemnation upon the man who is a servant. We may, therefore, if that law be one that can stand, say that a man shall not be brought into this country, or in an American vessel carried to any other, who is under any contract to serve another man as a servant; but we may not say that he shall not come into our country in his character as a mere laborer for ten years or twenty years as the case may be! How can you distinguish? And yet, I believe—I am not sure that I am right about that—that this cooly bill came from the magnanimous heart and the large brain of the predecessor of my honorable friend from Massachusetts, Sumner, the advocate of human rights as his successor is, and as I hope I and my colleague would be in our humble and more simple way. I think it came from him. I remember once certainly that he introduced a bill into this body to improve that act which I think he was the author of in the first place, and which declared, if I remember it correctly, that the penalties of the law should be imposed upon any master of an American vessel that carries a Chinaman who is a servant—it does not say "laborer" but "servant"—anywhere on the face of the globe to be a servant for any man. Of course that does not prove that that law is right, but it seems to prove that it was thought by somebody before us to-day that it was a part of the just mission of every government to be entitled to have an opinion and to enforce it upon such subjects.

That is what seems to me to be the state of this case, sir, and while I shall feel compelled to vote against this bill if the twenty years' clause is retained and I shall earnestly hope that it will never become a law, it will not be because I do not believe in the right of the Government of the United States to determine as to everybody, upon any ground that seems good to itself, what persons from abroad shall form a part of our political communities and compose a part of the people of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish only to say a word. The honorable Senator from Vermont challenged me to produce from the writers on public law any who affirmed the obligation of a people to receive persons from any other nation whom they thought fit to exclude. The Senator from Vermont knows very well that all the writers on public law, with scarcely an exception, deny altogether the American doctrine of expatriation, and the same authorities which affirm the right of the people to exclude affirm the right of the sovereign from whom the subject wishes to depart to retain. The American doctrine is different. The American doctrine affirms, as the Declaration of Independence affirms and as the New Testament affirms as I read it—two authorities which lie at the very foundation of all law, domestic, international, individual, which governs mankind—that the right is equal, that the human being has the right conforming to law, conforming to the proper regulations of the place to which he goes, to go and seek his fortune and to earn his living by honest labor.

The Senator seems to me, when he alludes to the right of Congress to pass laws providing for naturalization, to confound two very distinct things. We may undoubtedly regulate the conditions upon which the citizens of a foreign country shall be admitted to citizenship here; we may undoubtedly establish rules or fix a period of time which will make it certain that that citizen of a foreign country has renounced his old allegiance and has acquired sufficient knowledge of and respect for our institutions to make a good citizen, just as we, the legislative power, properly fix the age of twenty-one or twenty-five or what other age the experience of mankind dictates at which the native may exert the one great privilege of citizenship, that of voting. But would the Senator argue from the right of the legislative power to fix twenty-one years as the earliest age at which a person may exercise the privilege of a voter the power to deny or to deny any particular race the right to vote altogether?

The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution are full of implied affirmations of the truth of the doctrine upon which I stand. Among the charges against the monarch of Great Britain which justified the separation was the fact that although our fathers recognized his rightful share of legislative power over the colonies and never before denied it, they charged as one of the great abuses which justified the separation that—

> He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

The Constitution itself assumes that the naturalization of persons of other communities will be unrestricted except within the reasonable limit which I have stated, and provides that Congress shall pass laws for the naturalization of foreigners which shall be uniform, not which shall distinguish between races and between nationalities. The fourteenth amendment, in the adoption of which I suppose the honorable Senator from Vermont himself bore a conspicuous part, as he does in all legislation here, provides that every person born in the United States becomes from that fact a citizen thereof. The children of any of the Chinese laborers now in California become citizens by the affirmance in the Constitution itself of the natural fitness of all men for republican life and their natural equality without regard to race.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

There is citizenship by birthright, without regard to race or color or nationality. Then the fifteenth amendment supplements it by the provision that this citizenship which is a birthright shall carry with it the right of citizens to vote, or that that right "shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

So that this legislation is not only in violation of the treaty, not only in violation of the solemn affirmation of Congress that the right of expatriation carries with it the right of citizenship of the country where a man goes, but it is equally in violation of the Declaration of Independence and the spirit of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, it requires no deduction even from the statement of the honorable Senator from Vermont but only his application to see that his argument involves the right to exclude from this country all the naturalized citizens if Congress sees fit to exercise it. If you may shut the door, you may put outside the person who is here contrary to the interest of the people and without right. Will the honorable Senator from Vermont affirm that if that reconsideration of the relation of the African race to citizenship, which the Senator from Mississippi seems to foreshadow, should ever come, we may rightfully, consistently with the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence, expel persons of the African race from this country and deport them to Liberia?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the principle upon which we say in regard to the right to vote that no male citizen shall vote until he is twenty-one years of age if you please, is that it belongs to the body of the people who compose the Government to say how political power shall be exercised. Otherwise the people would have no right at all to say that a man of twenty-one should vote; they would have no right to say anything about it. He had got the natural right at the very moment he was born to vote, at least once; I will not say how much more often. That doctrine will not stand, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator so that I may understand the proposition as he states it——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am trying to understand the proposition of my friend just now.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the honorable Senator if he means to affirm that the right in a body-politic to fix twenty-one years or some other limit for coming to the right to vote in its discretion, involves the power to limit altogether the coming to that right to vote of certain races or classes, if it sees fit?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not speaking of races at all.

Mr. HOAR. Classes then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking on this bill of human beings who are not members now of the political community of the United States and who wish to become such, as it is said by my friend from Massachusetts, and that we are perpetrating a great wrong upon them in saying that we are not willing just now that they shall. That is what I am speaking of.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me—I ought to ask his pardon for interrupting him—the Senator took as an illustration of the power the right to fix twenty-one years or some other time as the age for voting, and I desire to understand if he infers from the fact that the public has that right, that it has the right to exclude altogether any class of citizens in the community from voting, because as I understood he argued from the right to limit the period of naturalization of foreigners the right to exclude them altogether. Now, I say those are very different things.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I did argue, as I did, from the acknowledged right, as I think it is now admitted even by the Senator from Massachusetts, of the Government of the United States to fix a period for the naturalization of foreigners, I deduce from that the right of the United States to fix that period at ten thousand years if the United States think it is well for the people of the United States to do that thing, and I say also that under the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, which I still believe in, it is within the competence of Congress, as it has exercised it always to decide upon receiving into this country as one of its people anybody, to require a test of opinion, as extreme as that may be, because the first naturalization law and the last naturalization law all the time requires that a candidate for admission into the body of the people of this country shall have certain opinions that that law defines. These opinions are required to be, very wisely I think, republican, that they shall believe in republican government as against the domination of emperors and kings.

Where do we get the right to test the admission of anybody into this country on the ground of his opinions? We get it if we get it at all—and I am quite clear that we have it—on the fundamental principle I have endeavored so often to state, and which my friend from Massachusetts, I do not understand except by the course of his argument plainly to deny, that it is the right of every government if it be a government to determine what persons shall come into it from outside of it and be a part of it. If we have not that right, then we have not any right to make a naturalization law at all; then the moment any foreigner, be he good or bad, be he a saint or a sinner, sets his foot upon the shores of this American Republic he has the same rights in every respect that the Senator from Massachusetts and I have. I deny the proposition. All civilized laws everywhere in the whole course of history have denied it because they have recognized that it was essential to the existence of a government, if you had any government at all, that that government like a family or a partnership must receive into it only those persons whom it was willing to receive. It was a compact that required the assent of the whole, not of one party but of both.

Mr. President, there is one other thing that I disagree with my friend from Massachusetts about, and perhaps that is of no importance to anybody but my friend from Massachusetts and myself; and that is the New Testament. My friend says that it is the doctrine of the New Testament, that it is the right of every man to go everywhere, and to participate with all others in everything that they enjoy, if I correctly understand him. I deny it. By the New Testament, as it is understood in this country, and has been ever since it was founded, in all of its churches, Republican churches, and I will say Democratic churches, the Congregational churches that prevail in New England more than any other, the member of one church constituting that one religious family analogous to a political family who undertakes to leave the church that he belongs to and go to another has not even the right of expatriation; he must get a letter of credence, and having got it he must submit it to the will of the church that he desires fellowship with, and get the vote of that church to admit him. That is the New Testament as it is understood in Vermont, and I think rightly, and it rests upon that infinite and persistent common sense that all human history has proved to be wisest and best, that every people and every church, every little community in regard to its own particular affairs must decide what persons other than itself are to be received into it and become a part of it. And I think at this day that the constitution of Massachusetts itself undertakes through the political opinions of those who are voters there and their political action, to settle not only the age as to voting but the quality and condition of the man who shall vote, that he must possess certain qualities that he cannot outgrow by the mere lapse of time, that he must be in a particular condition of worldly estate; he must not be a pauper, that he must be in a particular condition of mind, he must not be what the majority of the people consider to be insane; that he must not have been convicted of some crime, that he must possess this, that, and the other quality. Where did the people of Massachusetts get the right to impose any such conditions upon a human being? Any one coming there has a right to judge as well as they, is the argument of my friend from Massachusetts, but that gives away the whole case of every government and turns the whole world into one hotch-potch; and the ladies and gentlemen in the galleries, on that doctrine, have got the same right to come down here and vote and discuss that we have, because when we set up an arbitrary exclusion and say nobody shall come in here and argue and talk and vote, unless he has the certificate of some State or something of that kind, what are you going to do with human rights in a case of that kind? The argument goes to the destruction of all order and government from the top to the bottom.

Sir, in what I have said I do not wish to be understood as saying that this bill in regard to the condition of affairs is politic or impolitic. That is not the question. I only undertook to defend the right of the people of the United States to determine for themselves according to their own honest judgment of their own interests, consistent with justice to others, who shall enter into their borders, who shall compose a part of their people. That is all.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the second amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which will be read.

Mr. INGALLS. I was about to say that I would reserve a vote in the Senate on the amendment that was just declared by a tie vote to be lost, and I now move further to amend the bill by striking out, in line 4 of the first section, the words "the passage of this act" and inserting "information of the passage of this act has been communicated to the Government of China."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion the Senator made some time ago and it has been entered.

Mr. INGALLS. I gave notice that I would offer the amendment, but under the rules I could not really offer it until the one previously acted on should have been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I notice by the RECORD this morning that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] yesterday in my absence misrepresented my position upon this bill, and held me up to public reprobation and denunciation for expressions that I do not entertain and for sentiments that I did not utter. He quoted expressions used by me in the debate upon a previous day in which I stated that the provisions of this bill in some respects were such that my nature revolted at them, and the further statement that, with certain modifications which if adopted would change the character of the bill, I could then vote for it; and he proceeded to argue that I was guilty of some inconsistency, or that in some way I had been disloyal to the instincts of humanity and false and traitorous to the convictions of my soul.

Mr. President, I do not yield to any Senator in my devotion to the axioms of the Declaration of Independence. My political creed is simple. I have never ceased to aspire that all men everywhere might be free. I believe in the universal diffusion of political and civil rights everywhere among all men. I believe in the right of free migration. I believe in the right of fair wages for voluntary labor; and I believe that education should be commensurate with the desire to know, and that the opportunities for happiness should be co-extensive with the capacity to enjoy. I believe also, further, Mr. President, that for nations as for individuals there is nothing so unprofitable as injustice. The thief robs himself, the murderer inflicts a deeper wound upon himself than that which slays his victim, and those who established human slavery upon this continent imposed heavier chains upon this nation than those that bound the wretched slave.

Mr. President, believing this, I cannot doubt, I have never ceased to doubt, that some of the provisions of this bill were unjust; that they were proscriptive; that they were intolerant; that they were illogical, and I ventured to hope that they would be modified or amended, and the Senator from Massachusetts made the accusations that he did against me in the face of the fact that I had already offered to amend the bill. The Senator made that statement in view of the fact that I had then offered an amendment to this bill expressive of my dissatisfaction with it, and saying that I believed it was in violation of public honor and good faith toward the Government of China, and by which I proposed to reduce the period of exclusion from twenty years to ten; and in the face of the further fact that I had also given notice that I intended to offer other amendments, one of which I have already moved to the Senate.

Mr. President, in support of the amendment that I have offered, it is only necessary that I should call the attention of the Senate to the language of the fourth article of the treaty:

> The high contracting powers having agreed upon the foregoing articles, whenever the Government of the United States shall adopt legislative measures in accordance therewith such measures will be communicated to the Government of China.

If those words mean any thing, if they have any significance whatever, the meaning is that whatever legislation we enact, before it shall become operative, shall be communicated to the Government of China for the purpose of receiving, so far as it may, the approbation of that government, because the section proceeds further to say:

> If the measures as enacted are found to work hardships upon the subjects of China the Chinese minister at Washington may bring the matter to the notice of the Secretary of State of the United States, who will consider the subject with him; and the Chinese foreign office may also bring the matter to the notice of the United States minister at Peking and consider the subject with him, to the end that mutual and unqualified benefit may result.

Mr. President, in the interest of good faith to the Government of China, which has made in the Burlingame treaty and in the treaty of 1868 concessions that were never made to any other people, I ask that this amendment may receive the sanction of the Senate, because unless these odious provisions are in some way modified it will be impossible for me under the declarations that I have previously made to support this bill. I believe there are others who feel the same as I do myself, and I believe that those who favor this bill, those who believe that the interests of the Pacific States require the passage of the bill, will promote the success of this measure by agreeing to such modifications as will adapt it to those who believe that public faith requires some essential modification.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I understand that in my absence from the Senate Chamber the Senator from Kansas made some complaint in reference to a statement I made yesterday of his position in regard to this measure. Nothing would pain me more than to misrepresent any Senator upon this floor, and if I knew in what respect the Senator thought I had misstated him I should be very glad to set the matter right if it were in my power, but as I did not hear him, coming in just as he had finished that part of his speech, I am unable to point out any difference between him and me or to acknowledge any mistake. If the Senator thinks it worth while he can state wherein I misstated him.

Mr. INGALLS. I have set the matter right, Mr. President. I do not desire to go further into it.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator declines to call attention to it, I will state that I have reread the Senator's position and reread what I said of it; and while the Senator declared that it was impossible, as I understood him, to vote for this measure if it continued for twenty years, he would vote for it if it were ten years. He said he had some doubt about other features of the bill which he proposed to amend. When I spoke of the measure I did not trouble myself about little matters in the bark, but I reaffirm here that the Senator's position as to the measure itself I correctly stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course, if this amendment is adopted it will render certain amendments necessary in other portions of the bill to make it conform to this provision.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to prolong this debate to any extent so far as I am concerned, but after the remarkable position taken by the two Senators from Massachusetts, and the castigation which I have received at their hands, I feel that I may intrude upon the Senate for a few moments.

As I understand, the Senators from Massachusetts, who seem to be the principal opponents of this bill on this floor, take the position that the bill is contrary to equity, a violation of fundamental principles, a violation of the rights of men that are recognized in the Declaration of Independence and that have been recognized by the Republican party in its history always. Mr. President, if that is true, I should feel very loth myself to vote for it unless the evils were of such magnitude as to render it necessary that I should, in the language of the country, go back upon my record. I am like the Senator from Kansas; I do not yield in my devotion to these principles to anybody. The belief in the right of all men to labor and eat the bread they have earned by their labor is not a newborn thing with me. But I do not understand that any such thing exists. I understand that this is a right which is recognized by every nation in the world, and by everybody in the world almost, unless it may be the Senators from Massachusetts, a right that was recognized in the constitution of Massachusetts in 1780, when they declared in so many words for this kind of legislation. I have it right here, and I will call the attention of the Senate to it:

> The end of the institution, maintenance, and administration of government is to secure the existence of the body-politic, to protect it, and to furnish the individuals who compose it with the power of enjoying, in safety and tranquillity, their natural rights and the blessings of life; and whenever these great objects are not obtained the people have a right to alter the government, and to take measures necessary for their safety, prosperity, and happiness.

That has been the doctrine of all liberal-minded men everywhere at all times. There have been, I will admit, a few people who have risen to the dignity of writing upon this question who have occasionally asserted, as was said here the other day, that the human race is one family and that the same obligations on the part of the Government of this country exist toward the people of any other country that exist with reference to its own citizens; but they are numerically so small and so insignificant that they have never impressed those ideas upon the body-politic of any nation in the world. It cannot be, Mr. President, that one nation will legislate for the interest of all mankind. They will legislate for the interest of their own people first, and that is what they ought to do.

In 1880 the Republican party assembled in convention at Chicago, a convention composed of the leading minds of the Republican party. Presiding over that convention was the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] and we appointed at that convention our representative men on a committee to go out and bring back a declaration of our principles. We expected to promulgate those principles and go to the people and demand their suffrage, and we declared in our platform for this kind of legislation and we pledged ourselves to work for this kind of legislation. Did the Senator from Massachusetts rise in his seat then and answer and say, "Why, this is contrary to the fundamental principles of the Declaration of Independence; this is a violation of the rights of humanity, and it ought not to be done?" The honorable Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] called the attention of the Senate to that a few days ago, and yet it has been ignored. The candidate nominated by that convention published to the world his letter of acceptance in which he not only accepted the doctrines laid down in the platform en masse but proceeded to speak on this very question and to put himself on record in favor of the right of the Government, its legal right, its moral right, to restrict this class of immigration; and it does not come with a right good grace that the two Senators from Massachusetts should now assume all the virtue in the Republican party and accuse everybody else who differs with them on this subject of being moved by hate, as the honorable Senator who addressed the Senate yesterday [Mr. DAWES] declared we all were.

But, Mr. President, I went further, and I got myself into trouble by asserting that there was such a thing in the world as a race superior to another. I knew the honorable Senator who sits nearest me [Mr. HOAR] had addressed the Senate in his eloquent language and with his great learning as he is capable of doing, and had quoted from Humboldt and from Sumner that no liberty-loving man should ever mention the fact that there was such a thing as one race inferior to another. I alluded to that, and said that while in theory it was all right—while it was a sentiment that does much more credit to any man's heart than it does to his head, yet that it was not true in fact; and I said then that the Caucasian race had claimed in its history everywhere to be the superior of some other races; and then I went on and said further that the Anglo-Saxon race—a branch of that—had claimed to be superior to other branches of the Caucasian race.

I did not mean to claim that the Anglo-Saxon was in all respects superior, for the blood that flows in my veins mainly is not from that source; I meant to say that the cultivated, intelligent Englishman and American might with propriety deny the equality intellectually and morally of the Egyptian; I meant to say that the Moor might not claim as much as we; I meant to say that there were other branches of the human family that stood lower than ours in intellectual strength, in mental vigor, and in moral worth, and a man is blind to history who does not know that that is a fact.

Some Senator inquires "are the Egyptians Caucasians?" They certainly are. A great many people are Caucasians who are not wholly white, and I believe the scientist who determined who belonged to the Caucasian race and who did not, did not determine it by the color of their skin but by the shape of their head and by their cranial development.

Now, Mr. President, I have an authority here that even the Senator from Massachusetts will not flout. I have an authority that I propose to read that I believe on a question of this kind is as good as I can read. I believe in the history of this people. No man has lived connected with its government who has ever had a greater love of the human race than Abraham Lincoln. I say further, no man in this country ever discussed the question of the rights of the human race with as much intelligence as Abraham Lincoln did, and yet he declared over and over again in that memorable debate between Stephen A. Douglas and himself in 1858, which attracted the attention of the whole world, that the negro was an inferior race to the white man. He repeated it again and again, and notably at Columbus in 1859, that the negro was and must ever remain the inferior of the white race. Now, Mr. President, because he thus asserted did he deny to the negro any rights that a man ought to exercise? He said:

> Because he is my inferior in intellectual and mental development, and because he has a color to his face not as good as mine, it is no reason why I should deny to him any of the rights that were given by the Almighty.

It was, however, a fact that the man was lower in the scale of human development, and he ought not to be deprived of anything that would enable him to rise. That was Abraham Lincoln's position upon this question. I have it here and I will read it, so that no man can misunderstand it, because Abraham Lincoln repeated it again and again, and it was not an accidental speech that he made when he was led into saying something that reflection might have induced him to change. He said:

> I will say, then, that I am not nor ever have been in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of the white and black races; that I am not or ever have been in favor of making voters or jurors of negroes, nor of qualifying them to hold office, or intermarry with the white people; and I will say in addition to this, that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will forever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality. And inasmuch as they cannot so live, while they do remain together there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I, as much as any other man, am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white race.

That has been the doctrine of men who have as much claim to humanity and to intelligence and intellectual strength as either of the Senators from Massachusetts or any man who has preceded them.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him if he understands that Mr. Lincoln retained that opinion during his entire life?

Mr. TELLER. I understand that Mr. Lincoln never changed upon the question of the inferiority and superiority of the races; but when in the logic of events it became necessary, absolutely necessary in my judgment and in the judgment of other people, that this class of men, our intellectual and mental inferiors, should have protection at the hands of this Government, we determined that the only and proper way to protect them was to give them the advantages of citizenship in all its terms. It was not a desirable thing to do, and nobody knew it better than the great-hearted men who sat in the Senate and helped do it. There was not an intelligent American who looked upon that problem at that time who did not fear that the result would be that the antagonism of the two races would eventually swamp this country. But we had them here. As I said the other day, common humanity, common decency said "You must take these men and put them upon a plane where they can be elevated, and all that God has put in them they must have the opportunity to bring out." Nobody believed then, and nobody believes now who has studied the history of the races and the history of the world, that they will ever be equal in all respects to the Caucasian race. The Senators from Massachusetts do not believe it, and the people of Massachusetts knew that it was not expected of this race of men. Is that any reason why we should deny to them rights? Not at all. If they are weak intellectually, then we should give them assistance. They were a part of the people here; we could not send them abroad; and because we treated them with humanity, with righteousness, and with justice, shall we say that we are bound to extend to all the nations of the earth the same rights that we extended to them?

Mr. President, I do not believe it, and I will stand upon it as an historical and ethnological fact that the races of men are not equal in respect to mental strength and vigor and moral worth, any more than men are equal in all these respects. But because that is my opinion, I will not deny to them their rights. I am not like the Senators from Massachusetts, who apparently believe that before they can concede to a man certain rights he must be their equal. To my inferiors would I always extend all that I would extend to my superiors, and if these people whom we propose to keep out of this country were here, if we found them here when we annexed California, if we found them born upon this soil, I would extend to them every privilege that would have any tendency to make them better and increase their value as they come into the body-politic; but they are strangers to our land, they are strangers to our system of civilization, they are strangers to our Government, and they propose thus to remain. The education of four thousand years and more has made it impossible for a Chinaman to change. The honorable Senator may occasionally read of a man here and a man there who may be induced perhaps to take in the beauties of the Christian religion, and who, brought up in a New England family, may cease to be a heathen; but let us remember that of the four hundred and nearly fifty millions, as the latest authorities say, of these people, the Senator has only found two of that kind.

The honorable Senator asked me, "Do you deny that they are the lovers of truth?" Why, Mr. President, I stated that they had among these people men of great learning, men of great virtue, but the masses of them are not of that character. There are an upper and a lower class and a middle or intermediate class. I spoke of the men who come here, who come here by contract, who are serfs, who are slaves, and when the Senator asks me if I believe they are the lovers of truth as the Anglo-Saxon or other races that we have in this country are, I tell him I do not. If he means by that simply that they will not lie, it may be claimed that it would be impossible to say that they were not lovers of truth; but if he means what the word means, that a man who is the lover of truth is a man who lives up to the highest precepts of the moral law, then he cannot claim that truth for the high or the low men of that nation.

Why, Mr. President, this matter cannot be discussed as it ought to be discussed in the presence of these galleries. We cannot speak of these people as the men who have studied their history and who have come in contact with them ought to speak, if they speak intelligently and properly to the Senate. A people who sell their daughters, infant daughters and grown daughters alike, for purposes too vile to be mentioned, when the public sentiment of the whole community supports them in it, cannot be said to be the lovers of truth.

Mr. President, these people are not desirable in any respect, and no man can shield himself from the crime that he commits against the body of the people of the United States when he attempts to force them into our midst by any sentimental cry of the unity of the races and the brotherhood of man. We owe to the people here a debt that we as legislators ought to discharge, and that is to protect the American laborer in this country, not only against competition, but against that degradation of which I spoke two days ago on this floor that inevitably follows when you bring cheap and servile and degraded labor and put it by the side of the honest labor of this land; and I would rather be charged with a betrayal of some of the sentimentality possessed by the Senators from Massachusetts than that the people should truly say I was forgetful of the great interests of the great mass of men who labor and who are the strength, the support, the glory, and the hope of this American Republic.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FARLEY. I see no occasion for that amendment. We cannot submit this law to the Chinese Government for ratification. If the bill should be passed with the amendment, or without, I cannot see how the Chinese Government would be affected either one way or the other. If the Senator from Kansas insists on the amendment it strikes me that the law will not be affected by it practically. If the amendment should be adopted the Chinese Government cannot change our law. We do not have to submit the law to their ratification. As I said to the Senate the other day, we propose to give sixty days' notice after the passage of the act before it shall take effect. That is ample time to give notice to the Chinese Government. We are within twenty-six or twenty-seven days' time from Washington City to China, and they will have ample notice of the passage of this law. The bill already provides that it shall not go into effect until sixty days after its passage. I see no necessity for the amendment, for the reason that the longer the time is extended the more Chinamen will be shipped from China to this country, knowing that they will not be affected by the bill until it goes into operation.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand that the bill provides anywhere for official notification to the Government of China.

Mr. FARLEY. I understand the bill provides that the Chinese Government shall be notified of the passage of this act within sixty days after its passage.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The bill does not provide that, but it is very easy to put it in as an amendment. The committee thought that as the treaty provided that the Chinese Government should be made acquainted with the passage of such an act, it would be the duty of the President to notify that government without any direction from Congress.

Mr. FARLEY. Upon that point, if the Senator from Kansas will consent to that arrangement, I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The sixty days was put in the bill for the purpose of enabling the President to give notice to the Chinese Government before the act would go into effect.

Mr. SHERMAN. That could be done in thirty days.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It could be done in thirty days, but we gave sixty days' notice, which we thought was very ample time. If it is desirable to add a section directing the President to give notice to the Chinese Government I have no objection to such a provision, but the committee thought it was unnecessary, that being his duty under the treaty.

Mr. INGALLS. The question that is presented by the amendment which I offer is as to the compliance with the terms of the treaty, which requires that due notice shall be given to the Government of China. The object of that provision of the treaty evidently was to provide that the inhibition which might be enacted by Congress should not be operative until after the changed condition of affairs had been communicated to that government. As the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] states, the bill does not contain any provision whatever upon that subject. There is obviously very strong reason why the amendment which I offer should pass; first, because the statute should contain such a provision, and, second, because it is provided by the treaty for the purpose of enabling arrangements to be made by those who control the emigration in China, so that they may not become obnoxious to the penalties of the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If the Senator will allow me, the fact of the passage of the bill will be known in China in twenty-four hours after it is passed, because the news will be sent by telegraph. The Government could telegraph it, the President of the United States could notify by telegraph if desirable; but sixty days is ample time to give this notice by mail. A section at the end of the bill directing the President to give notice would do no harm, but I do not think the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is at all necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for a division.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be read again.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In section 1, line 4 of the substitute reported by the committee, it is proposed to strike out the words "the passage of this act," and to insert:

Information of the passage of this act has been communicated to the Government of China.

So as to read:

That from and after the expiration of sixty days next after information of the passage of this act has been communicated to the Government of China, and until the expiration of twenty years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee in framing that provision of the bill went upon the idea, right or wrong, that the President of the United States was under an obligation to see that all the laws of the United States were faithfully executed, and that it would be a part of his public duty, according to the treaty, to communicate to the Government of China any action of Congress on this subject; and therefore that it was not necessary to insert such a provision, because it is exactly what the public and legal effect of the bill, if the President of the United States does his duty, would be now.

I have not the least objection for one—I do not speak for the committee or my friend in charge of the bill at all—to agreeing to this amendment, but if agreed to I should wish to add, unless you are to make the bill a mere vibrating thing, a provision at the end of the same section, that it shall be the duty of the President of the United States immediately after the passage of this act to communicate it to the Government of China. That would be his duty anyhow, and if it were his duty anyhow the amendment now proposed would be entirely unnecessary; but I could vote for the pending amendment upon the idea that it being adopted we should then, if it is necessary at all, add the provision that it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to communicate it to the Government of China immediately. It is merely a question of the way of doing things.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is liable to an objection which I shall state. This is to be a very highly penal law; it is to be a law which is to operate on persons, some of them unacquainted with our condition of things here, who are punishable for receiving passengers or for coming from a foreign country and remaining. The usual mode of legislation is to have the law to take effect from its passage, of which everybody must from the necessity of the case take notice, or to have the law to take effect a certain number of days after its passage, which everybody must take notice of; but to provide that a law shall take effect from the time a notice reaches the Chinese Government at Peking, and that a highly penal law, under which it has got to be established (I do not mean to prove to the jury, but it has got to be established so that a court will take notice of it) what time the notice reached the emperor, it seems to me would be introducing a very dangerous provision.

Mr. INGALLS. But the Senator will observe that my amendment proposes, not specifically the time when the act shall take effect (although that is true in one sense) but prescribes the period after which Chinese persons reaching this country shall be amenable to the penalties of this proposed statute.

Mr. HOAR. That is precisely the objection which I tried to state.

Mr. INGALLS. It seems to me that unless there is some period prescribed within the meaning of this amendment for the communication of the information about the passage of this law to be made to the Government of China, the provisions of the treaty are not complied with, because there is a declaration in one of the articles that whatever legislation is enacted shall be communicated to that government. That must have been for the purpose if anything of enabling the Government of China to adjust itself to the changed condition of migration, I respectfully submit.

Mr. HOAR. That is explained by the Senator from Vermont already, that it is the duty of the President, the treaty being a law, to make that communication when this bill passes. But the objection which I make to the proposition of the Senator from Kansas is that an indictment is or is not to be sustained against a person under the provisions of the bill according as it shall appear that our legislation was to govern his conduct, at the expiration of the time it begins to run, when notice reaches China, and that not merely in the case of a right or claim against the Chinese Government but in regard to penal, criminal legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. The fact of communication would be just as easily ascertainable as the fact of the approval of the act itself. It would be a matter of record in one of the departments of state.

Mr. HOAR. I know, but not perhaps ascertainable by the supposed criminal. Here is a man, a foreign shipmaster, who has a certain right within sixty days from the time of the passage of this measure. When he is asked to take on board a quantity of Chinese passengers, how can he tell, or how can the Chinese passengers tell, when the sixty days begin to run by the notice given at Peking?

Mr. INGALLS. If he is in Peking, how can he tell when the act passes at Washington?

Mr. HOAR. He will not be in Peking. He is in Hong-Kong.

Mr. INGALLS. Suppose he is there.

Mr. HOAR. He will not be there; but the time of the passage of the act from the necessity of the case must be taken notice of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After hearing the Senator from Massachusetts (although I was at first inclined to vote in favor of the amendment with the objects I have named) I think his reasoning is persuasive that it is better to leave this section as it stands. The treaty is a law, a supreme law of the land. That requires the President of the United States to immediately communicate any action of Congress on this subject to the Government of China. Then we make sixty days after the passage of the act the time when it goes into effect. If the President does his duty, and we must assume that he will, the Chinese Government will be immediately informed of the passage of the act. What the Senator from Massachusetts says about leaving a penal statute open to extraneous proof as to the time when the act became criminal is true; it is open theoretically to serious objections. Therefore, on the whole, upon the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. While I am not satisfied that the exact terms of the treaty require the action on it to be a long time in prospective, yet I believe the spirit of comity and the spirit of amity which breathes throughout the treaty ought to be observed. Article 4 of the treaty declares that—

The high contracting powers having agreed upon the foregoing articles, whenever the Government of the United States shall adopt legislative measures in accordance therewith, such measures will be communicated to the Government of China.

That certainly would imply that all laws, unless expressly stated to the contrary, shall speak for the future. Further, the same article declares that—

If the measures as enacted are found to work hardship upon the subjects of China, the Chinese minister at Washington may bring the matter to the notice of the Secretary of State of the United States, who will consider the subject with him; and the Chinese foreign office may also bring the matter to the notice of the United States minister at Peking and consider the subject with him, to the end that mutual and unqualified benefit may result.

Therefore, when I say that the treaty was framed in a spirit and in the language of amity and comity, I correctly describe it. In accordance with that, it seems to me there ought to be reasonable time for the Emperor of China to notify his subjects that this law has been enacted by the Government of the United States in pursuance of treaty stipulations. The sixty days given by the bill would be well enough to begin after the Emperor of China shall have been notified of its passage. He cannot notify his people, he cannot forewarn them against the heavy penalties of the bill of shipping the class of servile laborers to this country, unless some such amendment as that suggested by the Senator from Kansas is carried out.

I take it for granted that the President of the United States would be bound to give notice. This being a treaty, it is obligatory upon him with all the full force of law, and he was a party under our form to the treaty by its promulgation; and therefore without any instruction from the act of Congress he would inform the Government of China of the passage of such a law; but I do not think the law should go into force until the individuals who may be subjected to its penalties shall have a fair opportunity themselves to know of it so as to keep themselves outside of the operation of the act.

For that reason I am disposed to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which I think only carries into effect the intent and the spirit, if not the direct language, of article 4 of the treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to remind my friend from Delaware that the penalties of this act are not inscribed against any subject of China who undertakes to come to the United States. It is merely like a great number of the other laws of the United States, applied to the owners and masters of vessels. The Chinese subject, the emigrant, the laborer, is under no penalty whatever anywhere in the bill, that I remember; but it is only a prohibition analogous to the cooly prohibition and ever so many prohibitions in the laws of the United States against the owners and masters of vessels.

As a fact, therefore, I think we must all believe (I will not say know) that every master and every owner of a vessel trading between the ports of China and the United States will as a fact know of the passage of this act within twenty-four hours after it receives the President's approval. The penalties are denounced against the shipmaster in whose ships from any Chinese port are brought within the jurisdiction of the United States this particular class of persons. The committee's information was perhaps it was wrong, that this class of incoming persons (I will not say immigrants, because I do not think it is a true term) into the United States, is not a person who, like the Irishman, or the German, or the Frenchman, or whatever, who intelligently considers the evils and difficulties of the government he lives under and the want of capacity to own land, &c., goes out bravely for his liberty and his welfare to find some other country where he can be better off, as our forefathers came to this country, but he is a man who has no impulse of his own to go anywhere. He is hunted up by the trader, by the shipowner, by the Six Companies, by the Chinese corporations, and is employed on certain terms, which are not advantageous to him, as we should understand it, to come to the United States to work for a certain length of time, and then to go back again, and if he dies to have his body carried back.

That being the case, I think the idea of giving time to the Emperor of China in order to protect the interests and fair-play that his subjects are entitled to, to inform them that they are not to come, is not necessary. The bill is directed to the shipowner and the shipmaster, and, as I said, the class of persons who are not to be allowed to come are not like the German and the Irishman, &c., who come out of an impulse of their own seeking to better their condition on their own ideas of liberty and the acquirement of property, but people who are hunted up and employed to come here for certain purposes.

Mr. BAYARD. It seems to me the honorable Senator from Vermont has certainly overlooked a section of this bill. The most serious penalties of the bill are levied against the shipmaster who shall bring them in, but the bill does not stop there. Section 14 of the bill provides—

> That no Chinese shall be permitted to enter the United States by land without producing to the proper officer of customs the certificate herein required of Chinese seeking to land from a vessel; and any Chinese who shall knowingly come into the United States contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court; and any Chinese unlawfully entering within the United States, or who shall have unlawfully entered the United States in any way, either by land or water, shall be removed therefrom by the collector of customs of any collection district in which such Chinese may be found, at the cost of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will allow me, that is perfectly true; but my friend will see from the language he has read that the Chinaman who is to be denounced by that section must know that it is contrary to this law, and therefore if he comes without knowing it he is a perfectly innocent person; he can neither be punished nor removed.

Mr. BAYARD. This is a class of very ignorant and helpless people, whom the Senator has justly described, brought here more like a drove of animals than as human beings. They are not coming here of their own volition; they are brought here for human greed, and their labor is sold in advance. It is a traffic in human flesh as abominable as any that the world has known; and that it is designed to stop. One of the results of this bill, which is full of beneficence and kindness, is to stop this very traffic and trade in human labor, as it is called.

But take the Empire of China with its vast area. I do not know enough of that mysterious country to say whether there is the means of telegraphic communication known to us here, but I doubt very much if it there exists. I am disposed to believe that, with all their ancient discoveries, the telegraph is not among them. We fix sixty days from the day the bill becomes a law, and any removal of this class of people from China individually or in a mass after that time is highly penalized, not only upon the master who may bring them, but upon the individual who is brought; and the more stupid, the more dull, and the more obtuse he is, so much the more is he entitled to our protection. I do not know how practicable it would be for the Emperor of China—for I know not what means of communication he has at his command—to notify his people sixty days after he shall have been notified, and whether that sixty days will be enough to exclude these human chattels from the operation of the penalties of this measure. I do not know how that may be; but I think time should be given according to the clear intent if not the absolute terms of the treaty itself. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I do not understand that the terms of this bill apply only to a class of servile laborers or to any class that would be included under our former act of Congress denouncing penalties upon the importation of cooly labor. I understand that this act embraces all Chinese who are laborers of any character. That is to me very apparent from the discussions between the Chinese commissioners and the American commissioners in regard to the adoption of the recent treaty. In the documents accompanying the message from the President of the United States submitting this treaty is contained the treaty project from the foreign office, which is submitted by the Chinese commissioners, and in that project the second article reads thus:

> Chinese who may be desirous of proceeding to any other part of the United States for purposes of labor, excepting only the State of California, shall be allowed to go of their own free will and accord. Persons of all other classes, with the exception of actual Chinese laborers, whose immigration into California will be temporarily regulated and limited by the United States, whether proceeding to California as teachers, students, travelers, traders, or artisans, as well as all Chinese laborers now in that State, will be allowed to go and come with entire freedom, and will not be included in the limiting regulations.

With that proposition before them, our commissioners, in the memorandum included in inclosure No. 5, state:

> The United States commissioners feel it their duty to insist upon their definition of Chinese laborers, namely, "the words Chinese laborers are herein used to signify all immigration other than that for teaching, trade, travel, study, and curiosity hereinbefore referred to and provided for in existing treaties." They cannot consent that artisans shall be excluded from the class of Chinese laborers, for it is this very competition of skilled labor in the cities where the Chinese labor immigration concentrates which has caused the embarrassment and popular discontent they wish to avoid. But they are willing to adopt an article providing that the classes who are authorized to come and reside in the United States shall bring the servants who are necessary to their convenience.

That is the declaration of our commissioners and their Government as to their understanding of the word "laborers" as used in the treaty which they have adopted and transmit to their Government in the same connection. So that the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Vermont, if I am right in this position, are incorrect in saying that the laborers embraced in the treaty and to be affected by this legislation would be servile laborers, purchased laborers from China, coming to this country as slaves and their labor contracted for in this country. They are artisans, they are skilled laborers, and they are the common laborers. All are embraced under the term "laborers" in the treaty. They are individuals who may move upon their own motion in going upon a vessel to come to this country, and the owner of the vessel may know nothing of their character. They would have to give notice whether they were being brought here against their will or not, and if they are to be transported here it is as immigrants that these skilled laborers would come, because they do not come as partial slaves or coolies. They come as any other immigrant would come, and no shipowner, no officer of the Chinese Government or of our Government would have any other notice as to their character.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I think there is some point in the objection made to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas by the Senator from Massachusetts that there would be difficulty in establishing the time when the notice reached the Emperor of China. I think, also, that sixty days is too short a time for us to specify in the act declaring that it shall take effect at the end of that period, taking all the chances of the notice reaching the Emperor of China.

When we look back to the inducements which were held out by the commissioners of our Government to the Chinese Government to negotiate the treaty, and their promises that our legislation would be reasonable, that we were a just people and would not oppress, it appears to me it would look like hot haste to pass an act the first opportunity we have, as it seems to me violating the treaty, and then hurry it into effect in sixty days after its passage.

To obviate the difficulty that seems to be raised to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, I move to substitute for his amendment——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the proposed amendment?

Mr. BROWN. I mean and intend to ask the Senator from Kansas to accept it, to offer as a substitute for his amendment to strike out in line 3 of section 1 the word "sixty" and insert the word "ninety," so as to give ninety days from the date of the passage of the act, and thus avoid the difficulty that might arise as to the time when the Emperor of China gets the notice.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection if unanimous consent can be obtained to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has a right to accept it.

Mr. INGALLS. But the yeas and nays have been ordered, and therefore I cannot accept it without unanimous consent.

Mr. BROWN. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays for that purpose.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw the whole of his amendment, including the words which he moved to insert?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified, substituting ninety days for sixty days.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to—ayes 26, noes not counted.

Mr. HOAR. I move an amendment, and on it I wish the yeas and nays. At the end of the bill add:

> Provided, That this bill shall not apply to any skilled laborer who shall establish that he comes to this country without any contract by which his labor is the property of any person other than himself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are there not some amendments still pending to the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] indicated some amendments, but did not offer them.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to offer one or two other amendments to the amendment of the committee before we pass from that. In line 4 of section 3 I move to amend by inserting after the word "same" the words "after that time and;" so as to read:

That the two foregoing sections shall not apply to Chinese laborers who were in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same after that time and before the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That "sixty" should be "ninety" now.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir. I move that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is necessary to make it conform to the other.

Mr. BROWN. My amendment is as to another point, not the ninety days. Provision is made here for the Chinese who were in the United States at the date the treaty was agreed upon. They are to conform to the provisions of the bill, and those "who shall have come into the same after the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act." It seems to me there is a period between the adoption of the treaty and the sixty days after the passage of this act that we do not provide for; and it is to avoid any trouble that might arise in the construction of it that I propose to say "after that time and;" so as to read:

Who shall have come into the same after that time and before the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act.

I do not think the language of the section covers as it now stands the period between the ratification of the treaty and this period, but that it covers the period prior to the treaty and sixty days after the bill. If I am right, then I suppose it would be better that it should cover the period between the negotiation of the treaty and the passage of the act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly it should; but I submit, with great respect, that my friend from Georgia is not right. The bill reads:

That the two foregoing sections shall not apply to Chinese laborers who were in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come into the same before the expiration of sixty—

Now "ninety" it should be—days next after the passage of this act.

These words "shall have," as all courts have decided over and over again, relate to the point of time named and every point of time preceding it. So I submit to my friend his amendment is absolutely unnecessary. It is absolutely settled as clear as anything can be, that phrase covers, as it now stands in the amendment of the committee, the point that the Senator has in view, and that was what the committee desired, to do just as he does. I submit to my friend that his amendment will not make it more clear than it is as it stands.

Mr. BROWN. I do not so understand, and as the——

Mr. HOAR. What has become of my amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] proposed to amend the amendment of the committee informally, but the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is first in order. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] had indicated his intention to offer some amendments, but on inquiry of the Secretary the Chair learns he did not offer them, and the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is in order.

Mr. BROWN. I do not agree with my friend from Vermont that this is a clear question, that there is no room for doubt. The language I propose to insert would leave it where there would be no room for doubt, and it seems to me the matter ought to be made clear by the amendment. To my mind it is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, if the Senator from Massachusetts waives his amendment for the moment, is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, before we forget it, to allow an amendment to be made on the point that my friend from Georgia has just made? We have changed "sixty" to "ninety" days in the first section. Now in the section that the Senator from Georgia just moved to amend it still stands as "sixty days;" that should be "ninety" in order to make it conform to the preceding section.

Mr. BROWN. I thought the understanding was that that change was to apply throughout.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but the question must be put.

Mr. INGALLS. There are several other places in the bill where that amendment must be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "ninety" will be inserted for "sixty," by the unanimous consent of the Senate, wherever it appears in the bill. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

Mr. BAYARD. I propose to insert on line 2 of section 2, after the word "shall" the word "knowingly;" so as to read:

That any master of any vessel, of whatever nationality, who shall knowingly on such vessel bring within the jurisdiction of the United States, &c.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That is all right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The omission of the word is a clerical mistake in the draft of the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It was agreed to in the draft of the bill, but left out by mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is the pending amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment of the Senator from Delaware go in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts waives his amendment for the present, and, if there be no objection, the Chair will receive the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. The question is on that amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Now I move my amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to understand the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. Does it mean that the master of the vessel is to know that the men he has on board are Chinese?

Mr. BAYARD. The word "knowingly," I believe, has been unanimously inserted.

Mr. DAWES. But I want to understand what it means.

Mr. BAYARD. I propose now to amend on line 3, of the same section, after the words "United States" by inserting "and permit to be landed," so as to read:

That any master of any vessel, of whatever nationality, who shall knowingly on such vessel bring within the jurisdiction of the United States and permit to be landed any Chinese laborer from any foreign port or place shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the substitute it is proposed to add:

Provided, That this bill shall not apply to any skilled laborer who shall establish that he comes to this country without any contract by which his labor is the property of any person other than himself.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FARLEY. I apprehend if that amendment was adopted they would all come here as skilled laborers and be able to prove that they had no contract with anybody, and they could prove it by their own testimony.

Mr. HOAR. This will test whether it is cooly labor that is driven at or skilled labor. I want to see which it is. This compels the laborer, puts the burden on him, to prove in defense before the court that he is a skilled artisan and comes on his own motion.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If he were present, I should vote "yea," and I presume he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. SEWELL, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. SAUNDERS, (when Mr. VAN WYCK's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. VAN WYCK] is paired on all questions with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] If he were here I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Mitchell,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Morrill.
Brown,	Frye,	McDill,
Conger,	Hale,	McMillan,
Davis of Illinois,	Harrison,	Mahone,

NAYS—27.

Bayard,	Garland,	Maxey,	Saunders,
Beck,	George,	Miller of Cal.,	Slater,
Call,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Morgan,	Vance,
Coke,	Jackson,	Plumb,	Vest,
Fair,	Jonas,	Pugh,	Walker.
Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,

ABSENT—32.

Anthony,	Gorman,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Blair,	Groome,	Lamar,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Grover,	Lapham,	Sewell,
Camden,	Hawley,	Logan,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Colorado,	McPherson,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Davis of West Va.,	Johnston,	Platt,	Williams,
Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,	Windom.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out section 11. I will state that the object of the amendment is to strike out that section of the bill which forfeits the vessel for the offense of the master.

The Acting Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

SEC. 11. That every vessel whose master shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed forfeited to the United States, and shall be liable to seizure and condemnation in any district of the United States into which such vessel may enter or in which she may be found.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I have another amendment. I move to strike out the words in the fourteenth section, commencing with line 10, namely:

And any Chinese unlawfully entering within the United States, or who shall have unlawfully entered the United States in any way, either by land or by water, shall be removed therefrom by the collector of customs of any collection district in which such Chinese may be found, at the cost of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. I move, in line 13 of section 5, after the word "signature," to add "or, if signed by his mark, attested by a competent witness." This part of the section provides for the signature of a Chinaman, traveler or teacher, or whoever he may be, coming into this country who is entitled to come under the treaty upon a passport.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BROWN. This is in case a mark be made, that it must be attested by a witness.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I understand it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I move the same amendment after the word "signature" in line 8 of section 6.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I move, in line 5 of section 2, to insert after the words "fine of" the words "not more than;" so that it will be left in the discretion of the court to inflict the amount of fine as well as to fix the term of imprisonment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I accept that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Now I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California to the language in line 13, section 14, in which provision is made for the removal of those who unlawfully come or are brought into the territory of the United States. It provides that they "shall be removed therefrom by the collector of customs of any collection district," &c. That is indefinite. It is liable, if not explained, to be subject to great injustice. It might inflict injury upon friendly powers or upon States in the Union. There should be some definition of what is to be done with these persons who are to be removed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What amendment does the Senator move?

Mr. INGALLS. I have none to move. I say the bill as it stands is inoperative, and is open to very serious objections. It says, "shall be removed therefrom," without saying where they shall be removed or what action shall be taken by the collector or by the Secretary of the Treasury. It either ought to provide that they shall be thrown into the sea or that they shall be carried back to China.

Mr. HAWLEY. At the collector's expense?

Mr. MILLER, of California. The intention was "to be removed therefrom to the place from whence he came."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California move to add those words?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on that amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to add at the end of the bill the words:

Provided further, That any laborer who shall receive a certificate from the United States consul at the port where he shall embark that he is an artisan coming to this country at his own expense and of his own free will, and has established such fact to the satisfaction of such consul, shall not be affected by this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) I should very gladly vote for this amendment were it not that I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] who is sick.

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL, (when his name was called.) I announce again my pair with my colleague, [Mr. MCPHERSON.]

Mr. MCMILLAN, (when Mr. WINDOM's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is absent from the city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] has announced a pair with him.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SLATER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GROVER] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK.] If here, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I desire to announce again my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. GROOME. My colleague [Mr. GORMAN] is absent from the city.

Mr. BECK. I have received a telegram from my colleague, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] who is now absent in Kentucky, being detained there by the sickness of his family.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. HAWLEY. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] If he were present, I should be glad to vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,
Allison,	Frye,	Jackson,	Morrill,
Brown,	Hale,	McDill,	Plumb,
Conger,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Saunders.
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Mahone,

NAYS—24.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Beck,	George,	Maxey,	Slater,
Call,	Groome,	Miller of Cal.,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,
Coke,	Harris,	Morgan,	Vest,
Fair,	Jonas,	Pugh,	Walker.

ABSENT—33.

Anthony,	Garland,	Lamar,	Sewell,
Blair,	Gorman,	Lapham,	Sherman,
Butler,	Grover,	Logan,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Hawley,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Colorado,	Pendleton,	Williams,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Georgia,	Platt,	Windom.
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Rollins,
Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Ferry,	Kellogg,	Sawyer,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLER, of California. There is one amendment in section 4 which I desire to have made. It was left out by mistake. It is in line 12, after the words "registration," to insert:

Properly visèd by the indorsement of the proper diplomatic representative or consul of the United States, as required in case of passports by the fifth section of this act.

And strike out:

And the consular certificate in this act provided for.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two amendments on the table, one submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] as an additional section, which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposed amendment by Mr. FARLEY is to add, as a new section:

SEC. 16. That hereafter no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship; and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. FARLEY. I call for the yeas and nays on that amendment. Some of the courts have been admitting Chinese to citizenship and I propose to prohibit it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can call for a division first.

Mr. FARLEY. I call for a division on that amendment.

The question being again put, the ayes were 20.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say a word upon the amendment. I have kept silence on this bill of iniquities as long as I can endure it. I have no very long speech to make, but I have a few observations to submit.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator desire to go on to-night?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection to a motion to adjourn if the Senator desires to make it.

Mr. HALE. I think it very clear that we shall not get through with the bill to-night, and I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the motion, and declared that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it manifest that we cannot pass the bill to-night, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Would not a division do?

Mr. ALLISON. A division will be very gratifying to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 25, noes 22; and (at six o'clock and eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 8, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

IOWA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. McCOID. I move by unanimous consent the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4166) to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts, in order that it may be considered at the present time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read subject to objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. KASSON. There is an amendment I wish to offer before action is had upon that bill, and I reserve objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. Let the bill be called up at another time when we can consider it fully and completely. It provides for the creation of a new judge and a new judicial district. I have no objection to consider it at the proper time, but to pass such a bill by unanimous consent now I think is asking too much of this House.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House, objection being made.

SANTA ROSA SAVINGS-BANK.

Mr. BERRY. I move, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1992) for the relief of the savings-bank of Santa Rosa, California. It is simply to make provision for the payment of a check of $1,062.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I suggest, before objection is received, the bills be read.

The SPEAKER. They are always read when gentlemen desire it.

Mr. BERRY. There is a short report accompanying the bill.

Mr. McCOID. I object.

UNPAID ACCOUNTS, INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. GEORGE. I move by unanimous consent to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1364) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The bill was read.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object except for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman from Oregon whether any committee of this House has reported on this measure.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF WILLIAM G. BURGES.

Mr. PEELLE. I offer the following resolution for present consideration.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I demand the regular order.

Mr. PEELLE. This is in reference to the death of an employé of the House, and no objection will be made to it.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PEELLE. I understand that will not be demanded, inasmuch as this resolution is in reference to the death of an employé of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands objection is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the expenses of the last illness and funeral of William G. Burges, late mail messenger of the House of Representatives, to an amount not exceeding $300; and he is further authorized and directed to pay to Almira Agnes Burges, the widow of said William G. Burges, a sum equal to his pay as mail messenger, as aforesaid, for one year; and all payments herein authorized and directed shall be made out of the contingent fund of the House, and subject to the approval of the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PEELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI AND MISSOURI RIVERS.

Mr. PAGE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to ask unanimous consent that the argument before that committee, in reference to the improvement of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers and their tributaries, be printed for the use of that committee as well as for the use of the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. REED. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to make the following report. I think it had better be printed in the RECORD for the information of members, as it has to lay over for one day.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire it read?

Mr. REED. I do not think there is any advantage in reading it now.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not hear the statement of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. I say I was instructed by the Committee on Rules to make the following report. It is not, if that is what the gentleman is after, a unanimous report. It failed to receive his sanction, among others.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires it to be printed and also printed in the RECORD, and does not ask the report shall be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I give notice I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. REED. I may say, for the information of the House, that this is a slight modification of the rules which were presented——

Mr. RANDALL. A slight modification, and no improvement, in my opinion.

Mr. REED. I am very well aware that the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are much improved by being framed in my own; but I prefer to make my remarks in my own way and time.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not mean to mix my remarks with those of the gentleman from Maine.

The report of the Committee on Rules is as follows:

The Committee on the Rules report that they recommend the following changes in Rule XXIV:

That clause 2 of Rule XXIV be amended so as to read as follows:

"2. On all days other than Monday, as soon as the Journal is read and approved, and on all Mondays, (except the first and third in each month,) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports of committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed, and a copy thereof mailed by the Public Printer to each Member and Delegate.

"Provided, That during such morning hour it shall be in order to consider such bills as would otherwise go to, or are already on, the House Calendar, if the committee in charge, when called, shall so direct. The Speaker shall call each committee in regular order, and if the Speaker shall not get through the call of committees before the House passes to other business, he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the measure last under consideration; but whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on one day, it shall not be in order for such committee to report further until the other committees shall have been called in their turn."

That clause 4 be so amended as to read as follows:

"4. After one hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees, except on the second and fourth Mondays of each month, it shall be in order to proceed to business on the Speaker's table, to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or to the House Calendar; motions therefor having priority in the order named. The morning hour shall continue until the House determines to go to other business."

That clause 5 be so amended as to read as follows:

"5. When the House proceeds to the Speaker's table, the business shall be disposed of in the following order:

"First. Messages from the President and other executive communications.

"Second. Messages from the Senate and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House.

"Third. Bills and resolutions from the Senate on their first and second reading; that they be referred to committees or put on their passage, and the motions so to refer shall have precedence of all motions touching their disposition.

"Fourth. Engrossed bills and bills from the Senate on their third reading."

That clause 6 be amended so as to read as follows:

"6. When a motion is made that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it shall be in order pending that motion, if directed by a committee, to move to designate a bill to be first considered in the committee, which motion shall not be subject to amendment or debate, and only one designation shall be pending at a time. If no bill be designated, or, being designated, is disposed of in committee, it shall then consider first bills for raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other bills on its calendar.

"7. On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and, if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days."

Add to Rule XXIV the following clause:

"8. After the morning hour on the second and fourth Mondays of each month, it shall be in order to consider legislation relating to the District of Columbia, unless dispensed with by a two-thirds vote of the House."

That there be added to Rule XXIV the following clause:

"9. Before the morning hour it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of unfinished business, other than that in the morning hour or on the Speaker's table, and the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HASKELL. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of bills on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SPRINGER. That motion could not be entertained at this time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

REDEMPTION OF REVENUE STAMPS.

Mr. DUNNELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2318, a bill (H. R. No. 4996) repealing the limitation of redemption of two-cent documentary internal-revenue stamps by the Government; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. M'CLINTOCK.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2403) for the relief of John M. McClintock; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ERRETT, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bills (H. R. No. 2801 and H. R. No. 1409) to increase the compensation of local appraisers of customs at the port of New York, and other places; which were severally ordered to be laid on the table, and the accompanying reports printed.

TRANSFERS OF BONDS.

Mr. ERRETT also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1787, a bill (H. R. No. 4997) to authorize a United States commissioner to take acknowledgments of the transfer of the bonds of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALBERT V. CONWAY.

Mr. ERRETT also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4998) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee, for certain registered United States bonds redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES E. MONTELL.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4999) for the relief of James E. Montell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWIN T. PILKENTON.

Mr. TUCKER also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5000) for the relief of Edwin T. Pilkenton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORVILLE HORWITZ.

Mr. TUCKER also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 650) for the relief of Orville Horwitz, assignee in trust of C. D. De Ford & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SALARY OF A JUDGE.

Mr. HUMPHREY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4225) to fix the salary of the judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Indiana, with amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 82) to amend section 840 of the Revised Statutes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and the accompanying report printed.

METRICAL WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 112) to enable importers to use the metric weights and measures, with amendments; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STATE INSPECTION LAWS.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3012) to credit the surplus of the duties levied by the several States for the execution of their inspection laws to the parties paying the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL, LEWES, DELAWARE.

Mr. McLANE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3577) to establish a marine hospital at or near Lewes, Delaware; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JULIET LEEF.

Mr. McLANE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 661) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 3415) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the amendments and accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FOURTH COLLECTION DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1765) to amend section 2552 of the Revised Statutes and to change the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF VESSELS FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4755, a bill (H. R. No. 5001) authorizing the construction of vessels of war for the Navy of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to say that this bill and one other bill, entitled "An act to establish a permanent construction fund for the Navy," are a part of one system and ought to be acted upon together. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House that Wednesday of week after next be specially assigned for the consideration of these two measures.

The SPEAKER. The practice has been not to interfere with the presentation of reports by asking unanimous consent or entertaining any motion pending the morning hour. At some other time the gentleman can be recognized to make the request he has indicated.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I will ask the Speaker to recognize me for that purpose after the morning hour.

SECTIONS 269, 277, AND 270 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. PEELLE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 3255) to amend sections 269 and 277 and to repeal section 270 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the amendments and accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 4668) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the amendments and accompanying report ordered to be printed.

IDAHO LAND AND IRRIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. POUND, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3810, a bill (H. R. No. 5002) relating to the Idaho Land and Irrigation Company, and providing for the reclamation of arid lands in Idaho Territory; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. DWIGHT presented the views of the minority of the Committee on the Public Lands on the bill (H. R. No. 277) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes; which were ordered to be printed.

FORT ABERCROMBIE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. STRAIT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 819) abolishing the military reservation of Fort Abercrombie, in the State of Minnesota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale, the same as other public lands; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the amendments and report ordered to be printed.

SALE OF KANSAS INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. SPAULDING, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5003) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the accounts of certain newspapers for the advertisements of the sales of the Kansas Indian lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

AGREEMENTS WITH INDIANS IN IDAHO.

Mr. DEERING, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3503) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannacks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations in Idaho, for the sale of a portion of their lands in said Territory, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. AINSLIE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5004) to accept and ratify an agreement with the Shoshone and Bannack Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in Idaho Territory required for the use of the Utah and Northern Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. AINSLIE. The money is to be paid by the railroad company.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The money to be paid by this bill is not to be paid out of the Treasury but by the railroad company.

The SPEAKER. Does it make an appropriation necessary?

Mr. MAGINNIS. No, sir. The money is paid by the railroad company, and not by the Government.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TIMBER REGULATIONS.

Mr. FULKERSON, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 174) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," approved June 3, 1878; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DAVID G. HUTCHINSON.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 638) granting a pension to David G. Hutchinson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ROBERT PELKEY.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2290) for the relief of Robert Pelkey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOEL R. CARTER.

Mr. MATSON also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1997) granting a pension to Joel R. Carter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HENRY REEMS.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely the bill (H. R. No. 3175) granting an increase and arrears of pension to Henry Reems; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY F. M'KEEVER.

Mr. PARKER also, from the same committee, reported adversely the petition of Mary F. McKeever, for a pension; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH R. BENJAMIN.

Mr. PARKER also, from the same committee, reported adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2328) granting a pension to Joseph R. Benjamin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying adverse report ordered to be printed.

JOSHUA S. DYE.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 526) granting a pension to Joshua S. Dye; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN WATSON.

Mr. CALDWELL also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 531) for the relief of John Watson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. JACKSON.

Mr. BROWNE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2278) for the relief of John H. Jackson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY SHAW.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2250) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Shaw; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WARREN SAMS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri, from the Committee on Pensions, reported adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1207) granting a pension to Warren Sams; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ABRAM TOMPKINS.

Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri, also, from the same committee, reported adversely the petition of Smith Sherman, attorney for heirs of Abram Tompkins, deceased, a soldier of the Revolutionary war; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. CASSETY.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5005) for the relief of James M. Cassety; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES B. ROBERTS.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5006) for the relief of Charles B. Roberts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN D. LAKIN.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1346, a bill (H. R. No. 5007) for the relief of Benjamin D. Lakin, of Point Pleasant, Clermont County, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS H. BAKER.

Mr. URNER, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 61) for the relief of Thomas H. Baker, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

W. W. LESTER.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 62) for the relief of W. W. Lester, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS CONNOLLY.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back the joint resolution (H. R. No. 65) granting a month's extra pay to Thomas Connolly, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ALVAH W. HICKS.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back the following resolution, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That there be paid to Captain Alvah W. Hicks, of Cincinnati, Ohio, out of the contingent fund of the House, $550 for services rendered as messenger of the Military Committee of the House for five and a half months in the Forty-fifth Congress.

The motion was agreed to; and the resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Claims.

ADJUDICATION OF PENSION CLAIMS.

Mr. JOYCE, from the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 3249) relating to the adjudication of claims for pensions; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. JOYCE also, from the same committee, reported back bills of the following titles; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2464) to amend section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3922) to amend section 4718, title 57 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

WIDOW AND CHILDREN OF HON. E. W. FARR.

Mr. RAY, by unanimous consent, introduced the following joint resolution (H. R. No. 158) in favor of the widow and children of the late Hon. Evarts W. Farr, of New Hampshire; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

Be it resolved, &c., That a sum equal to the salary of a member for the full term of the Forty-seventh Congress be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the widow and children of the late Hon. Evarts W. Farr, of New Hampshire, a member elected to the Forty-seventh Congress, but who died before the time of its organization.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION FUND.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union there is a bill (H. R. No. 677) to provide a permanent construction fund for the Navy. This morning, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I have reported a bill for the construction of several war vessels for the Navy. The two bills may well be considered at the same time. I ask that a special assignment for the consideration of those two bills be made for Wednesday, March 22, after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that a special order for the consideration of the business designated by him be made for Wednesday, the 22d of this month, to continue from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. ATKINS. I was about to suggest that the order should be made subject to the priority of appropriation bills.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desired to make the request subject to that reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the objection is withdrawn.

BUSINESS ON SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HASKELL. I move that we now proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The question being put,

The SPEAKER said: In the opinion of the Chair, the "noes" prevail.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask permission to state that the purpose for which I make this motion is to reach the anti-polygamy bill, Senate bill No. 353.

Mr. RANDALL. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HASKELL. I call for a division.

The question being again taken; there were—ayes 68, noes 70.

Mr. HASKELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOULTON. Let the question be stated again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] moves that the House now proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MOULTON. With the view of taking up the polygamy bill?

Mr. HASKELL. As soon as it can be reached in regular order of procedure.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] has stated one of the bills on the Speaker's table; cannot the rest be stated?

The SPEAKER. A number of other bills are on the table.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 86, not voting 95; as follows:

YEAS—111.

So the motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following statements were made:

Mr. SKINNER. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FLOWER] on all political questions. This seems to be regarded on the other side of the House as a political question. Otherwise I would be very glad to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must be his own judge of that matter.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. BEACH,] and I wish to state if he were here I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. When a gentleman is present, and says he did not hear his name called and did not vote, that cannot be considered as sufficient under the rule to entitle him to have his vote recorded.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I am paired with the gentleman from California, [Mr. BERRY.]

Mr. MOULTON. I believe I am paired, and if I am I should like to withdraw my vote. If not, let my vote stand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must determine that for himself. The pairs have not yet been read.

Mr. MOULTON. Very well, I will wait until the pairs have been read.

The following pairs were announced, under the rule, from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. ALLEN.
Mr. GODSHALK with Mr. DUNN.
Mr. LEEDOM with Mr. SHULTZ.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. MILLS.
Mr. HUBBELL with Mr. BLACKBURN.
Mr. HILL with Mr. DIBBLE.
Mr. SCRANTON with Mr. FROST.
Mr. HOUK with Mr. WHITTHORNE.
Mr. SHELLEY with Mr. FARWELL of Illinois.
Mr. WATSON with Mr. MUTCHLER.
Mr. BEACH with Mr. VAN VOORHIS.
Mr. ERRETT with Mr. HOOKER.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, with Mr. SHERWIN.
Mr. BUCK with Mr. ROBINSON of New York.
Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. ATHERTON.
Mr. STRAIT with Mr. BRAGG.
Mr. HOBLITZELL with Mr. URNER.
Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. DAVIS of Illinois.
Mr. HARDY with Mr. CORNELL.
Mr. RYAN with Mr. LE FEVRE.
Mr. FORNEY with Mr. WEST.
Mr. HUTCHINS with Mr. W. A. WOOD.
Mr. MARTIN with Mr. WALKER.
Mr. RITCHIE with Mr. HAMILTON.
Mr. BLAND with Mr. FISHER, for to-day.
Mr. FLOWER with Mr. SKINNER.
Mr. THOMAS (who is sick) with Mr. DAVIDSON.
Mr. MORRISON with Mr. DUNNELL.
Mr. PIERCE with Mr. ROSS.
Mr. RICE, of Ohio, with Mr. BERRY.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. JADWIN.
Mr. DARRELL with Mr. ROBERTSON.

On motion of Mr. HASKELL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (S. R. No. 45) to authorize the Secretary of War to use hospital tents for the relief of sufferers from the overflow of the Mississippi River; when the Speaker signed the same.

FREEDMAN'S BANK.

The SPEAKER. The first business on the Speaker's table is a bill (S. No. 1092) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, of the property known as the Freedman's Bank, and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto, belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia; which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, for the use of the United States, all those lots and parcels of ground, with the improvements thereon, situated in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, and belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, known and described in the original deeds of conveyance to the said Freedman's Savings and Trust Company as the west half of lot numbered 3, all of lots numbered 4, 5, 6, and 7, and the south half of lot numbered 8, in square numbered 221, as laid out and recorded in the original plat or plan of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, at a sum not exceeding $250,000, to be paid and by him placed to the credit of the commissioners of the said Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, or their successors, on the books of the Treasurer of the United States, for distribution among its creditors, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon proof of a perfect title and the execution to the United States of a deed good and sufficient in law, and in form approved by the Attorney-General; and said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order this bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made too late.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why?

The SPEAKER. It is unfinished business. The same point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois when it was formerly considered, and after we had entered on the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was pending when we adjourned at the last meeting, as the RECORD will show, and had not been decided.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects the point of order was decided, and the gentleman from Illinois made some further motion; but the RECORD can be read in reference to that.

Mr. BUCKNER. The question was on the motion of the gentleman to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I made the point of order it must go there, and that point of order was not decided when the House adjourned, but was pending. I ask the RECORD be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state there need be no doubt about it. The bill was ordered to a third reading on a former day, and the point of order now suggested by the gentleman from Illinois was made and overruled, and then the gentleman moved to recommit the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. To reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time. That was done. Then I understand it came up whether this bill should be ordered to be read a third time or subject to the rules of the House, which require it to be considered in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects that the gentleman from Illinois proposed to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair thought that the motion was not then in order. After that, the Chair having held that it was not then in order, the gentleman moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, and pending that motion the House adjourned. The Chair states this to be his recollection of the business at that time.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Chair will allow me I will state that my motion was to reconsider the vote by which the bill had been ordered to a third reading; that was agreed to. I then moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; which was voted down. I ask the reading of that part of the RECORD which shows the condition of the business at that time.

The SPEAKER. It will be found in the RECORD, page 1501.

Mr. BUCKNER. The question is now upon the reference of this bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, it is upon the point of order.

Mr. BUCKNER. I hold that the point of order was made too late.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the reading of the RECORD in reference to the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, as it understands the situation of this case, that the motion to refer the bill was not agreed to. The gentleman from Illinois is right in saying that the bill was ordered to a third reading, and on his motion that order was reconsidered. Then the gentleman moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CRAPO,] and that amendment was lost, and the original motion of the gentleman from Illinois was lost. The question then recurred again upon the third reading of the bill. This is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I made the point of order that the bill must be considered first in the Committee of the Whole. I make that point of order now, and respectfully refer the Chair to the third paragraph of the twenty-third rule, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people, all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now I make this suggestion to the Chair, that the consideration of that bill has never been begun in the House. We have had no consideration of it whatever; and for the reason that we have not had a consideration of the bill, I make the point of order before we begin to consider it that it must be considered in the first instance in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Now, a motion to refer the bill is not a motion for consideration, because that motion is not debatable. You cannot consider the merits of a bill upon a motion to refer. There was a motion to refer, pending which the point of order can be made, at any time before the consideration of the bill is entered upon by the House; and the consideration of a bill under the rules of the House is the consideration that it receives in open House, or in Committee of the Whole, which authorizes the bill to be read at length in the first instance. It is then considered by clauses and is open for amendment. At any time before that I have the right to make the point of order that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not now. I make the point of order that this bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I insist upon it that the consideration of the merits of the bill has not been entered upon, and that consequently I am not too late to make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was last reached in the House I demanded its consideration. The rule requires that when a bill comes before the House from the Senate that it shall be either referred to a committee or put upon its passage. I asked the consideration of the bill at that time. The House entered upon its consideration, and the point of order was not made at that time; although I admit that if it had been made in time it would have sent the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. But the point was not made, and the bill was read and the gentleman from Illinois afterward made a motion to refer the bill to some other committee, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] moved to refer to some other committee, both of which motions were voted down; so that the bill stands now before the House precisely where it did before these motions were submitted; that is, that the bill be passed, or else that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I explained before, when this bill was called up, that there was great confusion in the House. The Chair put the question upon ordering the bill to be read a third time in the midst of so much confusion that I could not, though endeavoring to do so, hear what was said; and before any one had time to object the Chair declared that the bill had been ordered to be read a third time.

The RECORD shows, on page 1501, that I made the point of order as soon as the bill was read in open House that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair then informed me that the point of order was too late, as the bill had been ordered to be read a third time. I then moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill had been ordered to be read a third time. The House agreed to that motion to reconsider, which brought the bill back to where it was before. I then renewed the point that it should be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. And I insisted then, and I insist now, I was not too late in making that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is enabled to find the true condition of this bill by reference to the RECORD. When the bill was reached in its regular order on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Missiouri [Mr. BUCKNER] asked that it be then considered, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] inquired whether a motion had been made to refer the bill. He was told by the Chair that no such motion had been made. Thereupon the Chair stated that the question would be on the third reading of the bill. That question was submitted, and the House ordered the bill to a third reading. The bill, as the Chair recollects, was then read. Then the gentleman from Illinois—which shows that he was giving very good attention—made a point of order that the bill should first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because it involved an appropriation. The Chair held the point of order was too late, because the bill had already been partly considered, had already been voted upon, and had been ordered to a third reading. And the Chair will state that the RECORD shows that pending this consideration, as the Chair holds, of this bill, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] stated the reasons why it ought to pass, in a very brief paragraph which appears also in the RECORD. Then the gentleman from Illinois, as he had a right to do, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill had been ordered to a third reading, which motion prevailed. The gentleman from Illinois then moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CRAPO.] The amendment was voted down, and the original motion of the gentleman from Illinois was also voted down. Thereupon the gentleman from Illinois made the point of order that the bill, containing an appropriation, must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole. The Chair then indicated its opinion that the point of order was made too late, because under the rule which has just been read that point of order must be made before the House entered upon the consideration of the bill. And the Chair now holds that the point of order was made too late, that the consideration of the bill had been entered upon, and therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill not having been considered by the House, and no opportunity having been offered for its consideration—[cries of "Regular order!"] I am on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that it is always patient in hearing him upon these questions of order. But the Chair in the interest of facilitating public business cannot hear an argument made on a question of order after a decision has been given.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Chair will allow me, I will say I did not intend to make any argument. I desire respectfully to appeal from the decision of the Chair, and to do that in a respectful manner I desire to state why I did it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the appeal.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

The motion to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMP. The gentleman made that motion before.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; that motion has not been put.

I want to show why this bill should be considered in the Committee of the Whole. It relates to a very important matter and should have a consideration in that committee, and I have a right to move now before the bill is ordered to be read a third time that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCKNER. I have no objection to this matter being considered now. I am willing to hear the gentleman's objection, and the House, I suppose, is willing to hear his objections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moves that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMP. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMP] will state his question of order.

Mr. CAMP. I submit that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is not in order, being the same motion that he made on the 28th of February, which the Chair then ruled out of order.

The SPEAKER. It was the gentleman's point of order which the Chair then overruled. As the Chair recollects, the gentleman from Illinois did not then make the motion to refer, but made the point of order that the bill of necessity must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMP. Will the Speaker hear me read from the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CAMP. I read the following from the RECORD, page 1502:

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COX, of New York. A motion to adjourn is surely in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill is past the stage when it can be referred on such a motion as that of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is right in his recollection. The question presented by the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is whether after a bill has been partly considered it is then in order to entertain a motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can renew that motion at any time before the bill is passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on that question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] moved when this question was last before the House to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and then moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not entertain that motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. The latter motion the Chair decided was out of order. The Speaker then said:

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill would not be in order, for the reason that the bill is not now in Committee of the Whole.

That was the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, which was ruled out of order. But he did make the motion, as appears from the RECORD, to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering it; and if the Journal does not show that that motion was pending at the time we adjourned on that day, it ought to show it. The RECORD shows that it was made, and I appeal to the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD shows what the gentleman states; but the Chair recollects that the motion was not entertained.

Mr. SPRINGER. By referring to the RECORD it will be seen that Mr. HASKELL said:

I desire to give notice that if the motion to adjourn is voted down I will move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

The gentleman also stated in another place that—

I think the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole, and I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill.

Mr. CAMP. The gentleman is reading from another place in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] was not entertained.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand that the Chair entertains any doubt that my motion now to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole is in order?

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] at that time acquiesced in the ruling of the Chair that the motion was not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, that it was not in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. After a bill has been partly considered, as this one has been, and the question being on ordering the bill to a third reading, it being a Senate bill, if the House should refuse to order the bill to a third reading, the Chair would be of opinion that a motion to refer would then be in order. But pending the question of ordering the bill to a third reading, the motion to refer not having been made when the bill was first called up, the Chair is inclined to hold that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not now in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not in order to move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole House?

The SPEAKER. Not at this stage.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order at any time hereafter?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order if the House should refuse to order the bill to a third reading.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the rule.

The SPEAKER. If there is any rule the Chair would like to hear it.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a rule on the subject.

The SPEAKER. There is a rule relating to a motion to commit when the House is operating under the previous question.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will the Chair consider clause 4 of Rule XVI in that connection, and whether the words "to refer" mean the same as the words "to commit," and whether the Committee of the Whole House may be considered as a Committee under that rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the motion is not now in order, the question being upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair having decided the motion to commit out of order, I desire to state my objections to ordering this bill to a third reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to say to the House that there is now pending before Congress a bill providing for the purchase of four blocks of land east of the Capitol, extending the Capitol grounds east to Second street, in order to secure ground for the erection of a public-library building and a building for the Department of Justice. In all probability that bill will pass before we adjourn this session.

If we pass that bill we will secure a very large and desirable tract of ground upon which to locate a building for the use of the Department of Justice. What, then, is the necessity for hurrying this bill through for the purchase of another building for the use of that Department, at an expense of a quarter of a million of dollars? We certainly will have ground enough after awhile on which to erect a building for the use of the Department of Justice.

I understand that there is a proposition pending from outside parties to pay the commissioner of the Freedman's Bank $225,000 for the property covered by this bill. That is all the property is worth, and it is a large price for it. Private individuals are willing to pay it. It is in the business part of the city, eligible for business purposes. There is no necessity for the Government to purchase for the use of the Department of Justice the most expensive piece of ground in the city, ground that is desirable for private business, when we can get a much larger and better tract of land located equally eligibly for the use of the public for one-tenth of the price, to say nothing of the large amount of vacant ground in the city which the Government already owns.

Besides that, the large structure which is on this land was not built for a public building. It is not adapted for the use of a public building. It is not fire-proof. I am opposed to purchasing the buildings of every bankrupt institution in Washington and converting them into public buildings in order to afford relief to the creditors of those bankrupt institutions.

If we need public buildings let us erect them substantially and with a view to the purpose for which they are to be used. I am in favor of constructing public buildings of stone and iron, using the best material, and making them fire-proof so that the public records can be securely kept. I am in favor of constructing them with rooms and passages of suitable size and in a style of architecture which will do credit to this Government. But I am utterly opposed to buying for public use buildings which have been constructed for private institutions, and are not adapted to the needs of the Government.

The Court of Claims is now held in the lower part of this building; the upper stories are occupied by the Department of Justice. Gentlemen who have visited the building must have seen how inadequate it is for use as a public building. The halls are narrow; the rooms are small, not adapted to use as Government offices. The whole structure is practically worthless as a public building; and if the Government buys it under this bill, it will be abandoned within five years, and put up for sale to the highest bidder for whatever it may bring.

I am not opposing this bill upon the mere ground of economy, but upon the broader ground that it is bad policy to purchase property unsuitable for public use, when we can purchase ground just as eligibly located and construct thereon buildings suitable for the use of the Government, and at the same time save thereby a large sum of money. We do not want this property. It is dear at any price.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Is it not true that the ground on which the Freedman's Bank building stands is worth about all that the Government is asked to pay for it?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is true that the property embraced in this bill can be sold now to private individuals for $225,000. That is the statement which some gentleman has made to me—that private individuals are ready to pay that sum for the property. It is to be presumed that this is all the property is worth for private business; and it is worth a great deal more for private business than for public business, for which, I repeat, it is altogether unsuited. It is eligibly located and well adapted for private business; and it can be sold for the benefit of the creditors of the Freedman's Bank for $225,000; but we in this bill offer for the property $25,000 more than private individuals are willing to give for it. This of itself shows that the bill ought not to pass.

If the Government is in absolute need of this property and cannot get along without it for a few months longer, let the property be put up for sale to the highest bidder, and let the Government come in upon the same terms as private persons, so that if we must have the property we may get it as low as possible. But in this bill we fix a price for the property—a price of $25,000 in excess of what private individuals will give for it.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the House will not by the passage of this bill authorize the purchase of property of this kind, totally unsuited to public uses, and which must be abandoned in a short time and resold at a great loss to the Government. There are numerous eligible sites which belong to the Government for public buildings. If these are deemed unsuitable, we have opportunity to purchase grounds whereon we may cause to be erected buildings permanent in their character and adapted to the use of the Government. I protest against the purchase of a building for the public use which is faulty in architecture, unsuitable in design, and extravagant in price.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER obtained the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say a few words on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left, [Mr. SHALLENBERGER.]

Mr. RANDALL. I only wish to occupy a moment or two.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will gladly yield to the gentleman after I shall have said a word or two on the question.

Mr. RANDALL. All right.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, there is perhaps no one measure now pending before Congress involving the appropriation of $250,000 that has been more carefully considered than this. I know of no measure more clearly in the interest of economy than this bill. The building located on the eastern section of the property known as the Freedman's Bank property is now rented by the Government for $15,600 a year. This building occupies only one-third of the eligible site which this bill proposes to purchase. Outside of this building, for which, as I have said, we now pay yearly $15,600 rent, there are one hundred and twenty feet front on Pennsylvania avenue extending to the corner of Fifteen-and-a-half street—a lot which of itself is one of the most eligible sites in the city of Washington for the construction of a public building.

Now, I ask gentlemen who desire with me to economize public expenditures to estimate the cost to the United States Government of renting property in the District of Columbia at 8 and 10 per cent. of its value, paying local taxes, repairs, insurance, &c., instead of purchasing outright property as eligible as this, paying, as we do, but 3 or 3½ per cent. for our money, and one-half of 1 per cent. for repairs.

Even though we pay $250,000 for this property, we shall save to the Government, taking into account the rentals now derived from the entire property, at least $10,000 in the first year; and we thus acquire a building readily adapted to public use and an eligible site on which we can construct buildings of brick and iron, affording desirable accommodations for several other offices of the Government, and saving one-half of the money we are now appropriating from year to year for the payment of rent.

Gentlemen perhaps do not know that this Government pays $181,000 every year in the matter of rentals within the District of Columbia. Some of them do not perhaps remember that every dollar of this rental is at the rate of 8 or 10 or 12 per cent. on the money invested. I ask, in the name of economy, in the name of suitable accommodations for transaction of public business, whether it is not better for the Government to take a property like this at the expense of $250,000, which only involves $10,000 a year as interest and repairs, rather than to pay $15,600 on the one portion of the property alone which the Government now rents, to say nothing of the value of the remaining valuable property we obtain extending to Fifteen-and-a-half street by securing this.

The Senate of the United States has passed this bill in two Congresses and two committees of this House have unanimously reported this measure favorably.

Mr. SPRINGER. What committees?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The Committee on Banking and Currency have passed it unanimously, as well as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We are not paying one dollar too much for this property.

Mr. CRAPO. I ask the gentleman to state the facts and figures showing the cost of this property to this Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. As I understand it, $260,000 has been the actual cost to the Freedman's bank corporation for the purchase of this land and the erection of this building. Beside that, the assessed valuation by the assessors——

Mr. SPRINGER. When was this building erected; in what year?

Mr. CRAPO. I do not remember the year.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was it not built in the time of the highest price for everything?

Mr. CRAPO. Not of land; but the building may have been built at a higher cost than the present rate of material. But the actual cost to the Freedman's Bank for this property was about two hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was at a time when prices were inflated.

Mr. CRAPO. The present assessed value of this property is nearly $230,000, and there is an actual bona fide proposition to the Comptroller for the purchase of the property for $225,000 cash, and if the Comptroller felt authorized to put this property in the market I have no doubt that it can be sold to private individuals as an investment for $250,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then let them have it.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no!

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield to my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] before calling the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the only feature of this bill which recommends it to me is that it will enable the receivers to declare another dividend to the defrauded creditors of the Freedman's Bank.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? The gentleman has just said that the property will sell for $250,000 at auction. Will not that go as far toward paying a dividend to the stockholders of this bank as to take the money out of the public funds?

Mr. RANDALL. I assert the price is higher than we ought to give for it, and that if we wanted a building permanently, to be occupied by the Department of Justice and the Court of Claims, this is not such a one as the United States should own or the Department and the Court of Claims should occupy.

Furthermore, there is a forcible saying I learned in my youth, that when you do not want a thing it is dear at any price. I do not believe the United States wants this building at all, and therefore, for one, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield now to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HERBERT.]

Mr. HERBERT. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania who has spoken, and other gentlemen who oppose this measure, do not fully understand it. The purpose is to buy not only the building which is now used by the Department of Justice but the lots adjoining, running back to Fifteen-and a-half street, and thence up that street some one hundred and twenty or more feet. The exact dimensions I do not remember. There are some buildings on it but of no great consequence. The purpose is to erect on this additional land other buildings, of which the Government stands in need.

The gentleman says we do not want the building now used by the Department of Justice and therefore it is dear at any price. If gentlemen will only pay attention for a moment to the figures cited it seems to me they will conclude that if there be any one thing the Government does want in the city of Washington more than another it is more room in its public buildings.

Let me call attention to the rentals paid by the Government in the city of Washington. The table which I have before me shows the whole matter in detail, but I will only give the summation for each Department. The Government pays rent for buildings used by the Treasury Department, $23,225; for buildings used by the Navy Department, $55,060; for buildings used by the State Department, $600; for buildings used by the Post-Office Department, $6,500; for buildings used by the Department of Justice, $12,000; for buildings rented by the War Department, $3,923.07½. The recapitulation, in which the District of Columbia is included, shows over $181,000. Deducting the District of Columbia, then the Government pays $147,000 to private individuals for buildings used by the Government Departments.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. You have not included the Census or the Pension Bureaus in your list.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the committee at all considered the amount of room in the power of the Government to take by destroying a whole lot of not valuable records. For instance, take the Post-Office Department, with letters and petitions recommending the establishment of post-roads, &c., which have accumulated for years; and certainly there can be little occasion to retain them. I understood, during the last Congress, that nearly one-half of the whole Post-Office building could be used if they destroyed all those old records. I am told that if you search through all the Departments of the Government you will find a vast amount of evidently worthless matter, which is stored away, and is of no use for any purpose. Of course all the valuable archives of the Government should be strictly and carefully preserved; but could not a vast amount of money be saved in that way?

Mr. HERBERT. To answer that question of the gentleman from Georgia, before proceeding further, I will only say that it seems to me it would be a very dangerous thing indeed for this Government to undertake to destroy any of these public records. No man can tell when a paper will become important. I think it was Talleyrand who said that no public man ought ever to write a letter or ever destroy a letter. I think that no government can safely or wisely undertake to say that it will destroy any portion of its records. It would certainly, in my judgment, be dangerous if not false economy; but I confess I have never considered that question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I only wish to ask the gentleman if, as he proposes to construct a public building for records of the Government, it would not be better to take some of the property in this city now belonging to the Government and erect a building upon it suitable for the purpose rather than to take an old building, which perhaps would not be large enough, or would otherwise be found to be unsuitable for the purpose intended?

Mr. HERBERT. To answer the question of the gentleman——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield the floor for general discussion.

Mr. HERBERT. Allow me but a moment longer to answer the question of the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to ask him one question in this connection?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he is of opinion, in view of the fact that this building never was erected for a public building, that anybody here would be in favor of its purchase were it not for the fact that it has the meritorious feature which I have already mentioned, that is, to provide a dividend for the defrauded stockholders of the Freedman's Bank?

Mr. HERBERT. I will answer the last question first, and then, if I do not forget, I will answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

The purpose indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I certainly, for one, have not had in view in any consideration that I have given to this question. I look at it purely from an economic point of view. I believe that this Government, which can obtain money at 3, certainly at 3½ per cent., ought not to rent the buildings necessary for its use, and be thereby compelled to pay to private individuals from 10 to 12 per cent. on their investments. There is no business man, certainly no wise business man, who would act upon that idea, or allow his agent to do so; and we, who are agents of the public, agents of the people, ought to put a stop to this waste of the people's money.

If this system of leasing property for the use of the Government is to continue, private individuals will erect new buildings, and, as the necessities of the Government demand it, will lease them to the Government at this vast percentage upon their cost. We never can put a stop to this wasteful extravagance, except by erecting our own buildings; and if we are to be met at every point with the captious objections to this lot or that lot, the result will be, that we will go on as we have been doing for years past, paying enormous rents, and at the same time doing nothing to relieve ourselves, because some gentleman imagines that some other would be better than the lot proposed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. HERBERT. Very well.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would like to ask if the Government has not already many acres of land here in the city which might be used for a site for such a building as proposed, and if it would not be better to select some one of these——

Mr. HERBERT. There are none that I know of available and suitable for the purpose for which we want this building, except perhaps Judiciary Square. This is an eligible location for some purposes, but it is too far off, too much disconnected from the other Department buildings. The Departments are already too much scattered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There are lots in the Armory square, and some near the building of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and also near the Government Printing Office; and there are Government reservations scattered all over the city.

Mr. HERBERT. This, as I have said, is one of the most eligible locations in the city. It is believed by the committee that it is desirable to purchase it because it is better suited to the wants of the Government than any lot owned by the Government or than any other that can be procured. The figures I have quoted show that the Government needs more rooms. Every gentleman who has had occasion to visit the Departments knows there is not a single public building in the city of Washington, not excepting this Capitol itself, which is large enough for the wants of the Government. The purpose is to erect on that portion of this lot not now covered by the Freedman's Bank building some of the buildings needed by the Departments.

The price proposed to be paid, it will be remembered, is not paid for the building solely, which is now occupied by the Department of Justice, but embraces also the adjacent lots. And we are now paying, including $3,000 paid for another Department, $15,000 rent per annum for the building alone without the lots which it is proposed to buy in connection with the building.

Mr. SPRINGER. In erecting a building for the preservation of public records, would it not be better to secure an isolated location, so that in case of fire the public records would not be endangered? Would it not be better to select a lot away from business structures and have no large buildings adjacent to it? This building is proposed to be erected right in the business part of the city.

Mr. HERBERT. On every side such building as may be erected will be, as I understand it, protected except on that side where the present building, the one occupied by the Department of Justice, stands.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will it not be contiguous to buildings on the west side?

Mr. HERBERT. It will front Fifteen-and-a-half street on the west side, would abut the present building on the east side, would front the Avenue on the south side, and a space would be left between that and the buildings on the north side. As I said, money to this Government is now worth only about 3 per cent. At that rate when we pay $15,000 per annum rent we are paying the interest on $500,000. We get the building and additional lots for half that sum. Three committees have examined the question in this Congress and they all recommend the purchase. We believe it to be to the interest of the Government, and we do not believe we could get a jury to assess it lower if we resorted to the law to condemn it to public uses.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I should be very glad to yield to several gentlemen who desire to speak in favor of this bill, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] one of the earliest and best friends of the measure, the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS,] and others; but I am admonished that the time passes, and that it is best for me to call the previous question now on the third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to address the House on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered, and the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist on cutting off debate entirely. I do not see why gentlemen should hasten action on the bill without debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I believe my motion is in order. I can move at any time to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that motion is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why not?

The SPEAKER. Because it is not provided for by any rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to commit the bill to that committee. That is the language of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that that motion is not in order.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it not be in order to move to recommit at this stage?

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill has never been committed.

Mr. ATKINS. But if it had come from a committee could not the motion to recommit be made now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair simply decides that the motion to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CALKINS. I make the point of order that that motion has already been made and voted down.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not at this stage.

Mr. BUCKNER. A separate vote was had on that proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not at this stage.

The SPEAKER. The motion was made before at a different stage and the Chair thinks that that motion, pending a demand for the previous question, is in order.

The question being taken on Mr. SPRINGER's motion, there were—ayes 51, noes 86.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let us have the yeas and nays on this question.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 27; not a sufficient number.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering tellers there were, ayes 31, more than one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were ordered, and Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and Mr. SHALLENBERGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 47.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 75, nays 112, not voting 105; as follows:

Mr. BREWER with Mr. ROSS.

Mr. GUENTHER with Mr. DEUSTER.

Mr. KING with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. HUBBS with Mr. CHAPMAN, on this vote.

Mr. ERRETT. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States in writing was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House having disposed of the unfinished business on the Speaker's table, I make the point of order that we must now proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table as from the beginning, and that first in order are messages from the President and other executive communications.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

INCREASE OF ENLISTED MEN IN THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with a copy of a letter from the chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, and a draft of a bill, recommending an increase of five hundred enlisted men for the naval service. The matter is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 7, 1882.

TRADE WITH INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 6th instant, with accompanying papers from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and draft of a bill to amend section 2135, Revised Statutes. The subject is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 8, 1882.

CONTINGENT FUND OF THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a detailed statement of the disbursements of the contingent funds of the bureaus and offices of the Interior Department for the year ending June 30, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in response to a resolution of the House of January 30, 1882, requesting copies of all reports and the inspections made by the secretaries of the Light-House Board and the Chief of the Bureau of Revenue Marine since January 1, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF MAIL-CARRIERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House of February 7, 1882, a draft of an act to repeal the second and third sections of the act of May 7, 1878, and to provide for the payment of mail-carriers; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES COLLINS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 143) for the relief of Charles Collins; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that the bill appropriates money, and I insist that it should be referred, not to the Committee of the Whole, but to the appropriate standing committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to suggest the point of order that this bill should be first considered in Committee of the Whole. It will go there under the rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; it should go to the proper standing committee; that is the point I make.

Mr. CALKINS. And I make the further point of order, that it appropriates money, and therefore must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read subject to objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $337.36 be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Charles Collins, postmaster at Berlin, Worcester County, Maryland, for stamps stolen from the post-office at that place on the night of November 23, 1877.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The bill should go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALKINS. I will modify my motion so as to refer it to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COVINGTON. A similar bill has already been favorably reported to this House by the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CALKINS. If this bill does not provoke any discussion, I have no objection to its being considered and passed now.

Mr. CANNON. In the mean time I reserve all points of order. If the bill is passed, it must be by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] withdraw his motion to refer?

Mr. CALKINS. I do.

Mr. COVINGTON. I ask that the bill be passed at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COVINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL JAMES A. GARFIELD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 387) directing the Secretary of War to pay over to the Society of the Army of the Cumberland $7,500 to aid in the erection of a statue or monument to General James A. Garfield; which was read a first and second time.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay over to the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, out of the proceeds of the sales of any condemned ordnance or ordnance stores, the sum of $7,500 to be used in the erection of a statue or monument at Washington, District of Columbia, to the memory of General James A. Garfield.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 827) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1881; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point of order that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. Should it not be referred to the appropriate standing committee?

Mr. CAMP. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM J. ANTHONY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 494) directing the issue of a duplicate check to William J. Anthony, a pensioner of the United States; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension agent at Knoxville, Tennessee, be, and he is hereby, directed to issue a duplicate of check numbered 14101 for $1,102.80 in favor of William J. Anthony, the original of which having been lost in the mails: Provided, That said check has not been already presented or paid, and that said William J. Anthony shall first execute a bond, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to hold the United States harmless against the double payment of said check.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY P. ROLFE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 491) for the relief of Henry P. Rolfe; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. BRIGGS. I hope this bill will be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to pay to Henry P. Rolfe the sum of $2,519.97, for services as United States attorney, from the 1st day of January to the 23d day of July, 1874, for the district of New Hampshire, and for services and expenditures rendered and incurred by the direction of the State Department in procuring the extradition of William Johnson, a fugitive from justice, charged with uttering counterfeit United States Treasury notes; and that the same be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose this bill should go to the Committee on Claims. Otherwise I raise a point of order.

Mr. BRIGGS. I wish to make a statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that, if the point of order be reserved.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, a bill for the relief of this officer was introduced originally in the Forty-fifth Congress, and reported to this House favorably by Mr. Ellsworth, of Michigan. A similar bill was also reported favorably in the Forty-sixth Congress by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. DAVIS.] In this Congress a bill of the same purport has been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims, and is now on the Calendar. This measure has passed the Senate of the United States twice, and I do not think there can be any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that a similar bill is now on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRIGGS. It is, having been favorably reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not insist on the point of order.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANK D. YATES AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 271) for the relief of Frank D. Yates and others; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. I desire to reserve points of order on this bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point of order that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates money; and I call the attention of the Chair to subdivision 3 of Rule XXIII.

Mr. SPRINGER. Undoubtedly the bill is subject to the point of order; but should it not be referred to the appropriate standing committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. CAMP. If it is desired to refer the bill to a standing committee, I have no objection. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it not improper to state that, according to its information, a bill similar to this is upon the Private Calendar, having been reported from one of the standing committees of the House.

Mr. CAMP. Then I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained; and the bill will go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that the bill be referred to the committee which reported the corresponding bill now on the Private Calendar. That committee should examine this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. WICKS & CO.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 266) for the relief of George W. Wicks & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to George W. Wicks & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky, the sum of $1,200, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for storage on a lot of tobacco and cigars stored in their bonded warehouse by the officers of the Government on account of violations of the internal-revenue laws.

Mr. HASKELL. This bill has received the unanimous approval of the Ways and Means Committee of this House.

Mr. WILLIS. It has been reported favorably in the House, as well as in the Senate, in the last Congress and the present.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

S. ROSENFELD & CO.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 242) for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co.; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. McLANE. I ask the consideration of this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to Simon Rosenfeld & Co., of Baltimore, Maryland, a sum of money equal to the value of the internal-revenue stamps purchased by said Rosenfeld & Co., and affixed by them, in accordance with the provisions of the act of July 20, 1868, to a certain lot of tobacco and cigars and snuff held by said parties, and inventoried, according to law, on the 1st day of December, 1868: Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be satisfied that the said Rosenfeld & Co. purchased the said cigars, tobacco, and snuff as tax-paid articles, upon which the tax was actually paid prior to the passage of said act of July 20, 1868, and that said Rosenfeld & Co. actually affixed additional stamps thereon at their own expense.

Mr. McLANE. A bill similar to this has been favorably reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CAMP. I raise a point of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMP] raises a point of order.

Mr. CAMP. I will withdraw the point of order if the bill can pass without discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I renew the point of order, and ask the report of the committee be read.

The SPEAKER. The point of order as to the reading of the bill will have to be insisted on, for if the report be read the House will then enter upon the consideration of the matter.

Mr. CANNON. If the report is to be read I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made.

Mr. McLANE. What point of order?

The SPEAKER. That the bill must be first considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CAMP. Because it appropriates money.

Mr. McLANE. The House has passed such bills without question.

Mr. CALKINS. We have no objection to passing it now, but the reading of the report is insisted upon.

Mr. McLANE. I ask by unanimous consent the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman should make a statement of facts, or else the House will be acting on the subject without knowing them.

Mr. McLANE. A simple statement will suffice. This is tobacco on which stamps were put and afterward another tax was imposed and paid. The bill only authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to refund taxes which have been improperly imposed and collected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are not such cases covered by a general law?

Mr. McLANE. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed this bill has had a favorable report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TUCKER. And a favorable report in the last Congress.

Mr. McLANE. Yes, and again at this session.

Mr. TUCKER. An elaborate one by Mr. CARLISLE, of Kentucky. I do not know whether it passed at the last Congress, but like measures have passed through the Committee on Ways and Means. There can be no question about this matter.

Mr. McLANE. I hold in my hand——

Mr. SPRINGER. The House having entered on the consideration of this bill, I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Objection has not been withdrawn, and the House has not entered on the consideration of the question.

Mr. SPRINGER. The question is on the motion that the bill be ordered to a third reading.

Mr. CALKINS. There is no objection to unanimous consent to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. It was only on that ground that I withdrew my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the report.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McLANE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANK D. YATES AND OTHERS.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 271) for the relief of Frank D. Yates and others was referred to the Committee on Claims. That motion was made and adopted in the House on an absolute misunderstanding of the condition of the bill. It has already been carefully considered by the Committee on Claims, and reported back favorably to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the bill was referred?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman states there was a favorable report on the bill from that committee already.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to reconsider, made by the gentleman from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the reading of the bill as well as for the reading of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit the question of order on the bill again comes up. I ask that the bill be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion the bill is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CAMP. The Chair has so held.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair has so held. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. CAMP. Not if unanimous consent is given and it will not give rise to debate.

Mr. DEERING. I wish to say a word on that bill.

The SPEAKER. If the point of order is insisted on it will have to be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. CAMP. I do, unless unanimous consent is given to consider the bill without debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] be heard on the bill for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana insists on his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to the gentleman from Colorado being heard.

Mr. BELFORD. I simply desire to say this bill has been carefully considered by the Senate committee, of which Mr. TELLER is chairman, and it has been carefully considered and examined by the Committee of this House and favorably reported. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be put on its passage at this time.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is no question the public is not concerned in a single dollar involved in the bill. The only question is whether this money acknowledged to be due for the transportation of Indians shall be paid to this party. All the authorities of the Government recommend that it should be so paid.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to say, if I am allowed, that in the year 1875 I was upon the ground at the Red-Cloud Agency as commissioner under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and there investigated this subject. I never have heard of it since, but I wish to state what the facts are.

Mr. CANNON. I object to that.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I will only occupy the attention of the House for a minute or two. In 1872 the agent at this point was ordered to move his station back about twenty-five miles, in the winter. He immediately employed men to make the removal of the Indians, and these men who are the beneficiaries of this bill used their teams, and did the work of moving the agency back some twenty or thirty miles, supposing they were to be paid by the Government. After doing the work, however, they were told that they would have to look for their money to the contractor. The facts were laid before the Department, and the Department refused to pay anybody. Now the work was done in 1872. These were the men who did the work, and they have never been paid. It is only proper that they should receive compensation for the work.

Mr. DEERING. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill was carefully considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the last Congress, and received the unanimous recommendation of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point of order.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. BELFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN J. KEY AND W. G. M. DAVIS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 63) for the relief of John J. Key and W. G. M. Davis; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. I reserve the point of order upon the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point of order that this bill should receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CALKINS. I move to refer it to the Judiciary Committee, where a similar bill is now pending.

Mr. CAMP. I would like to have a ruling upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana, however, is that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

F. G. SCHWATKA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 51) for the relief of F. G. Schwatka, sr., and wife; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GEORGE. This bill has been considered by the House Committee on Claims, and they unanimously recommend its passage. I ask, therefore, that it be placed upon its passage.

Mr. SPRINGER. We do not know anything about the bill. It ought to be considered at some time by some committee of this House, and I make the point of order upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that a similar bill is now on the Calendar, having been reported favorably from a committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. What Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Private Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then let this go with it.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. GEORGE said: I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote referring the bill (S. No. 51) to the Private Calendar, inasmuch as the House bill is already on the Private Calendar with a favorable report. I ask that it be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table, where it was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to withdraw the bill (S. No. 51) from the Private Calendar, to which it has been referred, in order that it may take its place again on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

UMATILLA INDIAN LANDS IN OREGON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain lands adjacent to the town of Pendleton, in the State of Oregon, belonging to the Umatilla Indian reservation, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. I reserve the points of order upon the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. This bill is not subject to the point of order. It has been favorably and unanimously considered by the House committee, and has also received the indorsement of the Department. I ask, therefore, that it be placed upon its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point of order that this should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The sixth section of the bill proposes to appropriate the sum of $3,000 out of the Treasury to carry the bill into effect. I hold, therefore, it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist upon the point of order. While it is proposed to appropriate $3,000, if that much should be necessary for this purpose, it also provides that the same amount shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States from the lands first sold. I do not think there can be any objection to the passage of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that we consider the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made by the gentleman from New York, that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union because it makes an appropriation of money. While it is true that it is provided by the bill that this appropriation shall be reimbursed from the sale of the Indian lands authorized by the bill to be sold, the Chair is of opinion that it is an appropriation within the meaning of the rule, and that the bill is subject to the point of order.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. CAMP. Not if unanimous consent is given to put it upon its passage without debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew the objection.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me ask one favor of the House, that this bill be passed over informally, and be permitted to retain its place on the Calendar, as a personal favor to the gentleman from Oregon, for the reason that it has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing the bill over informally as requested?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

OLIVE STEPHENSON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 788) granting a pension to Olive Stephenson; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. I desire to reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill makes an appropriation, does it not?

The SPEAKER. The bill simply puts the person named upon the pension-rolls.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar unless somebody knows something about it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly I do.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

CROW INDIANS OF MONTANA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 768) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Crow Indians of Montana for the sale of a portion of their reservation in said Territory, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point of order upon that bill from the reading of its title. It proposes to make an appropriation.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I hope the gentleman will withhold the point of order for a moment.

Mr. CAMP. I must insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I only want to state the reason why it is important that this bill shall be acted upon immediately.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the gentleman from New York will permit the gentleman from Montana to be heard.

Mr. CAMP. I insist on the point of order, but I have no objection to the bill being passed over.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, because the bill by its terms makes an appropriation.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask that the bill be passed over. I desire to make just one statement. The Secretary of the Interior says, in a communication which I hold in my hand, that the Crows are impatient of delay, and unless this bill is passed it may lead to war and unpleasant results.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask that the bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HIRAM S. TOWN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 610) for the relief of Hiram S. Town, postmaster of the city of Ripon, in the county of Fond du Lac, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be reported.

The bill was read.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point of order that the bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the terms of the bill, the point of order is well taken, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

IMPROVEMENTS SOUTH OF CAPITOL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 30) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the ground south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the joint resolution be read.

Mr. URNER. I move that the joint resolution be put upon its passage.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the reading of the joint resolution subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. NEAL. I wish to say, a similar resolution was passed by the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, and this is the last of that old canal.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the joint resolution should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia or to the Private Calendar.

Mr. NEAL. It has already been thoroughly considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they have reported three weeks ago a similar bill.

Mr. SPARKS. How much has already been appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. NEAL. Forty thousand dollars. This is the last appropriation that will be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is the point of order insisted on?

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. NEAL. Then I ask that the joint resolution shall remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. URNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] allow me to make one word of explanation?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. URNER. This matter has been considered in the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the District authorities are very anxious that this joint resolution shall be passed. An appropriation has been given annually for this purpose, and this is now all that is required for the purpose of completing the work. The appropriation has been used hitherto in this season of the year for the purpose of giving employment to needy people in the District of Columbia. There are a great many persons now here out of employment and the District authorities are anxious that this bill if passed shall be passed at once so that these people may obtain much needed employment.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If this House has not time to consider a bill when the Secretary of the Interior says that an Indian war is involved if it is not passed, I think it has not time to consider this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made, the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. KLOTZ said: I now ask consent to take up Senate joint resolution No. 30, relative to the filling up of the old canal. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] have withdrawn their objections to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request to the House. Is there consent to taking up and considering at this time Senate joint resolution No. 30, making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the ground south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes?

Mr. KLOTZ. I would like to make a short statement.

Mr. PAGE. I will object, unless the bill can be passed without debate.

Mr. KLOTZ. I ask only one minute for a statement.

Mr. PAGE. If the bill can be passed without debate, I will not object to considering it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution referred to?

Mr. SPARKS. Let it be reported, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. It has been once reported.

Mr. SPARKS. I want to hear it again; I do not remember the particulars of the bill.

The SPEAKER. But if the gentleman objects absolutely, the joint resolution will not now be considered.

Mr. SPARKS. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be again read.

The joint resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this joint resolution being considered at this time?

Mr. SPARKS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the joint resolution is not now before the House.

MARY A. DAVIS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 164) granting a pension to Mary A. Davis; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in extenso.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPARKS. What is the nature of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It has just been read.

Mr. SPARKS. I wanted to know what reason there is for granting a pension to this party. Why could she not get it in the Pension Office, as other people do?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot furnish the information which the gentleman desires.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report be read.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is in order on the consideration of the measure.

Mr. SPRINGER. If debate be in order, I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was referred accordingly.

D. T. KIRBY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 175) for the relief of D. T. Kirby; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was referred accordingly.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 314) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway mail service; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That persons in the railway mail service, known as railway post-office clerks, route agents, local agents, and mail-route messengers, shall, on and after the 1st day of July, 1882, be designated as railway postal clerks, and divided into five classes, whose salaries shall not exceed the following rates per annum: First class, not exceeding $800; second class, not exceeding $900; third class, not exceeding $1,000; fourth class, not exceeding $1,200; and fifth class, not exceeding $1,400: Provided, That the Postmaster-General, in fixing the salaries of clerks in the different classes, may fix different salaries for clerks of the same class, according to the amount of work done and the responsibility incurred by each, but shall not, in any case, allow a higher salary to any clerk of any class than the maximum fixed by this act for the class to which such clerk belongs.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. HAZELTON. The bill is all right. There can be no objection to it by any one.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on the bill.

Mr. HAZELTON. Then let the bill remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. MONEY. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. MONEY. There is no reason why this bill should be referred. A similar bill has been reported favorably from that committee once or twice.

Mr. LACEY. I hope that unanimous consent will be given to let this bill retain its place on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let it be considered now; that is what we want.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to refer.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The question was taken upon the motion to refer; and upon a division there were—ayes 24, noes 68.

So (no further count being called for) the motion to refer was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] makes the point of order that this bill requires an appropriation of money, and must therefore receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAZELTON. The point of order is not good, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. In order that we may understand whether the point of order is good or not let the bill be again read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] on the point of order, if he desires to be heard.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman himself has already decided it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAZELTON. Inasmuch as the Chair very kindly permits me to say a word on the point of order, I will give the reason why I do not think the point of order is well taken.

The bill does not appropriate any money at all. It simply regulates the manner in which money already appropriated shall be expended. It does not increase expenditures in any way, shape, or manner. It simply classifies those who are employed to-day in this railway mail service under the Government. For that reason it cannot, it seems to me, be subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that if this bill does not appropriate money it will require money to be paid from appropriations already made, and therefore it comes within the rule and is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HAZELTON. I think the Chair is in error.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the bill be passed over informally and remain upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill should be referred.

The SPEAKER. Then it will go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BROWNE. Would not an affirmative vote on my motion leave the bill on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman submitted a request, not a motion, and objection was made to the request.

Mr. MONEY. I move that the bill keep its place on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that that motion is not in order.

Mr. SPARKS. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONEY. Then I ask consent that it be done.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. REED. That kills it.

Mr. HAZELTON. Why not allow it to remain on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Objection being made to that request, the Chair has no discretion.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

P. B. PERRY, SR.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 228) granting a pension to P. B. Perry, sr., which was read a first and second time.

The bill was as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of P. B. Perry, senior, a soldier of the Mexican war.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that the bill be referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the proper reference would be to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Very well; then I will make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Pensions.

JAMES M. BACON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 323) for the relief of James M. Bacon; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist that this bill take the regular course.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made to the consideration of the bill, it will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

MIAMI INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 328) to provide for the sale of the lands of the Miami Indians in Kansas.

Mr. COLERICK. I ask that this bill be passed over informally.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

FORT LARNED MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 346) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation.

Mr. HASKELL. In behalf of my colleague, [Mr. RYAN,] who is absent to-day, I ask that this bill be passed over informally.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

RULES AND ARTICLES OF WAR.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 493) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War; which was taken up, and read a first and second time.

Mr. HAZELTON. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAZELTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OLIVE STEPHENSON.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has consented to withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 788) granting a pension to Olive Stephenson. It was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. I ask that it be now taken up and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill, I understand, proposes to give a pension to the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812. She is now eighty-five years old, and must get her pension very soon if she is to enjoy it at all. I therefore withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was taken up, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If there is any report accompanying this bill I would like to hear it read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have read the Senate report. It appears that the bill is to grant a pension to a lady now very aged, the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama insist on the reading of the report?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. No, sir.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL. Senate bill No. 827, which was referred awhile ago to the Committee on the District of Columbia, is a bill proposing merely to correct a mistake in an act heretofore passed. In that act the District commissioners were authorized to sell certain property, but the word "convey" was omitted. This bill proposes to amend that act by inserting the word "convey." I do not care particularly about having the bill passed now; but I would like to have the reference to the District Committee reconsidered, so that the bill may retain its place on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] asks unanimous consent that the vote by which this bill was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia be reconsidered, and that the bill retain its place on the Speaker's table. The Chair hears no objection.

SILAS Q. HOWE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 565) for the relief of Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co.; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. BROWNE. This bill contains a very considerable appropriation and ought to receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. I make that point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Had it not better be referred to the appropriate standing committee?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] make a motion to refer?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know what is the appropriate committee.

Mr. CARLISLE. The Committee on Ways and Means. The bill proposes to refund taxes collected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE P. WEBSTER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 605) for the relief of George P. Webster; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

EFFICIENCY OF THE NAVY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 689) to promote the efficiency of the Navy; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BRIGGS. I hope the bill will be now considered and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the motion to refer.

The motion of Mr. TALBOTT was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

JOSEPH HERTFORD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 790) for the relief of Joseph Hertford; which was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point of order that this bill appropriates money, and must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

CHARLES P. CHOUTEAU.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 184) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let that bill be passed over informally.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can we have an understanding before it is passed over informally that it shall not be acted on until the argument on the same bill now in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar shall be finished?

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order this must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, where there is pending a bill of the same character.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the bill being passed over informally and retaining its place on the Speaker's table?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The reason I made the inquiry is this: I did not know but it might be called up to-morrow again. I want it passed over.

The SPEAKER. It will always be subject to the point of order made against it. Is there objection to it?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. I have no objection to have this passed in lieu of the House bill, when the House in committee determines to pass the House bill,

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. But I have.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point of order that the bill must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is sustained, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLARDY. This does not appropriate any money.

The SPEAKER. Does it not provide for an appropriation of money?

Mr. CLARK. A similar bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and was up for consideration last Friday. I ask it be passed over informally to retain its place on the Speaker's table. If it shall be reached again before the bill in committee is disposed of, we will make the same request it be passed over.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I am satisfied with that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to it being passed over informally?

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. There is no objection, and the bill goes back to the Speaker's table.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LACEY. I move that the motion by which the bill S. No. 314 was referred to the Committee of the Whole House be reconsidered. It was done under the impression that it increased the salaries of postal clerks; but it in fact merely changes the name by which they are known, so that the appropriation for that service may be in one item instead of three or four. I hope no objection will be made to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to its remaining on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks it be taken up for present consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that.

Mr. LACEY. Let it be withdrawn from the Committee of the Whole House and retain its place on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

DR. DANIEL M. APPEL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 668) to authorize Dr. Daniel M. Appel, of the United States Army, to receive pay for discharging the duties of physician to the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CAMP. Let it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILLITS. I ask by unanimous consent it be allowed to retain its place on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HASKELL. There is a unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in favor of this bill. Let it retain its place on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the bill being passed over informally and retaining its place on the Speaker's table?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PAULINA JONES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 130) for the relief of Paulina Jones, widow of Alexander Jones, deceased, late of Company E, Second North Carolina Infantry; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. VANCE. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Alexander Jones upon the rolls of Company E, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry, to date September 1, 1863.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POLYGAMY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 353) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONVERSE. I make the point of order on that bill.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read first.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, reserving the right to raise the point of order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows, namely:

"Every person who has a husband or wife living who, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter marries another, whether married or single, and any man who hereafter simultaneously, or on the same day, marries more than one woman, in a Territory or other place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, is guilty of polygamy, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 and by imprisonment for a term of not more than five years; but this section shall not extend to any person by reason of any former marriage whose husband or wife by such marriage shall have been absent for five successive years, and is not known to such person to be living, and is believed by such person to be dead, nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been dissolved by a valid decree of a competent court, nor to any person by reason of any former marriage which shall have been pronounced void by a valid decree of a competent court, on the ground of nullity of the marriage contract."

SEC. 2. That the foregoing provisions shall not affect the prosecution or punishment of any offense already committed against the section amended by the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That if any male person, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That counts for any or all of the offenses named in sections 1 and 3 of this act may be joined in the same information or indictment.

SEC. 5. That in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation under any statute of the United States, it shall be sufficient cause of challenge to any person drawn or summoned as a juryman or talesman, first, that he is or has been living in the practice of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation with more than one woman, or that he is or has been guilty of an offense punishable by either of the foregoing sections or by section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah;" or, second, that he believes it right for a man to have more than one living and undivorced wife at the same time, or to live in the practice of cohabiting with more than one woman; and any person appearing or offered as a juror or talesman, and challenged on either of the foregoing grounds, may be questioned on his oath as to the existence of any such cause of challenge, and other evidence may be introduced bearing upon the question raised by such challenge; and this question shall be tried by the court. But as to the first ground of challenge before mentioned, the person challenged shall not be bound to answer if he shall say upon his oath that he declines on the ground that his answer may tend to criminate himself; and if he shall answer as to said first ground, his answer shall not be given in evidence in any criminal prosecution against him for any offense named in sections 1 or 3 of this act; but if he declines to answer on any ground he shall be rejected as incompetent.

SEC. 6. That the President is hereby authorized to grant amnesty to such classes of offenders guilty before the passage of this act of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation before the passage of this act, on such conditions and under such limitations as he shall think proper; but no such amnesty shall have effect unless the conditions thereof shall be complied with.

SEC. 7. That the issue of bigamous or polygamous marriages known as Mormon marriages, in cases in which such marriages have been solemnized according to the ceremonies of the Mormon sect, in any Territory of the United States, and such issue shall have been born before the 1st day of January, A. D. 1883, are hereby legitimated.

SEC. 8. That no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such Territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such Territory or place, or under the United States.

SEC. 9. That all the registration and election offices of every description in the Territory of Utah are hereby declared vacant, and each and every duty relating to the registration of voters, the conduct of elections, the receiving or rejection of votes, and the canvassing and returning of the same, and the issuing of certificates or other evidence of election in said Territory, shall, until other provision be made by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory as is hereinafter by this section provided, be performed under the existing laws of the United States and of said Territory by proper persons, who shall be appointed to execute such offices and perform such duties by a board of five persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than three of whom shall be members of one political party, and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The members of said board so appointed by the President shall each receive a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and shall continue in office until the Legislative Assembly of said Territory shall make provision for filling said offices as herein authorized. The secretary of the Territory shall be the secretary of said board, and keep a journal of its proceedings, and attest the action of said board under this section. The canvass and return of all the votes at elections in said Territory for members of the Legislative Assembly thereof shall also be returned to said board, which shall canvass all such returns and issue certificates of election to those persons who, being eligible for such election, shall appear to have been lawfully elected, which certificate shall be the only evidence of the right of such persons to sit in such Assembly: Provided, That said board of five persons shall not exclude any person otherwise eligible to vote from the polls on account of any opinion such person may entertain on the subject of bigamy or polygamy, nor shall they refuse to count any such vote on account of the opinion of the person casting it on the subject of bigamy or polygamy; but each house of such Assembly, after its organization, shall have power to decide upon the elections and qualifications of its members. And at or after the first meeting of said Legislative Assembly whose members shall have been elected and returned according to the provisions of this act, said Legislative Assembly may make such laws, conformable to the organic act of said Territory and not inconsistent with other laws of the United States, as it shall deem proper concerning the filling of the offices in said Territory declared vacant by this act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. It is that the bill provides for the paying out of money, although it does not directly appropriate money, and that is sufficient under the decision of the Speaker on the next to the last preceding bill.

Mr. CALKINS. How?

Mr. CONVERSE. It appoints a board of five persons and provides they shall have a salary of $3,000 each.

Mr. HASKELL. To be paid out of the Territorial and not out of the Federal Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Ohio on the question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have no further suggestion to make, except that the rule be read together with the ninth section of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Read Rule XXIII, clause 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will request the gentleman from Ohio to indicate that portion of the bill which he desires to have read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I do not care specially to have it read. In the printed bill which I have it is a portion of section 9.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the printed bill is not the bill which is under consideration.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask the reading of that portion which relates to the appointment of five persons by the President.

The Clerk read the section of the bill indicated.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire, Mr. Speaker, if I may save the point of order, to suggest that this bill ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. It contains many important provisions, and if I may be allowed that motion without yielding the point of order, I desire to make it.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be in order.

Mr. HASKELL. What motion?

The SPEAKER. To refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HASKELL. The point of order has been made and is pending, and I do not feel disposed, until that question is determined, to concede the right to make the motion which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But he reserves the point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. If gentlemen have anything to say upon the point of order I would be glad to listen to their remaks, and would like to reply. Now, Mr. Speaker, as it has nearly reached our ordinary hour for adjournment, when this point of order has been fairly discussed, I will ask the House that the bill be printed in the RECORD, the written bill, and the House may see it; and then to-morrow we can go on with the consideration of it, or on another day thereafter whenever the House chooses to go to the Speaker's table, when this will come up as unfinished business.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland for a motion to adjourn, the point of order being considered as pending.

Mr. McLANE. With the point of order now made and pending, I move that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were ayes 101, noes not counted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. MCKENZIE indefinitely, on account of illness;

To Mr. COX, of New York, for one week; and

To Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, until Tuesday next, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced as above recorded; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

The petition of Clara G. Scott was reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions under clause 2 of Rule XXII, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 9, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, dated the 6th instant, with accompanying papers from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and draft of a bill to amend section 2135 Revised Statutes. The subject is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 8, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, with a copy of a letter from the chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, and a draft of a bill, recommending an increase of five hundred enlisted men for the naval service. The matter is commended to the consideration of Congress.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 7, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of S. T. Abert, United States civil engineer, of a survey of the Potomac River, in the vicinity of Washington, District of Columbia, with reference to the improvement of navigation, the establishment of harbor lines, and the raising of the flats, made in compliance with the river and harbor act of March 3, 1881; which was referred to the Select Committee to investigate the condition of the Potomac River front of Washington, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 229 of the Revised Statutes, a statement of the expenditures of the money appropriated for the contingent expenses of the military establishment during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LAWRENCE S. BRUMIDI.

Mr. HOAR. I present the memorial of Lola V. Brumidi, who is the widow of the artist who designed the sketches for the fresco in the Rotunda. As this is a brief memorial and is an interesting one in connection with the works of art in the Capitol I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be read if there be no objection.

The Acting Secretary read the memorial, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialist respectfully represents that Constantino Brumidi, who for many years was engaged in decorating the Capitol, died testate in the city of Washington, and by his will, a copy of which is hereto annexed, gave to his son, (the son of your memorialist,) Lawrence S. Brumidi, the designs that he had long before prepared for the frieze of the Rotunda, as will more fully appear by reference to said will; that the only property of any material value owned by said Brumidi at his death consisted of these designs; that, as is well known, for some time before his death he was engaged in transferring these designs to the place in the Rotunda for which they were intended;

That since his death the United States has employed another artist to complete said work, who is now engaged in the same, and is using the very sketches made by the said Brumidi, and which he by his will as aforesaid gave to his said son;

That after the death of the said Brumidi your memorialist sent the said Lawrence S. Brumidi, who had been in the life-time of his father studying as an artist under the teaching and supervision of the latter, to the Academy of Design in Rome, at which the father was educated, where he now is, but where he cannot remain for want of pecuniary means unless he can utilize the said sketches, your memorialist being unable to furnish him the assistance necessary for his expenses.

Inasmuch as these designs were the private property of the said decedent, and by virtue of said will now belong to the said Lawrence, and inasmuch as the Government is making use of the same, your memoralist prays that the value of said sketches may be paid to the said Lawrence without unnecessary delay.

LOLA V. BRUMIDI.

Subscribed and sworn to before me the 9th day of March, 1882.

WM. T. S. CURTIS,
Notary Public.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave at this time, as it comes within the same matter and will prevent my rising again, to introduce a bill for the relief of Lawrence S. Brumidi; and I desire that the bill and memorial shall go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1426) for the relief of Laurence S. Brumidi; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it is not improper to state for the information of the committee, that I am informed on the highest authority that this youth, whose father performed so valuable a service, is in Rome absolutely without the means of continuing his education. He has made the greatest personal sacrifices, living on a few pence a day, with great economy and in poverty, out of devotion to the noble art to which he has consecrated himself. If the bill could be reported and passed at once without any delay, it would enable the young man to continue his education, and it seems to be a debt due from Congress to the father.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that I am acquainted with all the facts in this case. The accomplishments of Brumidi, I presume, are well understood and appreciated by all. For some considerable time before he died he was employed by the Government at a per diem. Whether these sketches were made during the time he was so employed I am not entirely satisfied. After his death an appropriation was made intended to reach this son, Lawrence S. Brumidi, but it was intercepted in consequence of its having been ascertained and brought to the attention of authorities here that Brumidi had a wife and family living in Rome outside of the family he had here, so that the bill we passed, I believe, has never become effectual. This young man I believe to be entirely worthy, and, so far as I am concerned, I should be very glad to do something in his behalf.

Mr. HOAR. The sketches are left by the father's will to this son specifically. I move that the bill and the accompanying memorial be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

DANIEL M'SWEENY.

Mr. FARLEY. I present a petition of citizens of San Francisco, and as it is short, I ask to have it read; and then I propose to submit a resolution in connection with the petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the petition will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the petition, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The petition of the undersigned respectfully represents to your honorable bodies that they are citizens of the United States and residents of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and fellow-citizens of Daniel McSweeny, in whose behalf this petition is presented.

That said Daniel McSweeny is a naturalized citizen of the United States, and was so naturalized in the United States district court in the city and county of San Francisco, on the 5th day of November, A. D. 1860, and was for many years, upward of twenty, a well-known resident and business man of good standing and high repute in the city and county of San Francisco, and a taxpayer therein, and an associate of the undersigned in their organization of benevolence and patriotism: "The Knights of St. Patrick of San Francisco."

That said Daniel McSweeny at all times conducted himself as a good citizen, faithful to the constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of California, and that he reared a large family in said State, some of whom are now abiding therein, and all of whom are attached to the institutions of the United States and recognize no other sovereignty.

That said Daniel McSweeny having occasion to revisit the land of his birth, and to make there a prolonged sojourn, while conducting himself with propriety and in no wise comporting himself in a manner unbecoming a citizen of the United States temporarily domiciled in a foreign country, was arrested without cause, assigned and committed to a common jail without preliminary examination or trial by court or jury, and without any knowledge of the accusation or charge, if any, upon which his incarceration was based; that he has been confined in close and unwholesome quarters already for about nine months; that when committed to custody he was in delicate health, and that a continuance of his imprisonment is liable to shorten his life; that pressing and repeated inquiry on the part of the prisoner has failed to elicit any response from the British Government as to the cause of his incarceration; that he is charged with no crime and is unconscious of the violation of any law; that he has been subjected to no judicial examination or inquiry such as is guaranteed by the municipal law of Great Britain, the common law of nations, and the treaties subsisting between Great Britain and the United States; that the whole proceeding is not only a personal outrage upon the natural rights of an individual, but a gross affront to a nation in amity with Great Britain, and a flagrant repudiation of treaty obligations, under the protection of which thousands of American citizens are constantly sojourning abroad, secure in the conviction that the United States Government will promptly intervene in the event of any infringement upon their sacred prerogatives of citizenship.

Your petitioners, therefore, in view of the premises recited, and the importance of the principle involved, respectfully and earnestly petition your honorable bodies to take such action, without delay, as will procure the liberation of the said Daniel McSweeny from his unjust and dangerous imprisonment and redress for the wrong which, as an American citizen, he has suffered at the hands of the British Government. And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Mr. FARLEY. In connection with the petition I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Whereas it is alleged that Daniel McSweeny, a citizen of the United States, and lately a resident of the State of California, while peaceably sojourning in England, has without just cause been imprisoned by the British Government:

Be it therefore resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, instructed to ascertain the cause for the alleged imprisonment of the said Daniel McSweeny, and make report to the Senate at the earliest day possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, there being no objection to its present consideration.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator desire to have made of the petition?

Mr. FARLEY. The petition, I suppose, would probably go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I move that it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying that that part of the Fort Abercrombie reservation lying on the east side of the Red River of the North in the State of Minnesota be restored to the public domain for homestead and preemption purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, in favor of the establishment of a steam fog siren at Fort Point, the entrance to the harbor of San Francisco, California; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, remonstrating against the proposed reduction of the tax on manufactured tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of appraisers of San Francisco, praying for the creation of the office of appraiser-general; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented resolutions in the nature of a memorial adopted by the citizens of Waukesha, Wisconsin, protesting against the existence of polygamy in Utah, and praying legislation for its suppression; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented a petition of citizens of Antelope County, Nebraska, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River above Omaha; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of M. L. Drake and others, late Union soldiers of Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a soldiers' home at Erie, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1415) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 195 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. The same committee, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 109) to provide for the completion of the dam at the Great Falls of the Potomac and the bill (S. No. 446) to increase the water supply of the city of Washington and an amendment offered to the latter, have directed me to report the same back with an amendment in the nature of a bill in lieu of the two bills. This bill I now present as an amendment in lieu of the two bills referred to the committee.

I also accompany the bill with a written report, and I ask that a report made by the same committee in 1879 and a recent report made by Colonel Casey upon the subject of the damages to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal be printed as an appendix to the report that I now send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. And I desire to give the Public Printer notice that I have no copy of the former report, and he must get it from this volume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so done. Shall one bill be indefinitely postponed and the other be regarded as reported with an amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. I report a new bill in lieu of both of those referred, and I desire to ask that the bill now reported be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and printed.

The bill (S. No. 1427) to increase the water supply of the city of Washington and for other purposes was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. HARRIS, recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 73) for the relief of L. Madison Day, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 596) for the relief of Edgar Huson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1434) providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1071) for the manufacture of salt in the Indian Territory, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1428) for the relief of Richard F. Barrett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CONGER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1429) granting an increase of pension to N. J. Ingersoll; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1430) for the relief of John Moore and Stephen B. King, sureties for Joseph Sawyer, deceased, formerly superintendent of life-saving district No. 10; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALDRICH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1431) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Ryan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1432) abolishing the military reservation of Fort Abercrombie, in the State of Minnesota, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have the lands embraced therein made subject to homestead and pre-emption entry and sale the same as other public lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McMILLAN. That bill is introduced to carry into effect the wishes expressed in the petition I presented this morning; and in this connection I desire also to present and have referred to the same committee a written statement of the facts upon which the bill is based and the relief asked for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands in connection with the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1433) for the relief of William M. Pleas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1435) for the relief of Albert Elsberg, administrator of Gustave Elsberg, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1436) granting a pension to Joseph Rigby; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1437) granting a pension to Amos Chapman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Marie Louise Perrin and Trantinan Perrin be brought forward from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of James H. Hamilton be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

STURGEON BAY AND LAKE MICHIGAN CANAL.

Mr. SAWYER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, instructed to ascertain and report to Congress at its next session the cost of constructing the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-Canal in the State of Wisconsin, and by whom said ship-canal was constructed; also to ascertain the amount of money realized from the sale of the lands granted by Congress to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of said ship-canal; said information being required for the purpose of considering the question of opening said ship-canal free to the commerce of the lakes.

FREE-DELIVERY OFFICES.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to communicate to the Senate at what places, if any, of less than twenty thousand inhabitants by the last census the free delivery of mail matter has been established, and when, and under what law.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, the morning hour is closed; and the first bill for consideration under the Anthony rule is the bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 5 of section 1, after the word "persons," it is proposed to insert:

Not more than three of whom shall be of the same political party.

Mr. CONGER. So far as I am concerned myself, and as advised by the friends of this measure, there is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I think another amendment, which if this bill is to be adopted had better be made, would be to insert after the words just incorporated in the bill, the words "all of whom shall not be advocates of prohibition."

Mr. HARRIS. "Not more than three of whom," I suggest to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. It has been suggested to me that it would be advisable to say "not more than three of whom shall be advocates of prohibition." Of course the intent of the amendment is very plain to the Senate. There is a very great contrariety of opinion among the best friends of the virtue and practice of temperance as to whether we shall use one or another method to promote it. Some believe that prohibitory laws are the only laws that are proper to be applied to this evil of intemperance; others again believe that other influences will work better results; and therefore if this commission is to obtain a great body of statistics almost limitless in their character and in their scope, it seems to me it should not be confided to a body of commissioners who hold but one view upon this subject, and that it would strengthen the report for any moral influence it may have if it should appear to come from men who, differing as to the methods of cure, are agreed upon the facts to which a cure should be addressed.

The Senator in charge of the bill will understand that that is my object in offering the amendment which I have proposed to modify again at the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, so that not more than three of this commission shall be advocates of prohibition as a means of curing intemperance.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I may not be quite as clear as some in my perceptions, but I supposed that was the object of the last amendment, namely, to secure two Democrats on the commission, and I think that amendment effectually secures what the Senator from Delaware desires. I cannot conceive it to be proper to trammel the President by requiring a commission of this kind to be appointed from men of particular opinions or particular views. These men are not to legislate; they are scarcely to recommend legislation; but the commission appointed here is to investigate the subject proposed in this bill. Their views of prohibition and license are inseparable parts of the whole, but not by any means the most material parts of the whole.

I should think that the bill would be better without the amendment. If this is a proper amendment to make, then the President might be required to make these appointments with a great many other limitations and restrictions. I should like to have a vote on the proposition, and therefore will not prolong the debate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I take it that this commission is to give all the information connected with the sale or use in any way of alcoholic liquors. If so, then it ought to be composed of persons looking at the question from different stand-points. They ought not certainly all to be of one way of thinking. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Delaware will prevail, because the country ought to have the whole subject before it and full information derived through parties looking at the question from different directions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say that I hope the amendment will not prevail. The law-making power of the United States ought under the Constitution, I think, to have some little confidence in the President and the Senate of the United States, who are the appointing power. It is the duty of the President, under this bill as it stood when it was introduced, to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate the five persons best adapted to promote the public interest, which includes all sides, all rights, everything that can be found. We have already put in what I dislike very much in any legislation, a provision about political parties; and now it is proposed to put in a provision regarding the views of gentlemen on the subject of the morality or immorality, the wisdom or the unwisdom of the sale of intoxicating drinks. I think that is going too far. I think we are bound to suppose that the President and the Senate will not consent to the appointment of anybody who does not justly represent the public interest to which the bill looks.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely rise to offer the amendment in such form that it may be comprehended by the Senate before they vote. My motion is to amend the bill as it now stands amended, by inserting after the last words which have just been incorporated in the bill the words "nor be advocates of prohibition." That will leave the commission to stand three to two. I do consider that upon such a matter as this there should be an agreement as to the facts, but not a forestalling of opinion as to the method of cure. That is all I meant. My motion now is that the bill be amended by inserting after the last word of the amendment already adopted the words "nor be advocates of prohibition," so that it will require a minority of anti-prohibitionists to be upon this commission.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I do not think that the Senate understands exactly the purposes for which this bill is desired. For ten years, ever since I have been in Congress, and I think the first session that I came into Congress, these petitions have been pouring in for a commission of investigation touching the alcoholic liquor traffic. As I lived in Maine, many of them were sent to me, and from that time up to the present time these petitions have been flooding Congress, and yet nothing up to now has been effected.

Now, sir, I understand the only purpose on earth is to have a report from reliable, responsible gentlemen, who will have the confidence of the country from their high character, which the people may have to refer to in all discussion in legislative bodies and elsewhere touching the alcoholic liquor traffic, as regulation, prevention, &c. Why, sir, as good friends of temperance as any prohibitionist in Maine believe that prohibition is a failure; as good temperance men as can be found in the world argue in favor of local option, and believe that to be the only true legislative course to pursue touching this traffic. Equally honest temperance men believe that license is the true policy.

I believe that prohibition is the true course. I believe that in the State of Maine it has proved itself to be so. I believe that in the whole country portion of Maine it has shown its thoroughness and efficiency. But gentlemen who believe with me in that will say, "but it fails in large cities, and you cannot enforce prohibition there, and license must be adopted." What these temperance men desire is a thorough, complete, careful examination of this whole subject in the light of experience, and then a report made of the results of that investigation to Congress, which report shall be published by Congress, and shall be authoritative for the people for reference. Why, sir, during the last two years in at least a dozen States the question has been prominent as to what shall be done to promote the cause of temperance and restrict the sale of liquor. There is no Senator who does not sympathize with every effort made for the promotion of temperance; and if restricting or prohibiting the sale of liquor will do that, there is no Senator in the United States Senate who would vote against it. The only purpose is to discover, if it can be done, what is the true course and policy to pursue.

I do not object to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. I remember that the temperance men who came here and advocated this, themselves desired and told me that they desired that there should be one manufacturer of liquor at any rate on the commission, because they wanted all views to be ascertained and to be brought forward in this report. I objected more strongly to the division between parties, because I do not believe that this is a party question. Formerly in Maine it was, but for the last five years it has not been. Very many Democrats are in favor of prohibition in Maine, and for the last five years have not in their platforms advocated license. While I would have objected to that provision, I do not object to the amendment which the Senator has proposed that these men should not be all prohibitionists. These men must have a very great interest in the subject under investigation, because they are to do this work without a dollar of pay.

I hope, Mr. President, that if that amendment is adopted the Senate will not refer this bill then to a committee, but will pass it, and let the prayer of the millions of people who for ten years have been seeking this, nearly all the churches of the country, all the temperance organizations, men and women of conscience and of heart and who have the good of the country and the good of their fellow-men at heart—let their prayer be replied to now favorably without more delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I shall vote against that amendment, but I think the President ought to put just such a person on the commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So do I.

Mr. TELLER. I vote against it because I am opposed to trammeling the President and for no other reason.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator from Delaware mean by "advocates of prohibition?" Does he mean persons entertaining a particular opinion, or persons who are advocates of that opinion in the popular sense before the public as temperance lecturers or stump-speakers?

Mr. BAYARD. It would be difficult to express the meaning more clearly and simply than I think the words proposed do. The meaning is that gentlemen who hold the views so ably and clearly stated by the Senator from Maine ought not wholly to compose this commission. The evil of intemperance all recognize; the methods of its cure men differ honestly about; and when you are laying the groundwork, not for legislation, I apprehend by Congress, for Congress has no jurisdiction over that so far as law-making is concerned, but for the purpose of obtaining statistics which shall inform the people of the country of the true facts attending this very important question in all its phases, it seems to me that the commission ought not to be composed of men disposed to deal in but one way with its cure.

I think I have accomplished that or will have accomplished it if the amendment shall be adopted. In other words, it shall not be a commission coming to the consideration of this subject solid in opinion that there is but one way to deal with it.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to enter my protest against this whole business of putting into legislation a provision that shall govern the appointing power as to the belief, whether political or other, of the persons whom he is to appoint for executive or other offices. I think the original amendment, which has been adopted, as I understand, in committee, is utterly vicious in principle. The idea that the parties in this country are divided into two hostile camps, are two rival organizations, to be recognized in legislation, among whom the offices of the country are to be dealt out, each taking its share, is a vicious idea. It tends to promote party spirit, not to suppress it.

In the last Congress, I think, we had an amendment to the law in regard to national elections, where the same matter was brought up, and I understood the Senator from Delaware to agree with me at that time in the general principle which I now state, but he said and said with great force in favor of the provision of the bill which he then advocated that it being an election law, a law to provide for elections, these men were somewhat in the nature of tellers whom fair play always required should be selected from the two parties. He made an analogy, which I thought was a very instructive and suggestive one, between the officers to be appointed under that bill and the tellers who take the vote in the House of Representatives or in other popular bodies.

And so in providing for the government of Utah there was a reason—whether a good reason or not it was a reason deserving respect and consideration—why the commissioners who were to hold an election in that Territory should be made up of persons from the different political parties whose respective numbers they would be compelled to ascertain and between whom they would be expected to hold the balance of power. It has been undertaken to extend it to the census-takers; and now it is undertaken to extend it to the appointment of a commission to gather information. We do not even put into the rules of the Senate that the committees of this body shall be divided between the political parties represented here. You leave that to the sense of fair play when the particular appointment is made of the party in the majority, and we safely leave it there. It has been safely left there, and safely left to the Speaker of the House without being made a matter of enactment.

I think this matter can be safely left to the President of the United States and the Senate. If the President of the United States should send in a board of five commissioners, made up of persons who are fanatics against prohibition, or fanatics for prohibition, or on any other ground objectionable by reason of being a compact board, the Senate would have the power of interference by rejecting the nominations.

I rose merely to express my protest against this whole business of putting into the law a provision that persons holding certain opinions shall, because of those opinions, after a certain number has been found, be disqualified from political office of any kind.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I find in this bill a clause requiring this commission to inquire and take testimony as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance. Then the commission has to make a report of its inquiries. I believe with the Senator from Delaware that as between license and prohibition as a method of curing intemperance there ought to be a fair division, because I do know some of the best temperance people in this country believe that license is a better method of preventing intemperance than absolute prohibition. If this is to be a fair commission, and one that is to have the confidence of the country in its results when they are reported to Congress, I agree that these differences of opinion ought to be represented on the commission, and I feel certain that if a commission is appointed these differences of opinion will be so represented; and, therefore, agreeing with the Senator from Delaware, I dislike very much to vote a provision into this bill which will restrain the independence of the President in making nominations. I shall go with the Senator and vote with him for a fair representation of both classes of opinion upon this commission, as I intend to vote for the bill when it comes to its final passage.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President there was something said that I did not fully catch in regard to our imposing qualifications on these officers and limiting the executive discretion as it is called. I apprehend that it is entirely competent for Congress in the creation of inferior offices by law to vest the appointment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware can only proceed by unanimous consent, he having spoken once. ["No objection!"]

Mr. BAYARD. The matter is of some importance, and if it is to be discussed in the morning hour, I do not desire to delay the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule is imperative unless it be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator can have unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope there will be no objection to the Senator proceeding. ["Consent!" "Consent!"]

Mr. BAYARD. "The Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers" as we are now considering "as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments." But quite outside of that, what has been the practice of the Congress of the United States in this respect? Over and over again they have so discriminated. The law appointing supervisors of election under the Federal election laws provides emphatically that they shall be equally divided between the two parties. We passed a law here the other day abolishing polygamy in Utah, or attempting to do it, by which we provided that the five commissioners to hold the election there should be divided between the political parties, should not be made up all of one party.

This is not, or at least it ought not to be, a matter of party politics. I profess that I do not so treat it, and shall not at any time so regard it. I did not like the amendment adopted by the Senate in regard to giving the names of political parties to members of this commission; but I do say, what perhaps has been better said by my friend from Iowa, that where you are to deal with so grave a question as this and you desire a report, it necessarily should be not simply a report of facts but a report of opinions based upon facts; and if you wish to make that report of influence upon the public mind you must allow variant opinions to have an opportunity for expression.

There is nothing, therefore, invasive of the Presidential prerogative or privilege of nomination forbidden either by the Constitution or by the custom and practice of legislation in Congress. I think it eminently proper for the reasons stated by my friend from Iowa that this commission should not be composed of five prohibitionists.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the bill on its face shows that its object is "to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime," &c. Now, as to the method of appointing the commissioners, the bill declares that they shall be appointed "solely with reference to personal fitness and capacity for an honest, impartial, and thorough investigation." If that is carried out according to the terms of the bill, there can be no question but that great good will result from this investigation. Now, I believe myself that a commission fairly formed without the slightest reference to politics—I cannot see what politics has to do with this matter—without the slightest reference to the views of a man on this question, that, or the other, but to secure the information which is herein called for, in order that we may see and judge for ourselves, and that the people of the country may judge as to the moral, social, political, and economic evils flowing from the alcoholic liquor traffic, will be of great benefit to the country.

Now, as a matter of propriety it seems to me that the President ought to appoint men of different political parties; and for the purpose of eliciting all the information which is sought by this bill it would be best to appoint men who are not of the same faith in respect to the effects of the alcoholic liquor traffic. Thus we shall get all the light we can; thus there can be no advantage taken on the one side or the other on this great question. Believing as I do that the alcoholic liquor traffic is one of the greatest curses this country has ever had inflicted upon it, I am perfectly willing that both sides of the question shall be represented, those who are in favor of prohibition and those who are not in favor of it, so that when the report comes in no one can say that it is a partial report, but it is a report presenting all the different phases and views that men have in respect to this great question. Hence I am not at all opposed to having the commission composed of men representing different views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) Mr. President, as I stated yesterday, I am paired on all party questions with your colleague, the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] and yesterday I declined to vote; but to-day I am assured by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] that the pair will not extend to this question. Therefore, I vote "yea."

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] I do not know how he would vote on this question, but I would vote "nay" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. MAXEY. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] on political questions. He is detained from the Senate on business of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he is away from the Capitol at the Soldiers' Home. I announce that fact. I do not regard this as a political question, and therefore have voted.

Mr. CONGER. I announce now for the day that my colleague [Mr. FERRY] is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bayard,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hale,	Morgan,
Beck,	Fair,	Harris,	Pugh,
Blair,	Farley,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Brown,	Frye,	Jonas,	Slater
Call,	Garland,	Lapham,	Vance,
Cameron of Wis.,	George,	McDill,	Van Wyck,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vest,
Coke,	Groome,	Mitchell,	Walker.

NAYS—16.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Allison,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hoar,	Platt,	Sherman,
Davis of Illinois,	Ingalls,	Plumb,	Teller.

ABSENT—28.

Anthony,	Hampton,	Lamar,	Pendleton,
Butler,	Harrison,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Dawes,	Johnston,	Mahone,	Voorhees,
Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams,
Grover,	Jones of Nevada,	Miller of N. Y.,	Windom.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. It being the object of the friends of this bill that all classes of sentiment on this subject shall be represented on the commission, it of course will be the inevitable result that a contrariety of opinion will be expressed in the reports. That is to be anticipated. There will be the friends of prohibition represented, the friends of license laws, and the friends of no law, undoubtedly, and the views of all will be likely to be represented fully in the several reports that will come to Congress. Now the bill provides for the taking of testimony. It does not provide for its publication, but only for the publication of the results of their investigations; and as there will be no means of coming to a conclusion from the reports alone, I think we ought to have the testimony itself reported in full. I therefore move to insert after the word "investigation" in the ninth line of the second section the words "with the testimony taken;" so as to read:

It shall be the further duty of said commissioners to report the result of their investigation, with the testimony taken.

Mr. CONGER. I do not see any objection to the amendment.

Several SENATORS. It is not necessary.

Mr. BLAIR. I examined the language with some care before I moved the amendment. The bill as it stands does not cover this point.

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to discuss this question, and shall content myself with simply voting against the bill. I think the Senate of the United States would occupy its time a great deal better if it would attend to such measures as by the Constitution of the United States are committed to its care and look into questions relating to taxation and to other matters that legitimately come before it. I am unable to see, and I have not been able to comprehend from anything I have heard, what jurisdiction the Congress of the United States has over the morals of the people. Is it to be assumed that this is to become now a parental Government to regulate all the people's doings, to pass sumptuary laws, to take away the power of the States over the regulation of their own police or crimes or offenses committed against them. If that is to be the mission that Congress is to enter upon by these roving commissions, taking testimony and printing whatever any set of gentlemen may give as their own views, and asking Congress to act upon them, I for one shall oppose it as a thing beyond our jurisdiction and with which we have nothing to do. If it is to bring the people up to a certain sentiment, Congress is not the great educator of the people. Getting testimony together and printing it is an easy way of spending and getting rid of some of the money collected by taxation. I shall vote against this bill, believing that it is a thing with which Congress has nothing to do.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I have no doubt of the constitutional power of Congress to pass this legislation. The Government derives a vast revenue from taxation of spirituous liquors, and it is a proper subject of inquiry whether the advantages derived from that impost are not counterbalanced by corresponding losses to society in consequence of evils produced by the intemperate use of alcoholic liquors. I believe the bill has been amended by providing that this commission shall not consist solely of members of one political party nor of one sentiment upon the subject of temperance. I regard this as entirely unnecessary and illogical. To carry out that idea to its proper sequence, the bill ought to provide that one member of this commission should be an habitual drunkard in order that all views upon this question might be fairly understood by the country at large. Something ought to be conceded to the President and the Senate. When these names are sent in, if it appears that they are unfit for the functions which they are to be called upon to discharge, I assume that the Senate, if it is in favor of a fair investigation, would reject them. As was once said by the court to a lawyer who was quoting fundamental principles, it may safely be assumed that the court knows something; and it may be safely assumed in this matter that the Senate, if in earnest, would take the necessary steps to have these commissioners such as would carry out the provisions of the law and the wishes of Congress.

But there is one other matter. These amendments having been adopted, the clause commencing with the words "who shall" in the fifth line, and ending with "investigation" in line 7 of section 1, is unnecessary and superfluous, as well as incongruous; because that paragraph declares that these persons "shall be selected solely with reference to personal fitness and capacity for an honest, impartial, and thorough investigation."

Aside from the fact that they must be selected either for their personal fitness or for their personal unfitness, and the assumption that I should make that the President would nominate and the Senate would confirm those men who were personally fit, the amendments adopted have included other qualifications; that is to say, they are to be selected not only with reference to their personal fitness, but with reference to their party affiliations and their views upon the subject of temperance.

I therefore move, to make the bill harmonize, that that clause be stricken out commencing with the words "who shall," in line 5, and closing with the word "and" after "investigation," in line 7 of section 1.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appeal to the Senator not to make that motion until the bill comes into the Senate and we take a vote upon the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, and if they are retained, then the motion of the Senator from Kansas will be correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR.]

Mr. INGALLS. I thought it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; the Chair has not yet put the question.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas move an amendment?

Mr. INGALLS. I accede to the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, to withhold my amendment until later.

Mr. MORGAN. I move, in line 13 of section 1, to strike out the words "and take testimony." The power to take testimony, as the Senator from Vermont suggests, would not follow without a special provision, but it is an impossibility in a matter of this kind to take testimony which would be of any value to the Senate. Where would they commence? Whom would they examine as to the evil influences of intemperance or of the sale of intoxicating liquors by license or otherwise? Whom would they not examine? Out of the fifty million people of the United States there are probably ten million experts on the liquor question. The committee could gain no information that would inform any man's judgment by the taking of testimony, by the examination of witnesses. Therefore the money would be unnecessarily expended. Every inquiry that it is necessary for us to make can be made without putting witnesses under oath and examining them in that way, and having them testify from their information or their experience or their observation upon this topic. Inasmuch as the Senate has determined not to print the testimony when it comes in, I think it is entirely unnecessary that the commission shall be required to take testimony under oath. The whole purpose of the inquiry can be reached just as well without swearing witnesses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. In lines 10, 11, 12, and 13 of section 1, it is declared to be the duty of this commission "to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people."

If anybody can tell me what the scientific aspects of the alcoholic liquor traffic in connection with social vice are, I should be glad to be informed. The scientific aspects of the alcoholic liquor traffic in connection with social vice! I supposed the object of this inquiry is to ascertain the relations of the alcoholic liquor traffic to revenue, taxation, and society, which will embrace all these subordinate questions that are attempted to be comprehended in this subsequent definition. I am sincerely desirous that a proper bill shall pass; I believe in the authority of Congress to enact it and in the propriety of its passage; and I should like to see one adopted that will be comprehensive and sensible in its terms. If it would suit the special friends of the bill, I should like to see this language stricken out that I have read which appears to me to be really without definite meaning, and the words "and society" after "revenue and taxation" substituted, leaving out the remainder down to and including the word "people" in line 13. I move that as an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. If it be the object of gentlemen to take from this bill piece by piece and add to it piece by piece sufficient to make it inoperative and useless, it might as well be defeated altogether. The Senator says he cannot see himself the scientific aspect of the alcoholic liquor traffic in connection with social vice, but he moves that it be examined in relation to its aspects to society. I ask the Senator why in the economic, criminal, and moral aspects there might not be inquiry in regard to social vice? If there are no "scientific aspects" in that, are there not "criminal and moral aspects?"

I hope the gentlemen who are in favor of this bill will not take away all the directory clauses of the bill as to the subject of the examination. I think such an amendment as this would take away from the consideration of the commission particular points and subjects which the friends of this bill desire to have examined. The "moral aspects" in relation to any of these subjects is embraced in this, "the criminal and economic" as well as the "scientific." I think if the Senator reads that clause he will see that it embraces the whole, and is a proper direction to the commission to make the inquiries desired by the friends of this measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one o'clock has arrived, and the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. CONGER. I again ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceeed with the consideration of the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to consider the bill until disposed of? ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. CONGER. A vote can be reached in a short time to-day, I am sure.

Mr. FARLEY. I insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will come up again to-morrow when the Calendar is reached under the Anthony rule.

PENSION OFFICE ACCOMMODATIONS.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to give notice that immediately after the Chinese immigration bill has been disposed of, or after the morning hour to-morrow morning, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1361) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rent for a term of years the building at the southwest corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Thirteenth street, northwest, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia. I will agree not to inflict a speech upon the Senate if they will allow five minutes for the consideration of the bill. It is a bill to provide additional accommodation for the Pension Office. I will compromise with the Senate to the extent I have stated.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. FARLEY to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 16. That hereafter no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship; and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, when I rose last night it was with the purpose of speaking but a very few moments upon the points specially before us. I confess I regret now that I did not sooner entertain a purpose to speak upon the bill, that I might put in good shape my serious objections to its general character. But I shall not detain the Senate long, for I know that members are anxious to dispose of the question, and yet it is one of such importance that I feel that I am not at all guilty of any serious wrong in insisting upon deliberate consideration.

I admit the doctrine that has been set forth here, that a nation is in some sense a family, and that there is a right and duty of national self-protection. I think we all assert that; nobody denies it. No dispute arises upon such a proposition until we come to the extent of that principle and the details of propositions.

A nation has a right to exclude paupers sent in upon it. That is not a voluntary immigration; it is an injurious one. It has a right, of course, to exclude insane and idiotic persons for the same reason. It has a right to exclude criminals, for they are sent here to our injury, and in order to relieve other nations from their own just burdens.

If the British Government, instead of resolutely setting about the suppression of thugism, had offered a free passage to thugs to come here and settle with us, with their religion teaching the duty of murder, of course we should have had a right to forbid that kind of immigration, and we should have been quite justified in taking it as offensive action on the part of Great Britain. So in a state of war or prospect of war—that justifies the exercise of extraordinary powers; inter arma silent leges. Laws national or international are set aside if we can defend ourselves, and any class of people may be excluded or any foreigners may be ordered to depart, the measure of the exercise of the power being only the degree of the necessity of self-protection.

But we are legislating for times of peace. We are legislating professedly upon the general and not the exceptional principles that are to be justified by our Constitution, by the spirit of our laws, the national spirit, character, and policy that we have freely and boastfully set forth to the whole world for a century; which have elicited the admiration and the pride of all generous souls; which are bringing to our shores this very year nearly a million of people; and which are very sensibly modifying the political aspirations and possibilities of all Europe. In this matter we are to make a change.

A few words in this proposed law may be quoted for a century, not as the opening lines of the Declaration of Independence are quoted, as a comfort, a prophecy, a battle-cry, but on the same page with the edict of Nantes, the innumerable decrees tormenting and banishing and excluding the Jews, the belated hobgoblin idiocies that are now torturing that race in some parts of Europe, the barbarisms that were once heaped upon the barbarous negro, and more appropriately still with the laws of Japan and of this same China, which treated all of us, gentle and lovely bearers of rum, opium, and Testaments, as "outside barbarians." Or it may be that this bill will be quoted with the alien and sedition law, the repeal of the Missouri compromise, and the fugitive-slave law, as an illustration of the truth that fifty million sovereigns can be as despotic as one sovereign.

If a great emergency has really arrived, if the coming of millions of Chinamen is so imminent that we must put up our Chinese wall, let us try and make the law at least speak plausibly. Let us say:

First. The Chinese do not come here to swear allegiance to this nation;

Second. They do not come desiring to learn our language;

Third. They do not come desiring to learn and understand our Constitution and laws;

Fourth. They do not come here with a desire to bear a share of our taxation and general burdens;

Fifth. They do not come here to perform military duty;

Sixth. They do not bring their wives and children, and do not send for them, nor expect to send for them;

Seventh. They bring the traits of a people submissive to despotism and alien to us in religion, traditions, and beliefs;

Eighth. They come to establish a peasantry, a cheerfully-enlisted, self-compelled, and contented peasantry among us, when we want no peasants and despise the man who is willing to be a peasant.

Recite this: I have given some reasons for excluding classes of people, not because of their particular color or particular birthplace, but because of certain characteristics that unfit them to make good American citizens, unfit them to blend with us. There would be something of specifical defense to your law in the preamble of it if you would say that.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Do you want to put that in?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not making the bill. If the Senator will put it in I think he will help his bill. Say that a rush of millions of such people, if you can make people believe that millions are coming, would seriously injure the great Republic and the cause of good government the world over.

I admit that to say this would be to admit also that if the Chinaman would come here, to throw off all allegiance to China and swear allegiance to the United States, to make this his home and to bring his family, desiring to learn our laws and share our duties, he might very well come as others do, and I would say that. I would say that also in the preamble if necessary. But we have no such bill before us. The preamble aims only at a laborer, a laborer of a particular race. It does not charge him with any unlawful purpose. It does not describe any dangerous tendency in him whatever. It is not alleged in the bill that he comes with a bad purpose, or is likely to exert any bad influence here. This is all there is of the preamble:

Whereas in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers—

They might be doves, for all the proposed law says. They might be the messengers of peace; the messengers of a new gospel better than ours. They had something like the golden rule long before our Christian peoples knew anything of it, or before there were Christian peoples. These men, I say, might be bringing a new gospel here.

Whereas in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers the good order of certain localities within the territory thereof.

That is the whole preamble. It is not pretended therein that they could exercise a bad influence over the whole country, to poison our people against our institutions and beliefs, to damage us politically, socially, or commercially, as a nation at all, but that their coming endangers the good order of certain localities. What is the obvious implication? That if the Chinaman comes our citizens may insult him, that they may raise tumults, trample upon law, that perhaps they may kill him, or perhaps they may forcibly expel him, or they may so hedge him about with fear that he would rush down in despair to the sea-coast and beg to be transported home. That is the implication of the preamble. His coming here is going to make us so angry, so fierce that we will rise up in rebellion and trample upon our own laws and wrong this man who is not charged with any dangerous purpose whatever.

I do not enter upon the argument at length that this proposed law is in violation of the treaty just made, and yet I consider it to be so. My colleague [Mr. PLATT] has done ample justice to that subject; but at this moment, glancing over the papers in the case, I come across a significant paragraph that I have not heard quoted in the debate. Perhaps it was. If it will not trouble the Senate I will read briefly two paragraphs, one from the communication from our commissioners, Messrs. Angell and others, announcing their successful negotiation of the treaty, and the other from the proclamation of Mr. Evarts announcing the treaty. The commissioners said:

After our first interview with the Chinese commissioners—

I should like attention to this, if it has not been before read—

After our first interview with the Chinese commissioners we thought it clear that while the Chinese Government would recognize the propriety of some regulating discretion as to Chinese immigration on the part of the Government of the United States, it would not consent to its formal prohibition and the absolute abrogation of the provisions of the Burlingame treaty relating to the free intercourse between the people of the two countries. We did not think that the public opinion of the United States would require so extreme a demand, and we considered our instructions as warning us not to disregard the traditional policy of the United States, and in your own words—

This is addressed to the Secretary of State—

to give due weight to "the widely diffused, and, so to speak, natural sentiment of our people in favor of the most liberal admission of foreign immigrants who desire to incorporate themselves and their families with our society, and mingle the stream of their posterity in the swelling tide of native population."

So the commissioners went there to China disavowing a desire to prohibit, because it would not be in accord with our "traditional policy." When Mr Evarts came to announce the treaty he said:

The treaty submitted settles the questions raised between the two countries in a manner alike honorable and satisfactory to both. While preserving to the subjects of China engaged in mercantile pursuits, in study, in teaching, or in travel for curiosity, the right of free intercourse with this country, the Chinese Government has recognized in the Government of the United States the right to regulate, limit, and suspend the introduction into its territory of Chinese labor whenever, in its discretion, such introduction shall threaten the good order of any locality or endanger any interests of society.

It is not put into the preamble here, as it might have been from the treaty, that their coming here would endanger, would affect injuriously the interests of society. The treaty says, anything that would "affect the interests of society," being an obvious inelegance, when the writers intended to say, "affect injuriously," &c., but even that is not inserted in the preamble.

This pamphlet shows also how carefully the Chinese desired to guard against an absolute prohibition, how cautious they were that a suspension should be only suspension. These official papers of the commissioners to the Secretary of State show that nothing in the nature of prohibition was intended. But suspension for twenty years is prohibition, and is intended as such.

The bill before us is very clearly a harsh and an extravagant interpretation of that treaty, just what the Chinese commissioners feared might be made, and what our commissioners assured them that our just and magnanimous and generous nation ought to be trusted not to do.

The civilized world jeered at China and Japan while they applied this identical policy to all the world outside their borders, and the civilized world gradually grew ready to bombard both China and Japan into international comity and good fellowship. The United States was proud that one of our citizens, a gallant and eloquent citizen of Massachusetts, became the agent and ambassador in unlocking her doors and shaking hands with the rest of mankind. In the supplementary treaty of July 28, 1868, it was William H. Seward, speaking for the United States, and Anson A. Burlingame, speaking for China, who said:

ARTICLE V.

The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects, respectively, from the one country to the other, for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents.

* * * * * * *

ARTICLE VI.

Citizens of the United States visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, or exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. And, reciprocally, Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States, shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation.

To gain these things the civilized world bombarded China, and they granted them; and the civilized world, this part of it, appears to be sick of its bargain.

Singularly enough, I accidentally discovered this morning that the 28th of July, 1868, was the very day on which the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution was declared adopted, which for the first time really made every one born in the United States or naturalized therein a citizen not only of his State but of the United States. It was after that indeed that we ourselves by the fifteenth amendment, adopted March 30, 1870, declared that no person should be forbidden to vote by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Our zealous and radical republicanism is fading. Our apostleship of a generous humanity is to be abdicated. It was before the war that a Massachusetts man declared the Declaration "glittering generalities." He died, sir. I do not remember when he was buried; he died the day he said that.

It is seventeen years after a great war for union and liberty and the freeing of four million slaves, fourteen years after the assertion of national citizenship, and some twelve years after a declaration that no man shall be forbidden to vote by reason of race, color, &c., that we are asked to deny to the Chinaman the right he was bombarded into accepting; and upon that solemn act of legislation we put only the words I have read, saying that his coming as a laborer is dangerous to good order here.

It has been asserted that we have the right to exclude any man for any length of time, or all men for all time, according to our own judgment. It has been said that the right to fix the limit of naturalization at all gives the right to fix it at a thousand years; virtually the right to regulate is the right to forbid all immigration and all entering upon citizenship. Perhaps so; perhaps not. Perhaps we are confounding right and power. We have in one sense a right to do all that we can defend under arms. We have a right, in a certain shallow, technical sense of the word, to do a great many foolish things and a great many wrong things. Mr. RANDOLPH TUCKER, of the House, in the last Congress felicitously put what I think is the correct doctrine in the form of an algebraic equation: "Right equals power and duty." We carelessly assert a right to do wrong things. I deny that we have a right because we limit voting to those who attain twenty-one years to make it sixty-three years, or to make it ninety years.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I should like to ask the Senator if one factor in the equation, "duty," is not an unknown quantity?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, it is. That depends upon our judgment and conscience, for which we are responsible to the world and to posterity and to God, but the equation remains true nevertheless.

I deny, because we can fix the limit at twenty-one years, that it is or may be or can be our duty to fix it at a hundred. I deny that duty can ever come in to fix it at one hundred years, because we have a right to fix it. I say it is not true, as has been asserted here, that the right to limit the citizenship of a foreigner to five years implies the right to make it one hundred years or five hundred years. There is no such right, because while there is the power, the other element of the equation, duty, is lacking there; and on that I appeal to the judgment of the country, the judgment of all honorable and fair-minded men everywhere. So that it is not fair to say that having the right to limit we have the right absolutely to prohibit. We have a right to say that the ordinary statute of limitations shall apply after six years. I deny the right to say that it shall apply after six hours. Duty comes in there to forbid; the equation is not balanced.

This bill is a part of a certain reactionary policy. Make your conditions what you please for immigration and for attaining citizenship, but make them such that the man can overcome them. Do not base them upon the accidents of humanity. If you say that a man shall not come in or shall not become a citizen until he can read and write our language, until he can pass an examination upon the Constitution, or until he shall have accumulated a thousand dollars, or any one of many qualifications and limitations that easily suggest themselves, you still leave it open to any man in the world to overcome this and come in, but if you say he shall not have this, that, or the other right because he his yellow, or because he is black, or because he was born in a certain place, I hold that it is a departure from the republican doctrine. I hold it to be the sound doctrine of a republican government that you have no right to base your limitations upon the mere accidents of humanity.

If we are to take a step backward in this thing, I beg you to be patient. I do not think it is necessary to fear that before we pass the bill another ship may come in with two or three hundred more Chinamen, or to fear that another indignation meeting may be held. I beg gentlemen to be a little patient with us. If it is only an apparent step backward, but really a needed advance of freedom and free government, strip from the bill something of its harshness and savagery. Give it a plausible preamble at least, if truth will permit it. It is a painful question, sufficiently troublesome to Christianity and to statesmanship, but such a bill as this, in my judgment, is not indispensable to the Republic. If our traditional policy referred to by our commissioners to China, if our gospel of the Declaration of Independence and all our professions and regard for humanity despite its accidents are to be set aside, are to be departed from in a bill that I for one shall dare to be ashamed of, be a little patient with those of us who are old-fashioned.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Mr. President, such has been the advance of public sentiment on this question in the last ten years, since the people of the Pacific coast, with scarcely a following in any portion of the country, first presented it as a national issue, that I have in this debate been content up to this time to remain silent and hear those defend our position in this body who a few years ago were against us. In an elaborate way some three years ago, when a bill similar to the present was under discussion here, I presented my views in favor of it. That bill was passed by Congress, but was vetoed by the Executive because it was obnoxious to some of the terms of a treaty existing at that time. Happily a new treaty has since been made, the terms of which are not in conflict with the provisions of the bill under discussion.

I have been waiting up to this hour in the discussion to hear some good reason why this bill should not be passed. I listened with great pleasure to the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] and was quite bewildered with the statement made by him that there existed a right, a great organic and fundamental right, entitling individuals of every other nationality to come to this country at will, and that we had no right to prevent them. He stated this proposition as confidently as though its correctness were universally recognized.

Mr. President, what nation has ever admitted that right? What nation on the face of the earth has ever ceased to claim the right to decide who shall form the body of its citizenship, who shall be admitted into its society, who shall come within its jurisdiction? I have looked in vain to find a single nation that has acted thus. It might be thought that some eminent writer on moral, political, or international law had stated in clear terms some proposition resembling that which the honorable Senator has here put forth. But I have been unable to find a single writer who has made any such assertion in any work which would be regarded as a standard authority. Yet the statement is as confidently made as if it were axiomatic.

The Senator from Massachusetts informs us that the Declaration of Independence, made by the most religious men of the most religious period in our history, asserts this doctrine, in face of the fact that there were at least six hundred thousand of the human race in slavery in this country when the signers of that document declared that all men were created equal and had certain inalienable rights, among which were life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The charge of untruthfulness and cowardice would lie against them if, having intended to include the slaves in the category of "all men," they made no special protest against slavery as it then existed in this country, nor any recommendation that the slaves should be set free.

It might be answered to this that it would have been injurious to the slave and unjust to the master to do so. But the framers of the Constitution, many of whom signed the Declaration of Independence, not only did not free the slaves then in the country, but they extended the time for twenty years when negroes might be brought into our ports and consigned to slavery. Yet the Senator tells us that the authors of the Declaration of Independence intended to say that all men of all races were equal, and that they were entitled to come to this country at their own pleasure, and that this nation had no right whatever to prevent them.

Therefore I think the Senator from Massachusetts fails to sustain his case in citing from the Declaration of Independence the proposition that all men are created equal and are entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. They are entitled to liberty, but under what condition? Is it the liberty to live where they are, to enjoy the proceeds of their own labor, to have the care of their own families? What is this liberty? The Declaration of Independence does not define it.

Then the Senator, speaking one hundred years after the Declaration of Independence, informs us what the signers of that document meant to assert. But let us see the opinion of one of the most distinguished names to that declaration; a man who is regarded in New England as the wisest man of all his day and generation; a man who perhaps was better known in both hemispheres than any other man connected with Revolutionary times; a man of whom the elder Pitt said, before the American Revolution, that he was "an honor not only to England but to human nature," and of whom Mirabeau said, in announcing his death to the French Assembly, that he was "the genius which freed America and has shed a flood of light over Europe." When writing generally on political economy and upon the rights of a nation to decide who shall come within its borders and what their general legislation should be, he said:

> There is, in short, no bound to the prolific nature of plants or animals but what is made by their crowding and interfering with each other's means of subsistence. Was the face of the earth vacant of other plants, it might be gradually sowed and overspread with one kind only, as, for instance, with fennel; and, were it empty of other inhabitants, it might in a few ages be replenished from one nation only, as, for instance, with Englishmen. Thus there are supposed to be now upward of one million English souls in North America, (though it is thought scarce eighty thousand have been brought over sea.)
> The number of purely white people in the world is proportionately very small. All Africa is black or tawny; Asia, chiefly tawny; America, (exclusive of the newcomers,) wholly so.
> While we are, as I may call it, scouring our planet by clearing America of woods, and so making this side of our globe reflect a brighter light to the eyes of inhabitants in Mars or Venus, why should we, in the sight of superior beings, darken its people? Why increase the sons of Africa by planting them in America, where we have so fair an opportunity, by excluding all blacks and tawnies, of increasing the lovely white and red?

These are the sentiments of Benjamin Franklin, as he himself declared them. Here he not only asserts the right but the duty of excluding the tawny and the black races, in order that our own race may be kept intact and uncontaminated, and that our own civilization may be preserved in its integrity.

I for one cannot conceive that a nation has not the right to exclude from its shores whatever the mass of its people shall believe injurious to its welfare. Whenever it abdicates this, it abdicates the very highest function of government and betrays the most essential duties for which organized societies are called into existence. Whenever this country believes that the incoming of a race or any portion of a race is inimical to the best interests of our people, then the time has come and the power is inherent to remedy the threatened evil.

The Senator, to sustain his position, next quotes from the Holy Scriptures the passage that God made of one blood all the nations of the earth; and the Senator maintains that all men of every race have the right to come and go and intermingle without let or hinderance. Now, that is the only text to be found in the Scriptures that has any reference to anthropology or ethnology, and I think that the Senator's support for his doctrine of ethnology is as faulty as his logic. Unfortunately for him the original Greek Testament contains no word corresponding to the word "blood" in the authorized version. The Catholic Church from the time of St. Jerome never used this word, and it does not occur in the revised edition recently published. The language there used is that God "made of one every nation of men," not of "one blood," but of one form perhaps; so that there is no warrant for the use of the word "blood" upon which this whole ethnological controversy is made to turn.

I have no time nor inclination to discuss the proposition laid down by the Senator [Mr. HAWLEY] who last spoke, and by other Senators, concerning the duties of nations and individuals as contradistinguished from the rights as limited by their powers. The rights we have practically to deal with are those defined and secured by law in different countries. Theoretical writers find in an imaginary state of nature the source of political and social rights. But man has never been found except as connected with some tribe or nation, and his rights as affected by that connection are the only ones he really possesses. They are controlled by the power of which law is the expression, and to attempt to describe any other species of right is to become hopelessly involved in an abstract and useless discussion. We have to apply at last the principle of power as formulated in the law of each country, and the law so framed is the only right we can have so long as it remains unchanged.

Who can doubt that the European nations had a right to drive the Indians back and take possession of the soil? The Catholic powers of Europe believed that the Pope, disregarding all rights on the part of the Indians, had a right to distribute this vast territory as he saw proper. In this country we have great Indian reservations of seventy, eighty, and one hundred miles square, reservations which we have set apart for the use and occupancy of the Indians. In most of these reservations the white men of this country have no right to set a foot. Now, if there be a great, inherent, fundamental right that the people of all foreign countries may come here at will, and that we have no right to stop them, how is it that we can prevent our own people from entering upon an Indian reservation? Simply on the principle that it is better for the Indian and better for the whites that we should do so. In dealing with foreign immigration the only question we have to consider is what is best for our own race. The earth, from time immemorial, has been occupied by various nations, and these nations in dealing with each other have been compelled to treat their respective governments, advanced or backward as they might be, as each supreme in the management of their internal affairs, and each entitled to take care of their own people in their own way. Every writer on international law agrees that no nation can afford to indulge in the instincts of benevolence; that its entire legislation must be based upon the good that may come to its own people.

Now, to turn to another branch of this discussion. The general question is asked, "Is this superior race of ours afraid of the competition with this inferior Chinese race?"

What are the real facts of the case, and why do our people fear Chinese immigration? I can best illustrate the subject in the concrete. I recollect one time in Virginia City, Nevada, that a miner who was working a thousand feet underground in the mines came to me and said:

> You do not fully understand this Chinese immigration and the effect it has upon us; you do not thoroughly comprehend what it means when applied to us. You feel perfectly secure in your position as the superintendent of a large number of men; and it is immaterial to you, as far as your own position is concerned, who the workmen may be that are under your control; but to us it makes a vast difference. I work a thousand feet underground. I go every morning and take my lantern a thousand feet from the cheery light of day, and work hard all day for $4. On that hillside there is a little cottage in which my wife and four children live. The forces of our civilization have, in the struggle for an adequate remuneration to labor, given me enough to support that wife and those children in the decency and comfort in which you see them now. I have separate rooms in which the children may sleep; my wife must be clothed so that she does not feel ashamed in mixing with her neighbors; the children must be clothed as befits decency and order and the grade of civilization in which we live, and we must have a variety of food to which we have been accustomed and a taste for which we have inherited from our ancestors. The Chinaman can do as much work underground as I can. While my work is very arduous I go to it with a light heart and perform it cheerfully because it enables me to support my wife and my children. I am in hopes to bring up my daughters to be good wives and faithful mothers, and to offer my sons better opportunities in life than I had myself. I cheerfully contribute to the support of schools, churches, charitable institutions, and other objects that enter into our daily life, but after I have maintained my family and performed these duties not much is left of my wages when the week is ended.
> How is it with the Chinaman? He has no wife and family. He performs none of these duties. Forty or fifty of his kind can live in a house no larger than mine. He craves no variety of food. He has inherited no taste for comfort or for social enjoyment. Conditions that satisfy him and make him contented would make my life not worth living.
>
> Does it surprise you that under these conditions I shall be driven out of employment by the Chinaman? And when that happens what shall I do, and where shall I go? Philanthropists complacently advise us to seek some other field of labor; and suppose I do this, will the Chinese be less able to drive me out of that new field than he has been to drive me out of this? And, besides that, how can I go? Suppose I give up my home here, how shall I meet the expenses of moving and securing a new shelter for my family? Why, the philanthropists might as well advise me to start a banking-house or a wholesale dry-goods store. Like little Joe, in Bleak House, the Chinaman is the policeman that chivies me and makes me move on, because he is able and willing to do as much work as I can for the smallest amount that will support animal life. I am as hardy as any of my fellows, and the same conditions that drive me out of employment will drive every other man in my situation out of employment.
> You have got some thousands of workmen here in exactly the same position I am. When these are driven out, what will be the situation? You have a society now that is governed by patriotic instincts; a society that maintains civil government; maintains schools and churches and all the institutions of civilization; all around you are the houses of American workmen whom you know, whose language you understand, whose traditions, hopes, and fears are common to our race, whose gods are your gods, and whose affections are your affections. What will you have in their place? Instead of them you will have Chinese hovels, Chinese huts everywhere, and instead of an American civilization you will have got a Chinese civilization, with all its degrading accessories, precisely as you might find it in China. Around you would be a population of Chinese, with Chinese tastes, Chinese language, and Chinese customs.
> By the genius of our people and by the aid of the machinery which we have invented it has been made possible for the American workman to have a certain share of the products of industry which is much larger than in any other country. Without contributing anything toward this the Chinaman comes in, taking advantage of our skill and of our toil and of our struggles, and drives us from the fields of industry which we have created and which our race alone could create.

Mr. President, that is exactly what has happened in San Francisco. One after another the whites have been driven out of employment by the Chinese in various branches of industry. It is no answer to say that the average rate of wages in San Francisco is up to or above the rate of wages in the Eastern States. The American workman has found out that no matter what rate he proposes to work for, the Chinaman will put his rate just enough below to secure the employment. He is too good a trader to put it any lower than is necessary to drive out his American competitor.

The main objection to the incoming of the Chinese cannot be brought against Europeans of our own race and nearly related to us. They soon assimilate with us, they are bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, and have hopes, fears, and traditions identical with our own. They readily adopt our manners, customs, and language, and soon become an undistinguishable part of our body-politic.

And, sir, it must be remembered in this connection that it was not we alone who achieved independence. The principles which nerved those who fought for liberty in this country were principles that had been fought for long before the Declaration of Independence. Not all the lovers of liberty came over in the Mayflower. The people in every country in Europe have struggled for liberty on every battle-field from Marston Moor to Magenta. They have our instincts; they have our tastes. Their God is our God. They are inherently lovers of liberty. They have been struggling for it throughout the centuries, and it was the public opinion there, the great mass of the people sympathizing with us, that helped us in a large measure to achieve the liberty we now enjoy.

When and where did the Chinese race ever make a single declaration for liberty? When and where did they strike one single blow for freedom or free institutions? Why, sir, races are not instructed in self-government in an hour, nor in a single generation, nor in a single century. The capacity for self-government is the result of the teaching of generations, and the United States is the last and best fruit of a struggle that has been waged by the Caucasian race for thirty centuries in favor of freedom, in which the Chinese have borne no part. Every fiber in their heart, every corpuscle in their blood has been molded in the spirit of despotism under which they have lived uncomplainingly.

According to the latest estimates there are 450,000,000 of that race, trained like athletes against poverty, living in the very face of starvation, and consequently living on the very edges and in the very conditions of crime. I state it as a philosophic fact that whoever lives the best is the most civilized and the most moral, and whenever you approach the place where a struggle is made against starvation, there you approach the conditions where crime is most prevalent.

The Chinese people have lived in this condition, which conduces to crime, for almost unnumbered centuries. History, written and monumental, shows that the Chinese Empire substantially as it exists to-day antedates the pyramids, antedates the law written on the tablets of stone. And these are the people that the Senator from Massachusetts in a single generation is going to make good citizens! These people, indurated and buried under fifty centuries of stagnation, petrified in oppressive forms and oppressive systems, are to be made good citizens of the United States in one single generation! To demonstrate this, he takes some one of the meek-eyed Chinamen who are studying in Massachusetts and tells us how intelligent and lovable he was. Everybody understands that, to deal philosophically with race distinction, the exception must be excluded. You cannot take some exceptional individual and judge of his whole race by him. You must take into consideration the history and characteristics of a whole race if you hope to deal intelligently with its possibilities.

What, then, I ask has been the contribution from China? Oppression, barbarism, degradation. A civilization purely material, nothing spiritual about it; everything commutable in money; no injury that a man can inflict on a Chinaman that he is not willing to take a money compensation for; no sensibility to be ruffled, no honor to be outraged. I do not speak of individuals, but I speak of the race.

When I had occasion the other day to say that civilization owes nothing to the Chinese as a race in the way of invention, I thought it was received in rather a sneering way by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. He taunted me with the question who those people were who had invented the mariner's compass and gunpowder, two of the most potent agencies in civilization, and I denied that the Chinese were the inventors. I have had occasion to examine and discover, if possible, the foundations upon which rested the claim—by many believed in—that the Chinese had made these discoveries, and I found that the evidence was conclusive against any such claim. In the Intellectual Development of Europe, by Professor Draper, I find the following passages:

> The practical Arabs had not long been engaged in these fascinating but wild pursuits when results of very great importance began to appear. In a scientific point of view, the discovery of the strong acids laid the true foundation of chemistry; in a political point of view, the invention of gunpowder revolutionized the world. (Page 303.)

In the same book he says:

> They, that is the Arabs, also introduced inventions of a more ominous kind—gunpowder and artillery. The cannon they used appears to have been made of wrought-iron. But perhaps they more than compensated for these evil contrivances by the introduction of the mariner's compass. (Page 357.)

To turn to a still higher authority, I find in the Congressional Library volume 6 of the Journal of the North China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, in which Mr. W. F. Mayers, lately Chinese secretary to the British legation at Peking, and one of the most critical Chinese scholars that ever lived, treats of "the introduction and use of gunpowder and fire-arms among the Chinese." After noticing the Chinese authorities on the subject, Mr. Mayers sums up (page 82) as follows:

> As regards gunpowder, therefore, it is concluded that, firstly, no proof of its invention by the Chinese can be adduced; secondly, there is reason to believe that it may have been introduced from India or Central Asia about the fifth or sixth century of our era.

This is the result of an examination of Chinese authorities "performed with the utmost care" by a scholar whose recent death is a serious loss to the investigators of Chinese literature, and as the paper was first read in Shanghai and then published there in the midst of the chief critics of Chinese books, without any attempt at challenge, we are perfectly safe in adopting this as the real truth of the matter.

Now, this eminent scholar, Mr. Mayers, made a similar investigation as to the discovery of the mariner's compass, and came to the conclusion that that also the Chinese borrowed from the West. I regret to say that the volume containing Mr. Mayers's paper on that subject is not in the Congressional Library, but the fact is nevertheless as I have stated. A glance at the Encyclopædia Britannica, under the headings of Compass and Gunpowder, will similarly show that that publication does not countenance the idea that the Chinese were the inventors, although the authors wrote apparently in ignorance of Mr. Mayers's investigations. Therefore, I conclude that the Chinese never gave us these discoveries, notwithstanding the sneers that I have seen in some newspapers since, and the confident tone with which the Senator questioned me as to who else could have made them. And I would say further, that there is scarcely a single piece of machinery howsoever useful, howsoever ingenious, working in China to-day. The only enterprise the Chinese have shown in the way of railroads has been in tearing up the only railroad ever built in that country, a railroad built by foreigners and afterward bought by the Chinese authorities in order that they might tear it up.

I did not intend, Mr. President, to-day to make any consecutive remarks, therefore if what I have said or may say shall seem desultory, the reason will be that I rose only to criticise statements taken here and there from the speeches of others. The Senator [Mr. HOAR] says:

> The doctrine that free institutions are a monopoly of the favored races, the doctrine that oppressed people may sever their old allegiance at will but have no right to find a new one, that the bird may fly but may never light, is of quite recent origin.
